PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-SIXTH CONGRESS
FIRST SESSION.

SENATE.

MONDAY, July 28, 1919.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we feel the added weight of responsibility when we come to call upon Thy name, for Thou are committed to justice and to truth and to right. When we call upon Thy name we commit ourselves to that for which Thou dost stand in the universe. We pray Thee to help us to be true to our committal, to renew our covenant with God, to live each day in the light of Thy countenance and in harmony with Thy will, and discharge all the duties that Thou hast placed upon us in calling us to this office. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Friday last, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

S. 180. An act to incorporate Near East Relief;

S. 1378. An act to authorize the Central Railroad Co. of New Jersey to construct a bridge across the navigable waters of the Newark Bay, in the State of New Jersey;

H. R. 6342. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Pend Oreille River at the town of Usk, in the State of Washington;

H. R. 6434. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across Red River, about 2 miles above its confluence with the Washita River, near Preston, Grayson County, Tex.;

H. R. 6438. An act authorizing the counties of Aiken, S. C., and Richmond, Ga., to construct a bridge across the Savannah River at or near Augusta, Ga.;

H. R. 6450. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department, approved September 2, 1914,' as amended";

H. R. 6692. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the White River, at or near Forsyth, Mo.;

H. R. 6805. An act to authorize the county of Dougherty, State of Georgia, to construct a bridge across the Flint River, connecting Broad Street, in the city of Albany, said State and county, with the Isabella Road, said county and State;

H. R. 7775. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. R. 7657. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1361) further extending the time for the commencement and completion of the bridge or bridges authorized by an act entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the Dauphin Island Railway & Harbor Co., its successors or assigns, to construct and maintain a bridge or bridges, or viaducts, across the water between the mainland, at or near Cedar Point, and Dauphin Island, both Little and Big; also to dredge a channel from the deep waters of Mobile Bay into Dauphin Bay; also to construct and maintain docks and wharves along both Little and Big Dauphin Islands," approved June 18, 1912, as extended by an act approved June 30, 1916, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 687. An act for the relief of Frank Pinkley;

H. R. 753. An act for the relief of Susie Currier;

H. R. 2452. An act for the relief of Charles A. Carey;

H. R. 3844. An act for the relief of Della James;

H. R. 5228. An act granting the consent of the Congress to the city of Minneapolis, a municipal corporation, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River;

H. R. 5648. An act for the construction of a bridge across the Rainy River between Spooner, Minn., and Rainy River, Province of Ontario, Canada; and

H. R. 6222. An act to remove a certain tract of land in Cristobal, Canal Zone, from the operation and effect of the Executive order of the President of December 5, 1912, pursuant to the act of Congress of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat., chap. 390, p. 565).

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing that when the House adjourns on Saturday, the 2d day of August, it stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian, Tuesday, the 9th day of September, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 147) to ratify and confirm from and including July 1, 1919, obligations incurred pursuant to the terms of certain appropriations for the fiscal year 1920; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a petition of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association of Washington, D. C., praying for a substantial increase in the police force and fire department of the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SPENCER presented a memorial of sundry citizens of St. Joseph, Mo., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Kenyon-Kendrick bill providing for Federal control of the meat-packing industry, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of the executive board, district No. 14, United Mine Workers of America, of Pittsburg, Kans., praying for amnesty for political prisoners in Federal penitentiaries, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PAGE presented a memorial of the Holy Name Society, of Ludlow, Vt., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed league of nations treaty, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. KELLOGG presented a petition of sundry citizens of St. Cloud, Minn., praying for Government ownership and control of railroads, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1637) for the relief of Albert H. Campbell, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 109) thereon.

Mr. KELLOGG, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 2224) to incorporate the Recreation Association of America, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 110) thereon.

COMMISSIONED PERSONNEL OF THE ARMY.

Mr. WADSWORTH. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2622) to provide necessary commissioned personnel for the Army until June 30, 1920, and I submit a report (No. 111) thereon. I was instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs at a meeting held on Friday morning last to ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of this bill. I therefore make that request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Reserving the right to object, I merely ask the purpose——

Mr. NELSON. Let the bill be read for information.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That until June 30, 1920, the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to maintain such commissioned personnel in addition to officers of the permanent establishment as in his judgment may be necessary for the proper performance of the functions of the Military Establishment, and to retain at their temporary grade such officers of the Regular Army as he may deem necessary: Provided, That additional officers so maintained shall be selected so far as practicable from officers who served during the emergency and are applicants for appointment in the permanent establishment: Provided further, That after September 30, 1919, the total number of commissioned officers held in active service under this act shall at no time exceed 18,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I think it due the Senate that I give a very brief explanation of the situation. I think I am justified in saying that this bill is the inevitable logical outcome of the Army appropriation bill which was passed by Congress and signed by the President July 11.

Under that bill the commissioned and enlisted strength of the Army for the fiscal year 1919 and 1920 was regulated or fixed in effect by the appropriation in the bill for the pay of officers and enlisted men. The amount appropriated for pay of the Army was placed at such a figure as to compel the discharge from the Army of all emergency officers commissioned during the war, their discharge to be completed by September 30 next. At that time the Army will be reduced to the figure fixed in the national defense act, the law known as the Hay-Chamberlain law, that figure to be approximately 225,000 men and 11,000 Regular Army officers.

The situation created by the appropriation act can be illustrated by a very few figures which the War Department has supplied to the committee. We will take, for instance, the Construction Division of the Army. There are to-day 12 regular officers in the Construction Division and 682 emergency officers. When September 30 comes the 682 emergency officers must have been discharged, leaving only 12 officers to supervise the maintenance, operation, and repair of every Army post, every port of embarkation, every storage warehouse, every installation put up by the Army during the war or owned by the Army before we went into the war, throughout the entire United States, a task plainly impossible of performance by 12 officers.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Are there not officers in other branches of the service available for assignment to the performance of the work just referred to by the Senator?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; there are not, without still further robbing those other branches of the service. I will continue with a few more illustrations, although I do not——

Mr. NELSON. May I ask the Senator a question? Does this measure relate to such officers as are in control of such camps as Camp Humphreys, in Virginia?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It relates to all officers.

Mr. NELSON. Are they called construction officers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The men who built Camp Humphreys were officers of the Construction Division, and the men who keep in repair and maintain and operate the utilities of such camps are under the orders of officers of the Construction Division of the General Staff.

Mr. NELSON. At one time they had as many as 30,000 men, whom they called engineers, who devoted most of their time to building a concrete road from Alexandria to the camp. Now, is it the purpose to continue such work as that?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; this bill has nothing to do with road construction. It affects only the commissioned personnel of the Army for the rest of the fiscal year.

Mr. NELSON. We found another thing in connection with that camp. When men sought their discharge there as privates they were very reluctant to give them a discharge, and I got the impression, and I know others did, that they were anxious to retain as many privates as possible, in order that they could retain a large number of officers. The privates were needed to give color to the retention of the officers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This bill bears no relation whatever to that situation at Camp Humphreys.

In the Motor Transport Corps there are 96 regular officers and 2,528 emergency officers. The whole corps will be reduced September 30 to 96 commissioned officers, and that corps has charge of all the transportation of the Army other than rail transportation and water transportation; it supervises all the horse-drawn vehicles, all the motor trucks, and all the passenger automobiles.

In the Quartermaster Corps there are 214 regular officers and 4,393 emergency officers. All the emergency officers must go by September 30, if no measure of relief is secured. It will be utterly impossible for 214 quartermaster officers to continue the quartermaster work of the Army during this fiscal year at the scale at which it must be continued unless we are content to let property utterly perish and go without any care whatsoever.

In the Air Service there are 222 regular officers and 3,997 emergency officers. As I said in the Senate the other day, of the 222 regular officers very few are flyers.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me a further interruption?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. What assurance can the committee give us that the Quartermaster Department will dispose of all the surplus food they have now on hand left since the war? Are officers needed in large numbers for that purpose if they propose to hold the products and not dispose of them?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The committee has been assured upon several occasions that it is not the intention or desire of the War Department to hold back that food surplus.

Mr. NELSON. What assurance have we that they will dispose of those surplus food products and put them on the market so that the people of the United States can have the benefit of them?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can only tell the Senator from Minnesota what is being done now. I do not know what will be done a month from now or six months from now. The plan of the War Department as to food products, particularly with reference to vegetables, ham, and bacon, was to invite the municipalities of the country to take relatively large quantities of these goods and sell them in their local municipal markets.

Mr. NELSON. Now——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Just a moment, and I will complete my answer. Unfortunately a great many municipalities in the United States have no right under their charters to purchase and to sell food, and the number of municipalities who can do that officially is relatively small.

I will say to the Senator that an effort is being made here in the city of Washington to dispose of surpus foodstuffs sent here from the Army stores in Baltimore to be sold in the municipal market here. Some of those sales were made, I believe, last week, and they are yet to continue. This is the first attempt the Government has ever made to peddle surplus stuff by retail upon the market. That is all the information I can give the Senator on that point. It has no bearing whatever on this bill except that officers will be required to manage the business, because only a commissioned officer can carry financial responsibility for the Government in the Army.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me to make the remark that up to this time we have had all these reserve officers in the Quartermaster's Department, have we not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. And many more.

Mr. NELSON. And yet with all this number of reserve officers and the others, they have not been able to dispose of these food products up to this time. They have held them in chancery, as it were, for the benefit of the packers and others.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They have made several efforts to sell the goods and have been thus far not particularly succcessful.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. The wholesale grocers of the United States protest against dumping upon the market all those Army supplies.

Mr. NELSON. But the people of the United States, the consumers, are not protesting.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; they are not. May I make a further inquiry? Does the Senator have any information as to why the War Department is holding vast quantities of lumber at various points? At Camp Grant, Ill., there are 14,500,000 feet of lumber that would be available for building purposes, and there can be no purchase made of it. It is not properly stacked and is warping, and the excessive wet weather that has prevailed there is making it assume a condition where it will not be merchantable very much longer.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not answer the question. I know nothing of the lumber situation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that it is not only matters of food, but that various articles of merchandise are involved that will be a total loss to the Government unless used. The prices in the general market are at a figure where these surplus lines ought to be turned loose so as to reduce the price, if possible.

Mr. WADSWORTH. A good many instances could be recited of the deterioration of Government supplies which are standing exposed to the weather. Let me say to the Senator from Illinois there are 9,000 Army trucks at Aberdeen standing in the open air, exposed to the weather. The Chief of Staff told the Military Affairs Committee that they simply can not take care of this enormous surplus of supplies, such as trucks and food, unless Congress gives them the needed personnel with which to do it. Unless the present plan goes through, and it must go through under the Army appropriation bill, they simply will not have enough officers to do it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What does the Secretary of War say about this condition? Is he merely an ornamental figure of the War Department, or does he pay any attention to the condition to which the Senator refers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I assume, of course, the Secretary of War does pay attention to it, but I remind the Senator from Washington that I am not defending the War Department. I am stating some facts which confront the country as well as the War Department, and in stating those facts I do not defend the War Department.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield to me a moment further?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Will the practice continue under this proposed legislation of appointing a lot of civilian clerks and giving them commissions, making them majors and captains and lieutenants, who are performing no other duty than that of an ordinary civilian clerk? Will that practice continue under this legislation, or will it be ended?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; this legislation does not contemplate new commissions. It contemplates retaining in the service in a very much reduced number officers who are now in the service.

Mr. NELSON. Does it contemplate retaining civilian clerks with commissions?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Only those persons who are now commissioned officers. I can not tell the Senator or the Senate which officers are going to be retained. I can tell them the aggregate number that are authorized for retention in this bill. There will be approximately 8,000 emergency officers kept upon the pay roll for the rest of the present year, which, added to approximately 10,000 regular officers who hold their commissions in accordance with law, makes an aggregate of 18,000 officers for the United States Army for the rest of the fiscal year, as contrasted with 160,000 officers that the Army had on November 11, 1918.

The most serious situation is in the Medical Department. We now have 1,159 regular officers and 17,315 emergency officers in the Medical Corps. If some relief is not granted, the 17,315 surgeons in the Medical Corps, who are emergency officers, must all be discharged by September 30, leaving only 1,100 officers in the Medical Corps to take care of our wounded and operate all our hospitals. It will simply mean that two-thirds of the hospitals must be closed and the wounded sent to private institutions. We must keep some more officers. We can not afford to be confronted with any such state of affairs.

I took occasion to state when the Army appropriation bill passed the Senate under the conference report that the pay appropriation in the bill was so low that in three or four months, according to my judgment, a deficiency appropriation must be asked. It is now asked, in effect, and the reason for asking it has been made so clear to the Military Committee that its report on this bill was unanimous. This request is made, therefore, even earlier than I anticipated.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Will the chairman of the committee state if it is contemplated that any of the officers who are to be discharged under this order prior to September 30 will be accepted and received into the Regular Army?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It has nothing to do with the Regular Army.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Is it contemplated that any of them after receiving their discharge from the emergency corps shall very shortly threafter be taken into the Regular Army?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can only tell the Senator the situation with reference to the commissioned personnel under the national-defense act under which the figures must be reduced by September 30 in order to comply with the terms of the Army appropriation bill. There are approximately 11,000 regular officers under the terms of the national-defense act. There are about 1,500 vacancies existing to-day in the regular commissioned personnel which they are attempting to fill. They hope, of course, to fill them by selecting the best of the emergency officers who will consent to take the grade of second lieutenant, because the grades must be filled from the bottom. If the vacancies are filled the regular commissioned personnel will amount to about 11,000 men. That number is authorized by law to-day, and they want between 7,000 and 8,000 emergency officers authorized to be retained in the service merely to the end of this fiscal year; that is the purpose of this bill. It was made clear to the Military Committee that the Army would simply be a wreck in the management of these tremendous supplies, and the settlement of an enormous number of contracts. There are $2,000,000,000 worth of contracts unsettled.

The War Department estimates that 500 officers must serve on the boards adjusting these contracts, and a host of other things which I shall not take the time of the Senate in explaining unless some Senator requests me to do so.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, there are to-day 36,000 wounded soldiers who are being cared for by what we may call the temporary medical force of the Army. On September 30 next it is estimated that there will be 24,000 wounded soldiers to be cared for, without taking into consideration the ordinary number of sick and injured soldiers in the Regular Army, which at that time will amount to 225,000 men. The wounded soldiers referred to are the pathetic residuum of this war. If this bill does not pass, on September 30 those 24,000 wounded soldiers will have no medical attention, for on that date, under the Army bill as we have passed it, every one of the temporary medical officers must be discharged and will be out of the service.

The Medical Department comes to the committee and says that we are letting 17,000 officers go, while the minimum of our requirement is for 14,000 officers to remain.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is in addition to the Regulars.

Mr. SPENCER. And 619 vacancies in the regular service are to be filled. That is the minimum requirement of this bill.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from New York permit an inquiry?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will.

Mr. KING. We passed a bill recently authorizing the organization of a civilian commission, of which Mr. Hare was chairman, to make disposition of the surplus supplies of the War Department. I was wondering to what extent there had been turned over to him the surplus supplies, and if, when that was consummated, it would not relieve the Army of the duty of disposing of these funds and handling them and therefore not call for such a large number of officers as is contemplated by this bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me say to the Senator from Utah that no supplies are physically turned over to Mr. Hare's organization; the duty of selling them is turned over to his organization; but until they are sold the supplies are the property of the War Department and must be cared for by commissioned officers of the Army, who carry property accountability under the law. Mr. Hare's organization has nothing to do with the care or preservation of the property; the Army continues to care for it, to store it, to protect it, to transport it, and to do all, in a physical sense, that has to be done with it. All Mr. Hare does is to sell it. So Mr. Hare takes none of the burden away from the Army in caring for that property.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator from New York know what reason exists for the lack of celerity of disposition of these supplies by the War Department? Every day we read that millions of dollars worth of supplies are spoiling, and the deterioration is so great that they are becoming valueless and have to be thrown away. Did anything appear before the committee as an excuse for the delay in making sales of these surplus products?

Mr. WADSWORTH. We have had various explanations relating to specific products, but I can not say to the Senator from Utah that we have had a complete explanation of the whole situation given to us in such form that I can answer the question of the Senator from Utah. In some things they have done very well, and in other things, I think, they have done rather badly. There is no one answer that will cover the whole topic.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, this request of the War Department is imperative, and it seems to me it ought to be granted.

We have had 4,800,000 men under arms; we have had over 200,000 officers with those men; we have still over 700,000 men under arms or in the Army; and we can not possibly govern that Army as an organization and conduct the affairs of the Government with the few officers that are provided under the law as it now stands. The passage of this bill is absolutely imperative, according to the explanation made by the War Department; and it seems to me that nothing more would be needed to demonstrate that than to show how many officers we have had, to how few we are now reduced, and the condition of the supplies and munitions that are still on hand by the Government which must be taken care of.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KIRBY. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What is the exact number of additional officers which under this bill we shall save from those now in the service?

Mr. KIRBY. We shall retain about seven or eight thousand additional officers for one year; that is all that is estimated for.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. How large an Army would the department be able to officer with that additional number of officers?

Mr. KIRBY. It is only expected that they will be retained for one year.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I mean during the next year. Do not misunderstand me. I am intensely in favor of saving officers enough to handle an Army of 500,000 men for the next 12 months.

Mr. KIRBY. The Regular Army is to be cut down, as I understand, to 225,000 men and about 9,000 officers. The department must have at least seven or eight thousand additional officers in order to take care of conditions which now exist.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is not a question of finding additional officers, but of continuing emergency officers to the extent of about 8,000?

Mr. KIRBY. That is all. The bill merely provides for officers in addition to those who are in the Regular Army, as provided for in the last Army bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. May I ask the Senator from New York a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will this retention of a portion of these officers put us in some respect in better shape to enlarge the Army during the next 12 months? If we should need 500,000 men, would this increase furnish sufficient officers to take care of them?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It would not. This will give us officers enough to command an army of 225,000 or 235,000 plus the number of officers absolutely necessary to take care of the wounded and of the tremendous properties which were left over from the war. That is all.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. My only regret is that the committee has not gone further and saved for us officers enough so that we may be in a position quickly to organize an army of 500,000 men during the next 12 months.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, Senators ought to remember that it is comparatively easy to demobilize an army. We can discharge the men rapidly; we can discharge the officers rapidly, but it is exceedingly difficult to demobilize the supplies and the installations. Until those are demobilized we have got to maintain a commissioned personnel which is comparatively top-heavy, in a sense, in order to take care of those installations and those supplies. That is the purpose of this bill, and if something of this sort is not done it will simply mean that hundreds of millions of dollars worth of property belonging to the service will utterly perish and thousands of sick and wounded soldiers will go without medical care.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator from New York permit me to ask him another question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If we should need an army of 500,000 men during the next 12 months, where would we turn to get our officers to handle them quickly?

Mr. WADSWORTH. We should simply have to call for the officers who have beeen discharged to volunteer again and to come back into the service.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. After we have retired them, after they have gone back into business, after they have sought places, we should have to call them back into the service again instead of keeping them during a period of threatened disturbance.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If my recollection is correct, on November 11 last we had in the Army 160,000 commissioned officers, while under this bill we shall have but 18,000 officers, all told.

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Senator from New York yield for a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. SPENCER. Does the Senator remember the number of officers provided for in the Army appropriation bill which was passed by the Senate and went to conference?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The number of officers was not mentioned in the Army appropriation bill, but the pay appropriation really governed the number. As the appropriation was raised more officers could be retained, while as the appropriation was lowered more officers must be discharged. The best computation the committee can make after consultation with the Chief of Staff is to the effect that as the appropriation bill passed the Senate and went to conference it would have paid approximately 18,000 officers, just what the pending bill authorizes; in other words, if we have confidence in the estimates of the War Department, the Senate Military Affairs Committee and the Senate itself made a proper and accurate computation and passed a bill which was adequate to the needs of the service, no more and no less; but that bill was radically changed on the insistence of the House of Representatives.

Mr. NELSON. Then, Mr. President, if I understand the Senator correctly, the bill really provides officers for an Army of 400,000 men?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No.

Mr. NELSON. And when all these officers are secured there will have to be some privates for them to command.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This bill provides officers for an Army of 225,000 men and additional officers assigned solely and entirely to the duty of taking care for the next fiscal year of an enormous amount of property the Government owns, which has nothing to do with the size of the Army, but which is left over from the war with Germany.

Mr. NELSON. Can not that work be done by privates and noncommissioned officers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not under the law.

Mr. NELSON. Could we not enact a law allowing privates and noncommissioned officers to do that work instead of high-salaried commissioned officers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the Senator is willing that Congress shall enact a statute conferring upon a private soldier responsibility and accountability for Government property, that can be done; but under the law to-day only a commissioned officer is authorized to handle Government property. He is held accountable for it, and has authority over the enlisted men in caring for it. It would be utterly unfair to saddle the responsibility upon an enlisted man for the care of Government property when he would have no authority over anybody.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask the Senator a question. He just made the statement that this bill is to provide for a certain number of officers for the coming fiscal year. Does not the Senator mean the present fiscal year?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I meant the present fiscal year.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AFFIDAVITS IN MILITARY TRIALS.

Mr. KING. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 2236) relating to affidavits required by the act entitled "An act to extend protection to the civil rights of members of the Military and Naval Establishments of the United States engaged in the present war."

Mr. LENROOT. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Utah. It is a very important bill, and I am sure will require no debate.

Mr. KING. I shall be glad to join in the request of the Senator from Wisconsin. The report of the committee is unanimous.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. The amendments were, on page 1, line 9, after the word "war," to insert "(40 Stat. L., p. 440)"; and on page 2, line 4, after the word "thereof" and the period, to insert "Any person who shall make or use any affidavit as aforesaid, knowing it to be false, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punishable by imprisonment not to exceed one year or by a fine not to exceed $1,000, or both, in the discretion of the court," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That where any judgment has been entered since March 8, 1918, in any action or proceeding commenced in any court where there was a failure to file in such action the affidavits required by section 200 of article 2 of the act approved March 8, 1918, entitled "An act to extend protection to the civil rights of members of the Military and Naval Establishments of the United States engaged in the present war" (40 Stat. L., p. 440), the plaintiff may file an affidavit stating that the defendant or defendants, in default in such judgments, are not at the time of such filing and were not at the time of the entry of such judgment in the naval or military service of the United States, and upon the filing of such affidavit the court may enter an order that such judgment shall stand and be effective as of the date of the entry thereof. Any person who shall make or use such an affidavit as aforesaid knowing it to be false shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punishable by imprisonment not to exceed one year or by fine not to exceed $1,000, or both, in the discretion of the court.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRINTED MATTER IN FOREIGN LANGUAGES.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a few days ago the bill (S. 2524) to prohibit the transmission through the mails of matter printed, written, or multigraphed in any foreign language under certain conditions and circumstances was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. This was done inadvertently. It belongs to the Judiciary Committee, which committee is considering two other bills of like character. I ask that the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. KIRBY:

A bill (S. 2636) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920," approved July 9, 1919; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A bill (S. 2637) to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provisions for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SHERMAN:

A bill (S. 2638) concerning suits at law against the District of Columbia for injuries to persons and property; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SMITH of Georgia:

A bill (S. 2639) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Mrs. Elizabeth Braddy, of Gibson, Glascock County, Ga., the sum of $601.75, the value of 145 war-savings stamps which were destroyed by fire on the 26th day of May, 1918; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2640) for the relief of Ethel Williams; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 2641) for the relief of the legal representative of W. H. Mills, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. THOMAS:

A bill (S. 2642) granting a pension to Schuyler C. Morgan; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MOSES:

A bill (S. 2643) to donate a captured German cannon to the city of Somersworth, N. H.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STANLEY:

A bill (S. 2644) granting an increase of pension to George W. Tarter (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 2645) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Griffin (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 2646) for the relief of Mary E. Bingham;

A bill (S. 2647) for the relief of Isaac V. Mohn;

A bill (S. 2648) for the relief of James Russell (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 2649) for the relief of Gust Mihleder, formerly a second lieutenant of Infantry, United States Army; and

A bill (S. 2650) for the relief of the survivors of McLean's Pennsylvania Regiment and their widows and children; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 2651) to determine what obligation, if any, exists under the treaty with Spain of 1819 to relieve the estate of Richard W. Meade, deceased; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

A bill (S. 2652) granting an increase of pension to Margaret M. Conard;

A bill (S. 2653) granting a pension to Annie Mary Turner;

A bill (S. 2654) granting a pension to Frank F. Snyder;

A bill (S. 2655) granting a pension to Denny Ross Griffith;

A bill (S. 2656) granting an increase of pension to Marie G. Harding;

A bill (S. 2657) granting a pension to William R. Miller;

A bill (S. 2658) granting a pension to Charles G. Meyer;

A bill (S. 2659) granting a pension to Leonardo S. Twesten;

A bill (S. 2660) granting an increase of pension to James M. P. Brookens (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 2661) granting pensions to soldiers confined in so-called Confederate prisons;

A bill (S. 2662) granting an increase of pension to John R. Devlin;

A bill (S. 2663) to increase the pensions of the blind who served in the War with Mexico or the Civil War; and

A bill (S. 2664) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Hartman (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 2665) for the relief of Prof. William H. H. Hart, principal of the Hart Farm School and Junior Republic for Dependent Children, to establish Hart University and to provide for its maintenance and support (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SHIELDS:

A bill (S. 2666) for the relief of the estate of Eli Pettyjohn (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. NORRIS:

A bill (S. 2667) providing for the sale and distribution of the surplus merchandise, commodities, and foodstuffs in the possession of the War Department, or such merchandise, commodities, and foodstuffs as may hereafter be declared surplus by the War Department; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) to permit the payment of obligations entered into by the War Department prior to July 11, 1919; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STANLEY:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 79) exempting the Dixie Highway from the prohibition contained in the act approved July 11, 1919; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BREWERS' PROPAGANDA.

Mr. NELSON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 136), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the report of the Subcommittee on the Judiciary, who were directed to report the result of their investigation relating to charges made against the United States Brewers' Association and allied interests, be printed as a Senate document.

BREWING, GERMAN, AND BOLSHEVIK PROPAGANDA.

Mr. NELSON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 137), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the report and hearings entitled "Brewing and liquor interests and German and Bolshevik propaganda" held before the Committee on the Judiciary in the Sixty-fifth Congress be printed as a Senate document and that 300 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary.

PROPOSED TREATY AMENDMENT RELATIVE TO LOANS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer a Senate resolution and ask to have it read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The resolution (S. Res. 139) was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That the treaty of peace with Germany as contained in Document 49, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session, be, and is hereby amended by adding thereto article 441, to read as follows:

"In any loans or money advanced by the United States of America on the credit of any of the allied or associated powers in the war with Germany that no deduction, credit, or set-off shall be allowed because of any bond, obligation, or other evidence of indebtedness issued by the Confederate States of America or by any State acknowledging its allegiance to or associated with such confederacy or any bond, obligation, or other evidence of indebtedness issued by any State, county, district, municipality, or other branch of such State or State government which has heretofore been and still is remaining unpaid, whether the same be held by any such foreign government or by any citizen or subject thereof."

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, allow me to say a word. A number of British investors in repudiated, uncollected, and unsalable bonds recently had an annual meeting, and I notice very great activity among those gentlemen in London right now. It is that which led to the introduction of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

THE OIL SITUATION.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I submit a Senate resolution requesting the Federal Trade Commission to investigate and report to the Senate on the market prices of fuel oil, especially on the Pacific coast. I ask that the resolution be read, and then I shall ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 138) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission is hereby requested to investigate and report to the Senate the causes of recent advances in the market price in the United States, especially on the Pacific coast, of fuel, oil, kerosene, gasoline, and other petroleum products; and in reporting the foregoing the said commission is requested to take into consideration and report the sources of oil supply for the United States; and particularly for the Pacific coast; the annual production of the same for several years last past, with especial reference to the years 1914 to 1919, inclusive; the corporate or other agencies by which the business of oil production, oil refining, oil distribution, and oil marketing, including petroleum, and all its products, is and has been conducted in the past and at the present time, with special reference to the particular period mentioned above, and to these activities on the Pacific coast, and to the Standard Oil Co. of California, the Union Oil Co., and the General Petroleum Co., and other companies engaged in this business on the Pacific coast; and to report to the Senate what, if any, combinations in restraint of trade between those engaged in this business, or unfair competition on the part of any of these or other agencies engaged in said business have existed during the said period, or do exist at the present time, and if such combinations, restraint, or unfair competition have existed or do exist, what, if any, effect the same have had upon the market price of fuel oil, gasoline, and other petroleum products especially on the Pacific coast and especially with reference to the price charged to the ultimate consumer of the same. The said commission is also requested to report to the Senate any suggestions or recommendations which may be agreed upon by the said commission relative to the removal of such combinations in restraint of trade, or unfair competition if the same exists, or other suggestions or recommendations relative to the cost, market price, production, distribution, and sale to the Government or to private consumers of fuel oil, gasoline, kerosene, or other petroleum products.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Washington whether his resolution embraces a report upon the profits that are being made by these companies in the sale of oil in the western part of the country? I should like to have verified or disproved some of the charges that have been made to me concerning the profit which these companies have been making in the sale of oil. I simply ask whether that is included in the resolution of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is, Mr. President; and in that connection I desire to submit and ask that there be printed as a portion of my remarks a very carefully prepared statement on the subject that the Senator from Iowa has just mentioned, and the various phases of the subject covered by this resolution, prepared by Mr. Philip D. Macbride, of Seattle, Wash.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

FUEL OIL CONSUMERS' COMMITTEE OF THE PACIFIC COAST,
July 24, 1919.

Hon. MILES POINDEXTER,
United States Senator,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: A situation has arisen on the Pacific coast, on account of the outrageous price of fuel oil, that is all but unbearable. In an effort to reach the situation the consumers have made a complaint to the Seattle Chamber of Commerce and that body has appointed a committee with Mr. Philip D. Macbride as chairman to investigate the matter and to do whatever can be done to remedy the situation.

I herewith appeal to you in the name of this committee for your powerful assistance in this matter. I hand you a copy of an outline of the fuel-oil situation on the Pacific coast, which has been prepared by Mr. Macbride, after much careful investigation. This statement or outline is reliable. I am quite sure, after looking it over, you will see that our people are entitled to relief. This is a matter that affects very nearly every citizen, for it will be seen from the inclosed statement that the cost of fuel oil enters directly as an important factor in the high cost of living.

On behalf of the consumers of fuel oil on the Pacific coast I assure you of the greatest appreciation of any efforts you may feel justified to put forth to remedy this situation.

Very respectfully, yours,

JAMES WESLEY BRYAN,
Special representative Fuel Oil Consumers'
Committee of the Pacific coast.

OUTLINE OF FUEL OIL SITUATION ON THE PACIFIC COAST IN GENERAL.

PACIFIC COAST OIL SUPPLY.

There are produced in the United States about 360,000,000 barrels of crude petroleum per annum. Of this, California produces, roughly, 100,000,000. Oil from this State is the only supply available to Pacific coast consumers. Mexican oil, the cheap oil of the Gulf ports and the eastern coast, is not offered on the Pacific coast. This is due to two reasons—the great distance to be covered in the transportation of the oil in tankers and the control by interested California producers and allied interests of the Mexican fields and methods of transportation.

Fuel oil is the usual residuum of crude oil after removal by refining of gasoline, kerosene, distillate, and many other valuable commodities. California is the leading State in number of refineries and amount of oil refined, probably due to the fact that over two-thirds of all California crude oil is refinable, i. e., containing a high enough percentage of gasoline to warrant refining. (Report of State Mineralogist of California, 1919.)

The value of the refining products of a barrel of California crude is difficult to determine owing to the wide variation in gravity and quality of oil. However, a conservative estimate is $2 for these commodities, with about two-thirds of a barrel of fuel oil remaining.

USES OF FUEL OIL.

Most of the western railways use oil for fuel. Uncle Sam's warships, the Shipping Corporation Fleet, and nearly all steam vessels, large and small, depend on oil. Bakers use it to bake bread, factories use it, hospitals and hotels are heated with it. In all these different uses substitution of other fuel is well-nigh impossible. In some localities coal can not be obtained. Plants have been equipped for oil; modern ships are constructed to be oil burners; to change would involve ruinous expense.

Prices.

THAT SOARING MOVEMENT.

In 1915 the price of crude oil at the well was around 40 cents; of fuel oil at Los Angeles, 60 cents. To-day the base price of crude has soared to $1.23, and fuel oil at Los Angeles brings $1.60—a threefold raise in four years—and the end is not in sight. Only a few weeks ago (June 10) the higher grades of crude were advanced from 1 cent to 5 cents per barrel.

COST OF PRODUCTION.

It is very difficult to fix a uniform cost of production for petroleum. A generous Providence furnished the raw product, and a beneficent Government has allowed its easy exploitation. Chance enters into the cost of production to a large extent. Depth of well, character of ground, quantity and quality of oil obtained, all these and many other elements vary infinitely.

By tabulating the reports of various operating and dividend-paying companies the State mineralogist has arrived at the following average operating costs per barrel: In the highest-cost district of the State, 38 cents; in the lowest-cost district of the State, 23 cents.

HOW PRICES ARE FIXED.

They are set by the Standard Oil Co. of California. This corporation posts a scale of prices for crude oil at the well, and this scale is adopted by the other refining companies. This same corporation sets the price for which it will sell refined products and fuel oil, and forthwith the other four marketing companies (all smaller) are of the same mind and adopt the Standard's prices as theirs.

Only a few months ago the United States Navy called for bids for furnishing fuel oil for warships stationed on the Pacific coast. Tenders were made by the three companies who market fuel oil, the Union Oil Co., the General Petroleum Co., and the Standard Oil Co. of California. The requirements were for 4,000,000 barrels at Los Angeles, 3,000,000 at Puget Sound, and 2,500,000 at Honolulu. The tenders were all the same—$1.60 a barrel in California, $1.85 at Seattle, and $2.15 at Honolulu. The United States Shipping Board had the same experience. In both cases all bids were rejected. In this connection the following editorial from the Chicago American is interesting as to the situation on the eastern coast:

"Whoever does the bookkeeping, pricing, and planning for the big Standard Oil Co. must have frequent headaches to keep it all going.

"Last Monday the Government announced that it wanted to buy 34,000,000 barrels of oil to be used this coming year.

"The Government wanted some oil delivered in New York City. On that the Standard Oil Co. of New York did not bid. The Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey offered oil to the Government in New York at 98 cents per barrel, plus 7 cents for delivery.

"In Boston it was the Standard Oil Co. of New York that offered oil to the Government at $1.73 per barrel.

"In Philadelphia the Atlantic Refining Co., a branch of the Standard Oil, bid $1.36½ per barrel, plus delivery charges.

"In Baltimore the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey offered oil at 98 cents, and made the bid at Norfolk, Va.

"Don't get dizzy.

"The Standard Oil Co. of Louisiana offered the Government oil at 80 cents a barrel in New Orleans. And at Tampico, Mexico, the place whence all this oil comes, the Standard Oil offered to supply the Government at 44½ cents per barrel.

"The bids were made after taking from the oil by superior scientific process the gasoline and various by-products. From a barrel containing something over 40 gallons of oil are taken about 7 gallons of gasoline, which sells to the public at varying prices. In one State, where there is a fight on, it sells for 8 cents now; in New York it sells for 26 cents. In New York the company gets $1.82 for the gasoline in a barrel of oil, other sums for the other by-products, then sells the barrel of residue, which contains its full value, as ship fuel, and is safer, at the interesting prices quoted above.

"When you read that the Government buys oil in New York for 98 cents a barrel and pays in Philadelphia, where the freight from Tampico is cheaper, $1.36½ a barrel from the same company, it makes you realize how it happens that the Standard Oil stock is worth more after the trust was "busted up" by the Government lawsuit than it was before."

WHY PRICES FIXED BY STANDARD OIL.

The Standard Oil Co. of California produces 22 per cent of the entire output of the State, or two and one-half times as much as the next largest producer. With seven other corporations the Standard Oil produces over 70 per cent of the entire output. (Report of State Mineralogist of California, 1919.) But production is only the beginning. The producer is helpless without market, and the Standard Oil is the market. By virtue of its controlling position in regard to pipe lines, refineries, storage tanks, and tank steamers and by reason of the widespread character and great financial power of the organization of which it is a part, it sells to a wider market and can, if the directing forces desire, undersell any ambitious competitor. (The Standard Oil Co. of California has 1,000 miles of main-trunk pipe line, enormous storage facilities for oil, three immense refineries with a total capacity twice as great as any other company, and a large fleet of tank steamers. Its sales department has 358 substations, 152 service stations, and 1,123 motor vehicles.) For the past three years a policy of harmony with producers and other oil companies appears to have prevailed. Prior to 1916 the Union Oil Co. was an aggressive opponent and business was eagerly sought. Apparently the increasing demand for crude due to the European war led the leaders of both corporations to the opinion that more money could be made by harmony and higher prices. This move benefited the small producers; in fact, everybody except the general public. The entry of the United States into the war gave the opportunity for a complete welding of interests. The director of oil (Mr. Mark L. Requa), himself a California oil man, turned the direction of the California industry very largely over to the petroleum war-service committee (Mr. Bedford's statement, Oil Age for June), a voluntary body made up of representatives of the Standard Oil, Union Oil, General Petroleum, Associated Oil, and Shell Companies. Affairs under their guidance moved so very smoothly that with the close of the war the general arrangement is to be continued under an organization known as the American Petroleum Institute. (Mr. Requa's address to the National Petroleum Congress, in Petroleum Record, April, 1919.) All Government regulation ended May 15, 1919. Mr. Requa becomes vice president of the Sinclair Oil Co. The Pacific coast director, Mr. Folsom, resigned some months ago to become assistant to the president of the General Petroleum Co.

PRICES NOT GOVERNED BY SUPPLY AND DEMAND.

The reason constantly advanced by oil men for the enormous increase in price is that due to war conditions demand exceeds supply, and a graphic chart shows the declining stocks of California oil and corresponding increase in price. While the war continued the stocks of oil were heavily drawn upon and decreased rapidly, but the turn came last September, and ever since stocks above ground have been increasing rapidly. By April California stocks of crude oil exceeded those of April, 1918, by over 2,000,000 barrels. (Mining and Oil Bulletin, Los Angeles Chamber of Mines, June.) In May the stock was increased by over 800,000 barrels. For the United States as a whole it may be noted that stocks increased over 2,000,000 barrels in March and one and a half million in April.

PROFITS.

By whom obtained: The total capitalization of all (California) oil companies is $361,566,769. Dividends paid during the year amounted to 7.6 per cent on this entire amount.

"The capitalization of the smaller and purely producing companies is $161,425,494 and the 1918 dividend rate was 5 per cent. The added profits attending marketing and refining are therefore considerable." (Report of State Mineralogist of California, 1919.)

Producing oil companies	144
Marketing companies	11
Total	155
Dividends, 1918:
Producing oil companies	$7,520,854
Marketing companies	19,984,138
Total	27,504,992

(Report State Mineralogist, 1919. Note that these figures are based on capitalization and dividends, not investment and profits. Of the amount shown as dividends for marketing companies, the Standard Oil Co. of California alone paid out approximately $12,500,000.)

PROFITS OF STANDARD OIL CO. OF CALIFORNIA.

The investment.

Without going back to the inception of the company, it is sufficient to say that after a 46 per cent dividend in 1909 the capital stock was, in 1912, increased from $25,000,000 to $50,000,000. In 1914 it was again increased to $100,000,000, the additional shares being paid for by two stock dividends, one of 50 per cent in 1916 and one of 33⅓ per cent on the then outstanding stock in 1917, the effect of these two stock dividends being to double the issued capital stock without cash investment on the part of the stockholders. On December 31, 1918, the company's surplus account was over $15,000,000, representing additional profits not distributed as dividends. In addition to the stock dividends, the company has regularly paid in quarterly installments a cash dividend amounting to 10 per cent per annum on outstanding stock, increasing in amount as the stock was increased by stock dividends. In 1918 and 1919 additional special 2½ per cent dividends had been declared, bringing the rates for these years to 12½ per cent per annum.

1918 REPORT (S. O. OF CAL.).

"The earnings for 1918, after deducting all operating and marketing expenses, were $44,276,521.82. From this there was written off for depreciation $3,895,757.69, for depletion $6,022,227.65, a total of $9,917,985.34. There was also deducted for estimated income and excess-profits tax $19,405,462.10, leaving a net profit carried to surplus of $14,953,037.38, or about 12.73 per cent of the capital and surplus as of December 31, 1918." (Annual statement to stockholders for 1918, S. O. Co. of Cal.)

Before analyzing this statement, compare it with the previous annual statements of profits and depreciation:

Profit.

1915	12,974,655
1916	21,263,520
1917	30,377,073
1918	44,276,521

Depreciation.

1915	3,444,709
1916	3,658,216
1917	5,897,326
1918	9,917,985

DEPRECIATION AND DEPLETION.

Nineteen hundred and eighteen apparently was a bad year for these items. They amount to nearly double what they did for 1917 and nearly four times as much as in 1914. Based on the only depreciable assets of the trial balance, it appears that for a single year more than 11 per cent of the plant account and inventories other than petroleum products was charged off. At this rate refineries, steel ships, pipe lines, office buildings, lands, and all would be depreciated and depleted to nothing in less than 10 years. Possibly the higher rates of the excess and war-profits tax had something to do with charging off this $10,000,000.

CORPORATION TAX.

For 1918 the Standard Oil Co. of California estimated its tax at $19,500,000. What will they pay for 1919? Assuming that their business is the same as 1918 (and there is every prospect that it will be better), and allowing that the same liberal allowance is made for depletion and depreciation, the tax for 1919 will amount to approximately $8,000,000. In other words, the lower rates in 1919 as provided by the revenue act of 1918 will reduce the tax of the Standard Oil Co. of California $11,000,000 below that of last year.

SUMMARIZING.

The prices for 1919 remain at the highest level of 1918. The first half of the year indicates that the volume of business will equal or exceed 1918. (Petroleum Record, July, 1919.) The earnings shown by the half-year's statement of the Union Oil Co. of California show an increase of operating profits over 1918. (Referred to later.) The Standard Oil Co. of California made a profit of $44,000,000 for 1918. Aside from depletion and depreciation, the only deduction from this for 1919 will be an approximate tax of $8,000,000, leaving $36,000,000 clear profits for 1919. Allowing $6,000,000 for depletion and depreciation, there still remains a net return of $30,000,000 on a capital stock of $100,000,000. But be it remembered that $50,000,000 of that capital is stock dividend declared since 1916, which is in addition to regular cash dividends averaging about 17 per cent on the $50,000,000 capital of 1916. So that if 1919 net profits are honestly computed they will, after all deductions, exceed 60 per cent on the investment.

The Union Oil Co. of California is the second largest oil company in the State. It has an outstanding capital stock of $43,571,500, and has paid a total of $43,889,183.50 in dividends. It pays at present 10 per cent per annum. Its surplus and operating reserve approximates $22,800,000.

The report of its directors, July 1, 1919, gives an opportunity for comparison with 1918 operation. It shows:

Profit:
Six months, 1918	$6,450,000
Six months, 1919	7,900,000
Increase	1,450,000

This is an increase for 1919 of 22 per cent.

STOCK-MARKET PROFITS.

The following is a quotation from the Petroleum Record for June:

"Amalgamated Oil sold on the Los Angeles Exchange on January 2, 1918, for $45 per share; on January 2, 1919, for $59 per share; and on May 14, 1919, the day this was written, for $75 per share. Associated Oil quotations for the corresponding dates show $57, $70, and $89.37½, respectively. General Petroleum shows $86.25, $133, and $166. Union Oil for the same three dates is quoted $115.50, $119.50, and $144.

"Stocks bought on the opening day of 1918 and held until May 14, 1919, would have yielded the investor the following profit per share: Amalgamated, $33; Associated, $36.25; General Petroleum, $79.75; Union, $28.50."

The Standard Oil of California is not listed on any exchange. (Quotations on the New York curb for Standard Oil Co. of California indicate a value of $285 per share; in other words, that in spite of stock dividends, the earning power of the shares is believed by the owners to be worth nearly three times the par value. July 25, $316.)

CONCLUSION.

BLIGHTING EFFECT.

The high price of fuel oil affects all classes of the public. It is a basic commodity. As an illustration, a large area adjacent to Puget Sound is water locked. Tens of thousands of people are dependent upon boat transportation. Fuel oil is by far the largest single item of operating cost of a steam vessel. By reason of its excessive price rates have been raised and service has been cut down. For water-locked communities nothing has a more blighting effect than deterioration of boat service. The marketing of their produce, their intercourse with the world, their very existence, is dependent upon the maintenance of service. Some routes are being abandoned; all are seriously affected.

Other illustrations: The United States is being called upon to meet railroad deficits. A considerable part of the deficits of the western railroads is caused by the exorbitant price of oil. Congress appropriates funds for the Navy. Part of these funds go to pay the enormous profits of the Standard Oil Co. of California and the other oil monopolists.

Wherever fuel is used, whether in transportation, manufacturing, or heating, it is a basic element in the cost of production, and is ultimately paid by the public.

THE REMEDY.

An investigation should be ordered by Congress into the price of fuel oil on the Pacific coast. In the opinion of the writer, the prevailing price should be cut in two. A price of 80 cents a barrel at Los Angeles would save the Pacific coast consumers (Government and private) more than $50,000,000 a year. True, it would lop eighteen or twenty million dollars off the annual profits of the Standard Oil Co. of California, but there would still remain some $25,000,000 of profits to this company, which would permit an ample allowance for depreciation and income tax and leave a handsome return on the investment.

Respectfully submitted.

PHILIP D. MACBRIDE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. THOMAS. I think the resolution had better go over until to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under the rule and be printed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to say just a word in connection with this resolution which goes over until to-morrow.

In 1915 the price of crude oil at the well on the Pacific coast was about 40 cents. The price of fuel oil at Los Angeles was 60 cents. To-day the base price of crude oil has soared to $1.23, and fuel oil at Los Angeles brings $1.60—a threefold increase in four years—and I am informed that instead of there being any prospect of a reduction of prices the best information obtainable is that there will be further increases of prices.

The manner in which this affects the people of the Pacific coast—particularly the Pacific coast, because the prices there are so very much higher than they are in any other part of the country—is illustrated by even a superficial consideration of the uses to which the people of the Pacific coast, on account of the great amount of petroleum which is produced on that coast, have come to make of fuel oil in the conduct of their industries.

In the first place, of course, it affects water transportation. A very large part of the population of the State of Washington is absolutely dependent upon water transportation. They have no means of travel, no means of shipment of supplies, except by water. They are water locked. They depend upon a great number of small boat lines which operate on Puget Sound and other waterways of the western part of the State. Nearly all of the boats engaged in water transportation on those lines use oil for fuel, and a doubling and trebling of the price of oil has so affected these lines that they have been compelled in many instances, on account of the losses which have ensued, to suspend operation of a part of their boats, with the result that transportation is interfered with and in some places cut off.

Fuel oil is also used by bakeries and by a great many factories; it is used in hospitals, and the hotels are heated by it; and the facilities of the hospitals and bakeries and hotels, as well as of the boats, are so arranged that they can not substitute coal or any other fuel for fuel oil.

Now, Mr. President, just one other word.

It is usually said that the extraordinary increase in the price of fuel oil on the Pacific coast is due to the war; that it is due to the operation of the law of supply and demand; that the supply of fuel oil is menaced by reason of the extraordinary consumption of the war; that the demand has increased, and consequently that prices go up.

The answer to that is that the war has been over now for eight months; that the stocks of oil that were accumulated for war purposes are still on hand to a large extent; that the consumption of it has decreased; and that in the application of the law of supply and demand the prices to the consumer should go down. But instead of that they continue to go up. The prices which consumers are required to pay for fuel oil, instead of being lower than they were at the date of the armistice, are higher. It is an anomalous situation. It is one which affects the most fundamental and vital conditions of industry and of life itself in a great section of the country.

The statement which I have asked to be printed in the RECORD, carefully prepared and quite comprehensive and covering the different phases of this subject, also points out the enormous difference in the price of fuel oil on the Pacific coast and the price on the Atlantic coast, although the State of California produces approximately 100,000,000 of the 360,000,000 barrels annual production of petroleum in the United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. Is it not true that the railroads in the western part of the country very largely use fuel oil in the movement of their trains?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; that is true. I had the pleasure in the latter part of April last of riding on a locomotive across the Siskiyou Mountains, in northern California, going over the border line between the States of Oregon and California in a double-header train, and had occasion to see the actual use of fuel oil in the engines. I learned, in talking with the engineer, that practically all of the engines of that road are now equipped for the use of fuel oil, and, of course, without radical changes, they are not available for the use of any other fuel.

Mr. CUMMINS. I know, as a result of inquiry or examination, that a very large, and, as I think, unnecessary, expense is being entailed upon the railroads of the country every day on account of the extraordinary and indefensible price of oil in California. I hope the investigation proposed by the Senator from Washington will be made as rapidly as possible, because sooner or later we must find some remedy for the extraordinary situation now confronting us.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no objection whatever to the adoption of this resolution, except that as it is phrased it would seem to require the duplication of an inquiry which, I understand, has not yet been completed in regard to the conditions in the Middle West; and, of course, the Senator does not want that any more than I do. I am perfectly willing that the resolution shall be taken up this morning if it can be so phrased as to prevent this duplication of work, for which there can be, I think, no necessity.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is the inquiry in regard to conditions in the Middle West to which the Senator refers being conducted by the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I assume, Mr. President, that, as a matter of fact and as a matter of necessity, almost, that being the same body to which this matter is referred, they will not duplicate their work. I scarcely see how they could. If they have obtained information in the investigation to which the Senator from Colorado refers, they will use that, in so far as it is applicable, in making their report on this subject.

Mr. THOMAS. That is possible; but it would also have the effect of postponing a report on that situation, for which a number of us are waiting.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I would not want it to have that effect, and I do not think it necessarily would have that effect.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not know that it would; but I merely wanted the Senator to understand that my objection was not based upon the merits of his resolution but was merely for the purpose of ascertaining that fact in the interim.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am very glad to know that.

Just one word further, Mr. President: This information which has been submitted to me contains the statement that while the war continued the stocks of oil were heavily drawn upon and decreased rapidly; but the turn came last September, and ever since stocks above ground have been increasing rapidly. In April California stocks of crude oil exceeded those of April, 1918, by over 2,000,000 barrels. In May stocks were increased by over 800,000 barrels. For the United States as a whole it may be noted that stocks increased over 2,000,000 barrels in March and 1,500,000 barrels in April. This condition of affairs, it seems to me, unanswerably demonstrates that there is no reason in the supposed law of supply and demand for the continued increase of the already exorbitant prices charged for this necessary product.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if he has investigated the activities of foreign Governments in acquiring through various agencies the oil of the world, and whether he thinks on that account there may possibly be a disposition on the part of the American oil companies to protect themselves in advance by raising the price?

I do not for a moment desire to intimate that the excess cost of oil, as explained by the Senator, should be tolerated if there is any way to avoid it, either by representations made through the Trade Commission or by legislation, because oil has come to mean the industrial life of the country; and it is the difference between success and failure in enterprise and between success and failure of the merchant marine and of the Navy itself—the control of oil by one nationality or another.

As I understand the resolution will come up to-morrow for discussion, I shall be glad to submit some information at that time. In the meantime, I desire to say that I sympathize with the Senator in his desire to regulate the price, notwithstanding that oil is, par excellence, a California product. I should like now to put in the RECORD a statement published in the New York World of last Saturday, showing the extraordinary profits of the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey—information given to the country for the first time by its application last week to list on the New York Stock Exchange its securities, which theretofore had been dealt in only on the curb, for the very purpose, it is explained, of concealing information concerning the profits and business of the company. It seems that the Standard Oil Co. is now giving publicity to its affairs, which reveals to us for the first time in authentic form the extraordinary profits of that corporation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

NEW JERSEY STANDARD OIL PUTS $100,000,000 STOCK ON MARKET—ISSUE OF PREFERRED SHARES FIRST EVER TO BE ISSUED AND FIRST TO BE LISTED FOR TRADING ON THE STOCK EXCHANGE—PUBLISHED BALANCE SHEET ALSO BREAKS PRECEDENT—SHOWS EARNINGS FOR SEVEN YEARS $454,589,139 AND DIVIDENDS OF $177,008,940—ASSETS AND RESERVES NOW EXCEED BILLION.

"The Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey yesterday issued an announcement which surprised Wall Street by smashing Standard Oil tradition in these three respects:

"1. It made known the issue of $100,000,000 of 7 per cent preferred stock to carry on the 'development campaign' launched by the company after the armistice was signed. This is the first public offering ever made by any Standard Oil Co.

"2. The new securities will be listed on the Stock Exchange, becoming the first Standard Oil stock to be listed there. Hitherto Standard Oil stock has been traded on the curb in order to keep the earnings secret.

"3. The new policy of publicity was adopted and a complete balance sheet and statement of earnings and dividends for the seven years between 1912 and 1918, inclusive, which had been sent to shareholders, was made public. It was the first statement of its kind ever offered to the public by any Standard Oil Co., and it was the first of its kind that even shareholders had ever seen.

ASSETS AND RESERVE EXCEED BILLION.

"Figures were given to the public in a statement by A. C. Bedford, chairman of the board of the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, which is the most powerful of the 33 companies of the old trust.

"Mr. Bedford's statement contained a consolidated balance sheet as of December 31, 1918, showing total assets of $691,316,969. The balance sheet shows assets of net value of $562,543,025. Nominal liabilities were shown as follows: Capital stock, $98,338,300; reserve for annuities, $492,315; surplus, including reserve for working capital, $463,712,409.

"Earnings, Federal taxes, and dividends since the Standard Oil dissolution suits were also given. The total earnings for seven years 1912–1918 were $454,589,139.89; the Federal taxes paid and accrued, $72,712,720.05; the earnings after deducting these taxes, $381,876,419.84; the dividends, $177,008,940.

"The company's new campaign plans to push its products to the uttermost quarters of the world. There is a world-wide demand for petroleum and its products for fuel purposes, as well as for use in internal-combustion engines, which have reached a great stage of development in all civilized countries. The supply is scarcely sufficient, notwithstanding the great development of the Wyoming and Caddo fields and the recent discovery of rich oil-producing lands in Texas. Standard Oil proposes to carry the American product to every land where oil has become a necessity.

"Mr. Bedford's statement gave the reasons for and purposes of the new issue as follows:

"'The policy of the company has been to finance its growth from current earnings, but in view of conditions now existing and having regard to the present necessity of the diversion of a considerable proportion of these earnings to excess-profits and other war taxes, your directors feel that it is advisable to increase the capital employed in its business by the amount of the proposed issue of preferred stock.

"'It is the intention to utilize this new capital in the financing of the further development of the company's equipment and resources, which plans are already under way. These include measures for insuring the continuity of a substantial proportion of this company's future supply of crude oil, as well as maintaining a cash reserve against contingencies, the active prosecution of the company's program of enlarging its refining facilities, the expansion of its transportation systems, and the extension of its distributing plants.'

ASSETS MULTIPLY, CAPITAL FIXED.

"A statement from the company describing the new capitalization plan was issued yesterday, as follows:

"'While it has been known that the assets of the parent of all the Standard Oil organizations have been steadily multiplying through the reinvestment annually of surplus earnings, the capital has remained at a more or less nominal and arbitrary figure at which it was left when the Supreme Court issued its dissolution decree. This amount was $98,338,300, which is all in common stock. During the life of the company there has been no further capitalization of assets, but their growth and present value is generally understood to be fairly accurately measured by the price of $740, which is the present market for the shares.

"'The issue of $100,000,000 just announced is in the form of a 7 per cent preferred cumulative nonvoting security. As this stock is being offered to shareholders at par, it is doubtful if much of the stock will escape from the 8,000 existing shareholders of the New Jersey corporation.

SECURED BY $562,000,000.

"'The balance sheet issued in connection with the notice to the shareholders—the first exhibit of the kind that they have ever seen—shows that although the company's assets are entered at cost, less depreciation, that is, below the price at which they were constructed or acquired many years ago and not at present-day values, they amount to $562,000,000, upon which the $100,000,000 of preferred stock which the holders of the common will receive at par is a first charge.

"'A statement of net earnings and taxes by years since the Standard Oil dissolution suit shows that, with the exception of the special distribution in 1913 of $40 per share made from repayments by former subsidiaries of cash which had previously been advanced by the parent company, the dividends paid during the years 1913 to 1918, inclusive, have been uniform, the surplus earnings having been reinvested and employed in the business.

"'The last published balance sheet of the Standard Oil Co. (New Jersey) appeared at the time of the Government suit, and showed net assets as of December 31, 1906, including the 33 companies afterwards distributed, of $359,400,193.31. The balance sheet for December 31, 1918, issued in connection with the current financing, shows net assets of $562,543,025.81. This is interesting in that it indicates the growth of the company and that the assets of to-day are over $200,000,000, or nearly 60 per cent in excess of those shown in 1906, prior to the distribution.

"'The present issue has been underwritten by J. P. Morgan & Co.'

STANDARD OIL NET EARNINGS $381,876,419 IN SEVEN YEARS.

"The following statement, issued yesterday by the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, shows earnings and dividends for the years 1912–1918, inclusive, with income and war taxes deducted from the earnings of the year on which they were calculated:

Year.	Earnings before deducting Federal taxes.	Federal taxes paid and accrued.	Earnings after deducting Federal taxes.	Dividends paid.
1912	$35,397,717.37	$289,830.33	$35,107,887.04	$19,667,660.00
1913	46,168,955.06	477,085.57	45,691,869.49	[1] 59,002,980.00
1914	31,798,849.62	341,215.45	31,457,634.17	19,667,660.00
1915	61,396,922.73	619,679.39	60,777,243.34	19,667,660.00
1916	72,426,692.36	1,634,633.19	70,792,059.17	19,667,660.00
1917	105,785,858.91	25,019,916.97	80,765,941.94	19,667,660.00
1918	101,614,143.84	[2] 44,330,359.15	57,283,784.69	19,667,660.00

[1] Under "Dividends paid" for the year 1913 there is included the distribution of $40 per share made from repayments by former subsidiaries of cash which had previously been advanced by this company.
[2] 1918 taxes subject to adjustment.

"By adding the year-by-year earnings given out in the above table the World finds that the total earnings for the seven years covered by the statement were $454,589,139.89.

"The Federal taxes, paid and accrued, for the seven years were $72,712,720.05.

"The earnings for the seven years, after deducting Federal taxes, were $381,876,419.84.

"The dividends paid in the seven years amounted to $177,008,940."

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the statement which I have already submitted to the Senate contains detailed information of the profits of the companies engaged in the production and distribution and marketing of petroleum and its products on the Pacific coast, and bears out the statement which the Senator from California has just made. In that connection I may say that these profits amount to nearly double what they did for 1917, nearly four times as much as in 1914, and that if they are continued in 1919 at the same proportion and ratio indicated by that portion of the year which is already past they will amount to in the neighborhood of 60 per cent upon the investment of these companies.

Most interesting and enlightening data is given as to the very large dividends paid upon capital stock by these companies, and then very large dividends distributed among the stockholders under the name of cash dividends; then in addition to that the doubling and the quadrupling of the capital stock of the company, without any additional investment, by stock dividends among the stockholders; all of which is shown here and it is I think reliably stated after a very careful investigation. In fact, this report which I have submitted is a very complete report in itself.

The chief benefit it seems to me of obtaining action upon the resolution which I have introduced would be the official confirmation of these facts which I am satisfied exist, and which are fully set out in this statement, to get verification for them. There is sufficient information here. I have no doubt that it is reliable, but the country and the Congress would feel much more sure of their ground in any proceedings they may care to take in this matter if the data is verified and officially confirmed. That is the purpose and object of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution goes over under objection.

HOUSE RECESS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the House adjourns on Saturday, the 2d day of August, it stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian, Tuesday, the 9th day of September.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate concur in the resolution of the House.

The resolution was concurred in.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

H. R. 687. An act for the relief of Frank Pinkley;

H. R. 753. An act for the relief of Susie Currier;

H. R. 2452. An act for the relief of Charles A. Carey; and

H. R. 3844. An act for the relief of Della James.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 5228. An act granting the consent of the Congress to the city of Minneapolis, a municipal corporation, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River;

H. R. 5648. An act for the construction of a bridge across the Rainy River between Spooner, Minn., and Rainy River, Province of Ontario, Canada;

H. R. 6222. An act to remove a certain tract of land in Cristobal, Canal Zone, from the operation and effect of the Executive order of the President of December 5, 1912, pursuant to the act of Congress of August 24, 1912 (37 Stats., ch. 390, p. 565);

H. R. 6342. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Pend Oreille River at the town of Usk, in the State of Washington;

H. R. 6434. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across Red River, about 2 miles above its confluence with the Washita River, near Preston, Grayson County, Tex.;

H. R. 6438. An act authorizing the counties of Aiken, S. C., and Richmond, Ga., to construct a bridge across the Savannah River at or near Augusta, Ga.;

H. R. 6450. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department,' approved September 2, 1914,' as amended";

H. R. 6692. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the White River at or near Forsyth, Mo.; and

H. R. 6805. An act to authorize the county of Dougherty, State of Georgia, to construct a bridge across the Flint River, connecting Broad Street, in the city of Albany, said State and county, with the Isabella Road, said county and State.

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

H. R. 7775. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. R. 7657. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

THE CALENDAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. WALSH of Montana obtained the floor.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Montana be permitted to continue his speech until its conclusion and that we then proceed under Rule VIII with the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

ARTICLE 10 OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I shall not take it amiss at all to be interrupted at any time during the course of my remarks by any Senator who desires to have further information concerning my views upon any feature of the question considered or who may care to test the argument by applying it to a given state of facts. I shall expect, however, a return of the courtesy to this extent, that no effort be made to inject the speech of another Senator into the midst of my own.

ARTICLE 10.

Article 10 of the covenant for a league of nations, being the introductory chapter of the treaty of peace signed at Versailles, June 28, continues to draw a large share of the criticism to which the proposal for such a league is being subjected. Following promptly upon the publication of the original draft in the month of February last, the feature adverted to was made the subject of a most vehement philippic by the senior Senator from Iowa, who insisted, assuming the success of the plan proposed to preserve peace, that the world was to be "put in a strait-jacket," and the political existence and territorial boundaries and possessions of the nations now dividing the earth among themselves confirmed forever, a project as monstrous as it is chimerical. Lest it be thought by any that his position was misunderstood or misconstrued, the following terse sentences are quoted from his address:

We agree absolutely, positively, unreservedly to preserve the territorial independence and the political independence of all the nations parties to the league and for all time to come.

We are solemnly asked to guarantee that the boundaries of nations, as they now exist or as they will exist when the peace conference has redrawn the map of Europe, Asia, Africa, and Oceanica, shall remain without change forever.

The same idea was expressed, perhaps less directly but not less clearly, by the junior Senator from Pennsylvania in his speech of June 17, 1919, supporting his resolution looking to a separation, for the purpose of consideration, of Chapter 1 of the treaty from the remainder thereof, in which he said:

I ask simply that we be given a breathing pause after we finish our battles before we obligate ourselves to maintain for all time the territorial status quo which is to be set up by this treaty.

Before proceeding further it will be well to have in mind just what the nations of the earth are asked to subscribe to in this much-discussed article of the covenant. It reads as follows:

The members of the league undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league. In case of any such aggression, or in case of any threat or danger of such aggression, the council shall advise upon the means by which this obligation shall be fulfilled.

I repeat what has been asserted over and over, and admitted by silence in the face of the assertion, that it is only as against "external aggression" that any member binds itself to preserve "the territorial integrity and existing political independence" of any other. There is no mistaking the meaning of the words "external aggression" as used in the article quoted. Beyond cavil and beyond controversy their use limits our obligation to the case of war by one nation against another, to a war waged or threatened from outside the bounds of the nation imperiled, as distinguished from an internal uprising or insurrection of the citizens or subjects of the nation against which the warlike movement is directed.

It was clearly intended by the language used to preserve the sacred right of revolution asserted in the Declaration of Independence, and no attempt has been made by anyone, upon analysis to assign any other significance to it. Indeed, neither of the two eminent Senators mentioned has ventured to call the attention of his colleagues or the country to the qualifying expression "external aggression" in the article they so fiercely denounce or to harmonize its use with the import they assign to the article. I find it difficult to understand this silence on their part. It would seem as though one occupying the position of either, who for the enlightenment of his countrymen on a matter of such transcendent importance to them assumes to act as the expositor of this great covenant, would either offer some explanation accounting for the use of the language in question consistent with the interpretation he gives to the Article, or would hasten to assure them that he had spoken unreflectingly and receded from the position he had taken in reference to it.

It is a perfectly gratuitous assumption that the political map of the world can never undergo any change unless nations are permitted to wage aggressive warfare against each other. All South and Central America revolted and the several independent Governments thereof established themselves within the territory forming part of the vast domain of Spain, except in the case of Brazil, which asserted and maintained its independence against Portugal, of whose territory it formed a part. Were the league in existence when these great changes were occurring, neither Spain nor Portugal could have called upon any other nation signatory to the treaty for aid in keeping her colonies in subjection. Article 10 would have offered no obstacle whatever to the transformation had the league been operating when the events transpired in consequence of which a whole continent and more was changed from colonial dependencies to independent Republics.

Florida passed, by peaceful purchase, from the dominion of Spain to become an integral part of the United States. Louisiana, out of which have been carved ten great States of the Union, was not acquired by conquest, but by purchase. Alaska, once a part of the great Russian Empire, became United States territory in like manner. A portion of Arizona was purchased of Mexico; the Danish West Indian Islands only recently became a part of our possessions by purchase; and the Canal Zone was transferred to us by the Republic of Panama upon various considerations, including our guaranty to preserve its independence and territorial integrity as against all external aggression. The Sandwich Islands were annexed on the solicitation of the people thereof, at least that portion which controlled its Government. The German Empire was constituted by the voluntary act of the various Kingdoms and principalities that fell under the domination of Bismarck and his royal master through the events leading up to and culminating in the Franco-Prussian War. After centuries of vain effort by England to subjugate Scotland, the two countries coalesced through the act of union of the Scottish Parliament in 1607, James then being the sovereign of both Kingdoms. Sweden and Norway, becoming united through the Napoleonic wars, peaceably separated in 1905. The colonial possessions of European countries in various parts of the world were acquired largely through discovery and colonization, not by conquest.

It is conceded, of course, that changes in territorial bounds or the obliteration of nations through foreign aggression, if the league shall prove a success, can not occur. The very purpose of entering into it is to prevent any nation from robbing its neighbor. But changes will continue to be wrought, as they have been in the past, by peaceful negotiation between independent nations as well as by internal commotion or revolution, both in the form of the government and in the jurisdiction over which any particular nation exercises its sway. Siberia may separate itself from Russia and proclaim and maintain its independence; Ireland or Egypt may revolt and a new republic arise administered from the banks of the Liffey or the Nile. Article 10 constitutes no obstacle, nor would any nation by reason of any obligation incurred by virtue of it be required to lend any aid whatever to Russia in the one case or to Great Britain in the other. It is against external aggression only that our country is asked to bind itself to extend aid. The covenant in that respect is to all intents and purposes like the special treaty into which we are asked to enter with France, by which we promise to go to her aid should Germany make war upon her, only the French treaty specifically mentions certain acts preparatory or threatening in character upon the part of Germany upon the occurrence of which our active assistance may be called for.

It is in preserving the right of revolution that the covenant is distinguished from the Holy Alliance of which so much has been heard in this debate. Whatever may have been its pious phrases or whatever professions of altruistic purposes may have been voiced by it, the world knows now, as indeed it knew at the time the convention was entered into, that the real object of those whose work it was was to preserve the monarchic institutions and despotic rule that characterized the time against the rising tide of democracy, swelled by the success of our revolution, and suppressed but not subdued by the collapse of the effort to establish a republic in France.

But it is asserted, though Article 10 does not obligate one member to aid another in suppressing an insurrection of its own citizens or subjects, yet should a revolution among such be set on foot and another country should come to the aid of the revolutionists and with them make war upon the nation thus assailed, it would be the duty of all other members of the league to join it in repelling the aggressor, thus uniting its forces with the rebellious nationals of the imperiled State, and in this connection it is asserted that were such a convention in force when the American colonies of Great Britain revolted we should never have gained our independence.

It might be said in this connection that the twentieth century is not the eighteenth. A scheme to preserve the peace of the world built upon the important fact that the great nations of the earth are self-governing democracies obviously would not fit in with conditions as they existed when the stupid and obstinate George III and his ministers, kindred spirits, drove the people of the Colonies into rebellion.

If present-day notions prevalent in England of government in her colonies beyond the seas were dominant in the eighteenth century, there probably never would have been any American Revolution. But I deny that but for the aid of France we should never have achieved independence. It was in the year before our alliance with that country that Chatham said in the House of Lords:

I know that the conquest of English America is an impossibility. You can not—I venture to say it—you can not conquer America. You may swell every expense and every effort still more extravagantly; pile and accumulate every assistance you can buy or borrow; traffic and barter with every pitiful German prince that sells and sends his subjects to the shambles of a foreign prince; your efforts are forever vain and impotent.

And two years before, in another speech before that august body, he adopted the language of a friend familiar with America, who said to him that—

You might destroy their towns and cut them off, perhaps, from the superfluities, perhaps the conveniences, of life; but that they were prepared to despise your power and would not lament their loss while they have their woods and their liberty.

Lecky, the historian of England in the eighteenth century, says:

To any statesman who looked upon the question without passion and without illusion it must have appeared evident that if the English Colonies resolved to sever themselves from the British Empire it would be impossible to prevent them.

Incidentally it may be remarked that under the league of nations it would have been impossible for England to have employed mercenary Hessians to reduce the colonies, 30,000 of whom were sent here. It is not improbable that but for their aid the war would have been over before the alliance with France was negotiated. This desperate resort of the King and his ministers was resolved upon only because there was a complete absence of alacrity and enthusiasm in England in enlisting for the war, and an offer to take Irish Catholics, until now excluded, into the army yielded nothing. Moreover, we must not deceive ourselves into the belief that France was actuated by an exalted sentiment of sympathy with our oppressed people engaged in a noble and arduous struggle for liberty. In the announcement to the commissioners of the King's determination to recognize the new State, it was expressly declared that the French Government entered into the new relation with the infant Republic from no purely disinterested motives in favor of the Americans, but on the ground that it was manifestly to the interest of France that the power of England be diminished by the separation of the colonies. It will be remembered that it was only 15 years before that the great territorial possessions of France in the New World were wrested from her by Great Britain and the colonies of the former in hither India passed in like manner to her rival.

I have no disposition to minimize the invaluable aid we had from France in the War for Independence nor to abate one jot or tittle from the just claim she has upon our gratitude because of it. Undoubtedly the successful termination of the struggle was hastened by her participation in it. The comments indulged in concerning her joining us in that war were made, first, to indicate how difficult it is to conceive of a league of nations in operation in the world of that day, ruled, as it was, not by self-governing democracies, but by intriguing monarchs exercising autocratic power and dominated by the idea of conquest, and, second, to emphasize the fact that the history of the world affords few examples of a nation, from wholly disinterested motives, from a genuine sympathy with the oppressed and in a holy love of liberty, coming to the aid of revolutionists striving to establish their independence.

The intervention of the United States in behalf of the Cuban insurrectos was proclaimed by our orators at the time as being unique in that regard, and yet we came out of it with Porto Rico and the Philippines to balance the cost of the war, and Cuba, which it was long feared might some time become a base of military operations against our country, bearing such a relation to us as to remove largely that peril. On the other hand, ambitious monarchs with imperialistic aims have often excused their invasion of the territory of friendly neighbors upon the pretext that they came to assist rebellious subjects struggling against oppression to regain their ancient rights and liberties. History is so replete with the story of wars thus precipitated as to make it unnecessary to particularize. In many instances the uprising was fomented from abroad in order to afford an excuse for intervention that culminated in conquest.

It can not be denied that theoretically Article 10 may prove an obstacle to the establishment of the independence of subject people by denying to them the cooperation of sympathetic nations. Admonished by the lessons of history, the obstacle must be regarded as negligible. I am disposed to accord those opponents of the league of nations who assail the covenant on that ground, every just credit to which they may be entitled for devotion to the cause of liberty the world over, and I entertain no doubt that in most instances it is a genuine and deep-seated sentiment. It is a trait of the American character in which we all share, though some parade it less than others. But it is worthy of remark that those who most stoutly assail this feature of the covenant avow with equal vehemence and insistence that we must "keep out of the quarrels of Europe." In one and the same breath they assert, in effect, that if Ireland should rise in revolt against the tyranny of Great Britain we would violate the most sacred precepts of the fathers by participating in the strife, even in aid of the Irish; yet they declaim against Article 10 because by it we agree not to do so. They assert that if Germany should undertake 10 years hence, or 6 months hence, for that matter, to reduce Poland, or if Prussia, Russia, and Austria should arrange a new partition of the young republic and proceed to execute it by force of arms, we violate Washington's sage counsel by intervening with other members of the league to prevent it, yet they profess themselves the only true friends of struggling freemen.

The senior Senator from Idaho enjoys the good fortune of being regarded as the champion of Irish independence, and yet at every opportunity he protests, as he did no later than Friday last, that the United States should never under any circumstances interpose in any European controversy—that is, as he expressed it, should "stay out of European affairs."

It is not difficult to discern in the discussions in relation to Article 10 a studied effort, usually insidious, but not infrequently direct, to arouse the prejudices of our citizens of Irish birth or descent against the league. "Take the case of Ireland purely for the purpose of illustration," say these shrewd disputants. "Suppose Ireland were to rise in rebellion and some other country were to come to her aid, and with her jointly make war upon England, would not the United States then be obliged to go to the aid of the British Empire?"

Before entering upon the line of thought opened up by this inquiry, propounded, in substance, recently by the junior Senator from Washington, whose opposition to the league is, like that of the Senator from Idaho, fundamental and irreconcilable, I indulge in some reflections concerning the sentiments of the people of the United States toward the people of Ireland in their efforts, extending through the centuries, to relieve themselves of an offensive alien government. In this connection I venture to assert, with the very highest respect and even affection for the two Members who uttered them, that there is little concurrence in the hearts of the American people in the strictures lately uttered on this floor on the action of the Senate in expressing sympathy with the aspirations of the Irish for a government of their own choice. I do not agree that there was either impertinence or impropriety in the expression, for reasons to which I shall advert. It will be profitable to both this country and Great Britain, in their relations to each other, if the latter can be made to understand how deep-seated on this continent is the hope feebly expressed in the resolution. It is a disservice to her as well as to the United States to encourage the belief that the resolution reflects only the sentiments of a fraction of the American people, or that it is confined to those of Irish birth or blood, or the irreconcilables among them, or that the resolution represents only a competition among contending political parties for the "Irish vote" and has no other significance.

The sympathy of the people of this country, as stated, goes out spontaneously to every submerged nationality aspiring to an independent life. But there are abundant reasons why that sympathy is particularly keen in the case of the Irish. It is not alone that there are in this country at least 20,000,000 of Irish birth or Irish ancestry, whose desire as American citizens to preserve peace between the United States and the British Empire is forever at war with the feeling engendered by the story of the impartial historian of British misrule in Ireland and barbarous oppression of the Irish. The feeling of kinship dates back to the days of our own struggle for independence. The very fight that was being waged here culminating in the break was at the time in progress in Ireland. It had its parliament as each of the American Colonies had its legislature or assembly. British statesmen asserted the right of the Parliament of Great Britain to tax Ireland and generally to regulate its affairs exactly as they contended it had the right to impose whatever burdens it thought fit upon the American Colonies. The right thus asserted had been exercised so freely and harshly as to be grievously repressive of Irish industry and to drive the so-called Scotch-Irish in great numbers to America, while the penal laws, which Montesquieu declared "could have been made only by devils and should be registered only in hell," caused their Catholic brethren to seek the same asylum. Swift, Flood, and Grattan had successively led Irish opinion in protest against the same usurpations with reference to Ireland of which the American patriots complained. Franklin visited Dublin on the eve of the outbreak, before independence was seriously contemplated, to confer with Irish leaders over common wrongs. The Continental Congress, assembled speedily after the engagement at Lexington, on July 28, 1775, adopted an address to the people of Ireland in justification of the course of the Colonies, in which their official representatives said:

Accept our most grateful acknowledgments for the friendly disposition you have always shown toward us. We know that you are not without your grievances. We sympathize with you in your distress * * * and we acknowledge, with pleasure and gratitude, that your nation has produced patriots, who have nobly distinguished themselves in the cause of humanity and America.

The struggle against the pretensions of the British Parliament to "legislate in all cases whatsoever" throughout the Empire went on contemporaneously in Ireland and in America, each being mutually helpful to the other. Beset by enemies at home and abroad, Spain having recently become a participant in the war, the English Parliament, by an act passed in 1782, recognized, in effect, Grattan's contention "that his most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords and commons of Ireland, are the only power competent to enact laws to bind Ireland." The negotiations for peace with America were even then pending, and Greene says that—

The grant of independence to the one great dependency [Ireland] made it easier to recognize the freedom of the other [America].

The substantial independence of Ireland thus gained was of short duration, however. In the year 1800, during the ministry of the younger Pitt, the Irish Parliament, in which, it may be remarked, no Roman Catholic was eligible to membership or permitted to sit, upon the solicitation of the British ministry passed the so-called Act of Union, by which it ceased to exist and the power to legislate for Ireland was transferred to the Parliament sitting in London. The historian last referred to—a standard English writer, bear in mind—tells us that the assent of the perfidious Irish representatives was "bought with a million in money and with a liberal distribution of pensions and peerages," and he adds that "base and shameless as were such means, Pitt may fairly plead that they were the only means by which the bill for the union could have been passed." From that day to this the agitation has gone on to undo the work thus consummated. O'Connell, whose transcendent genius Wendell Phillips disclosed to America, devoted his life to the repeal of the Act of Union. Twenty years after his death the movement, now come to be known as the cause of Home Rule, came under the direction of Isaac Butt, and then of Parnell and his successors. In 1885 Gladstone forfeited the premiership on the defeat in the Commons of his first home-rule bill. He returned, however, and secured the approval by the popular branch of Parliament of the second home-rule bill in 1893, which was, however, thrown out by the Lords by a vote of 419 to 41.

The opposition of the aristocracy of England being inveterate, notwithstanding the cause had the approval of the masses, it became necessary to re-form the English constitution so as to deprive the House of Lords of its power of veto. This was accomplished in 1911 when an act was approved providing that if a bill should be passed by the Commons in three successive sessions it should become a law without the concurrence of the Lords. Thereupon a home-rule bill was three times passed, being rejected by the Lords on its presentation to them by a vote of 326 to 69, the tedious proceedings being prolonged until the eve of the Great War.

Meanwhile the ultimate effective passage of the bill being assured, its antagonists in Ulster, the northern Province of Ireland, under the leadership of Sir Edward Carson, began preparing to resist by force of arms the institution of the new government. Guns and ammunition were with scarcely any attempt at concealment imported from Germany and "volunteers" were drilled for the approaching conflict. When the nationalists, to meet this situation, at which the Government winked, did a little gun running on their own account, a number were ruthlessly shot down by the soldiery. Sir John French and other officers holding high command in the army exacted a promise from the ministry that they should not be called upon to coerce Ulster, and when the vacillating ministers endeavored to withdraw their agreement he resigned. The storm in Europe having broken, the home-rule bill was suspended for a year, or the duration of the war. Carson was rewarded for his treason by being made attorney general and French for his insubordination by being assigned to a major command on the Continent. In desperation the Irish people have resolved to make no further appeal to the British Parliament, or send representatives to it, but to set up a government of their own, to yield obedience to no other but upon compulsion, and to appeal to the judgment of mankind to sustain them in their resistance to a Government that supinely—I almost said pusillanimously—permits itself to be overawed by a fraction of one of the four Provinces of the island, and that hangs one class of its citizens for deeds that bring rewards to another. In this resolve there is substantial unanimity, as disclosed by recent elections, save among the Protestants of Ulster, whose forbears were planted there to insure the permanency of English rule, and who, it may be remarked, constitute little more than a majority of the population of that Province—900,000, approximately, as against 700,000 Roman Catholics, who make up three-fourths of the total population of the island, numbering about 4,000,000.

In this recital of facts of contemporary history I do not rely upon any partisan chronicler. "I tell you that which you yourselves do know," or which you can ascertain readily from any of the ordinary works of reference.

Why should not the American Senate, in the exasperating state of affairs briefly reviewed, express its sympathy with the aspirations of the people of Ireland in a struggle so intimately associated with that through which our independence was achieved? This sentiment is no recent growth. It is

* * * no sapling, chance-sown by the fountain
Blooming at Beltane, in winter to fade.

At the climax of the agitation carried on by O'Connell for the Repeal of the Act of Union in 1843, monster meetings, indicative of popular accord, were held in the principal cities of the United States, at which addresses were made by many of the leading statesmen of the day. The common conviction and hope of the people of this country were voiced by President Tyler, who said:

I am the decided friend of the repeal of the Legislative Union between Great Britain and Ireland. I ardently and anxiously hope that it may take place, and I have the utmost confidence that Ireland will have her own parliament in her own capital in a very short time. On this great question I am no half-way man.

We hastened to express to them our sympathy when we were fellow sufferers and felt in need of their moral support in our resistance to alien rule. Why should we not now express the hope that is general, if not universal, in this country that they may soon realize their hope of a government of their own choice? We have earned the right to speak at least with the frankness of a friend to Great Britain, remembering that but two short years ago her representatives were here, virtually confessing defeat in the war and frantically appealing to us to hasten into the fray, lest all should be lost before our aid could be made effective.

We have earned the right to say to her that her treatment of Ireland is a constant menace to the amity we are desirous of preserving unimpaired between the two countries.

There is not a controversy that arises between them, however trivial in fact, the seriousness of which is not magnified by reason of the irritating factor of Ireland's wrongs. Some day an inconsequential blaze may be fanned into a conflagration. Should any dispute with Britain ever arise upon which the people of the United States are otherwise nearly evenly divided, it is scarcely disputable that our citizens of Irish blood would be found massed against a peaceful settlement, not because they are willing to involve this country in the horrors of another world war with the sole object of securing independence for Ireland, but because they would approach the consideration of the question from the standpoint of American interest and honor, with an inherited prejudice against Britain, which, unfortunately, recent action and inaction touching Ireland have done little to eradicate.

The present controversy over the treaty and the covenant, and particularly Article 10 thereof, is illustrative of the idea I attempt to elucidate. The only element in this country among whom the opponents of the league have met with any marked success in their efforts to discredit it is the Irish, with whom, it is evidently believed, and not without reason, that it would be effective to charge that British statesmen had a hand in preparing the covenant, and played no unimportant part in devising the scheme submitted for our approval, as a part of the treaty.

There are individual opponents of the league, many of them; but no particular class of our citizens is arrayed against it except the Irish, many of whom, including men of the most conservative habits of thought, of high character, and distinguished ability, whose services throughout the war have been of inestimable value, are bitter against the entire work of the Peace Congress, which gave freedom to practically every submerged nation of Europe except the Irish. The thoughtful recognize that the people thus favored occupied territory which belonged to the subjugated nations—enemy territory of which the congress was obliged to make such disposition as would most certainly assure the future peace of the world, having in mind that we had encouraged rebellion in those parts and incited their people to set up independent governments, the more speedily to bring the conflict to a successful close. The nations assembled at Versailles were all interested in organizing the liberated peoples into buffer States. They could say to Germany and to Austria, "Sign here." They could not say so to Great Britain. She had not been conquered. Moreover, no nation, save our own, appeared to have even a sympathetic interest in Ireland. Notwithstanding these considerations, even the conservative class mentioned are not happy over the outcome.

I join in the assertion that there is no people and no nation to which the principle of self-determination is more distinctly applicable than to the Irish people and Ireland. It is refreshing to note that the peril in which our relations to Great Britain stand from the cause to which I have adverted is being recognized by her statesmen and publicists.

In a recent address Gen. Smuts said that the most pressing of all questions before the Empire is the Irish question, and he added:

> It has become a chronic wound whose septic effects are spreading to our whole system, and through its influence on America is beginning to poison our most vital foreign relations. * * * Unless it is settled on the great principles which form the basis of this Empire, this Empire must cease to exist.

In one of a series of letters recently appearing in the London Times, reproduced in American journals, advocating the immediate grant of dominion home rule to Ireland, is this significant comment:

> At the center of the Empire is the weakness of the Irish quarrel. It is felt at its farthest confines; it hampers our foreign policy; it is an open breach for our enemies. The British people can not afford to wait. A disease which restricts action can not afford to wait.

If we have no duty in the premises we may with entire propriety say to Great Britain that we are looking to her promptly to apply the principle of self-determination, announced by President Wilson and indorsed by her in her hour of extremity, to Ireland.

Having said thus much, I return to the inquiry of the Senator from Washington. "How about Ireland? If its people should rise in rebellion and some other nation should come to their assistance and with them make war upon England, would not the United States be obligated to aid in repelling the attack?" Undoubtedly. That is the plain requirement of Article 10. But if Ireland should attempt to establish her independence against Great Britain by force of arms, what country other than the United States is likely to go to the aid of the former? Germany? She is reduced to military impotence, and we believe we have made it impossible for her to make headway for at least a century against either France or Great Britain. France? Plainly she is not and has not been at any time for over a century a match for Britain, whose fast ally she now is. Russia? When she was a power in Europe and the rivalry of the two nations over territory in Asia gave rise to the bitterness expressed by Kipling in the poem of the bear who walks like a man, she prudently avoided an open conflict with England—at least since the Crimean War.

But let us be guided by the lessons of history. Spain joined forces with the Irish revolutionists in 1603, and yet Ireland did not secure her independence. France under Louis XIV came to their aid in 1688, but, though the Irish gained undying fame under Sarsfield, independence was not achieved. France again sent aid to the revolutionists of 1798, but the effort of that year was a failure. The Napoleonic wars rocked Britain to its base, and Pitt suicided in dismay at what he conceived to be the approaching dissolution of the Empire, but the occasion afforded Ireland no opportunity of which she was able successfully to avail herself. And now we have witnessed Britain threatened by the aspirations of the mad militarists of Germany, the most powerful organization for the purposes of war that ever turned the glad earth into a very hell, but the occasion brought only additional martyrdom to Irish patriots.

I had a letter from a gentleman residing in Detroit, a very respectful letter, condemning my attitude on the league of nations, because, he said, if Ireland should rise in revolt and Spain were to come to her aid we should be obliged to make war on Spain. It is difficult for one to reason with a mind which conceives of Spain engaging in any such enterprise. The people of Spain have not, in modern times at least, exhibited that deep devotion to the cause of liberty in the abstract or attachment to their Hibernian brethren which might warrant imaginative minds in supposing that they might be willing to commit national suicide by waging war on Great Britain to secure the independence of Ireland.

No single nation, save the United States, is to-day in the same class as a military power with the British Empire. There must be a union of powers against her to afford the opportunity which it is said Article 10 denies to Ireland; in other words, another world war. Are Senators prepared to leave open for fomentation another world war on the chance of a change in the government of Ireland? Let me remind them again that in two world wars by which the earth was devastated since we became a Nation, Irish independence was not attained. What reason is there for believing that the next will be more fortunate in that respect?

I am a Senator of the United States, a representative of the people of Montana. If I am satisfied, as I am, that the future peace and well-being of this country will be promoted by entering into this covenant, devised in the hope that war may be no more, what right have I to hesitate because of the bare chance that at some remote time in the future, under conditions which no man can foresee, out of another world war, Ireland may emerge a free nation? I prefer to hope that the end may be attained some other way. If it is said the hope is vain, I reply that the history of 700 years establishes that the one we are said to close is no less so.

If we permit ourselves to reflect as practical men, dismissing the chimera considered, there will be found some advantage even to Ireland in the covenant and even in article 10. If there is a valid excuse for the continuance of English domination over Ireland, it is that otherwise the latter would become a base of military operations against her by any enemy of Great Britain. At least it is speciously assigned that an independent Ireland could be reduced speedily by any foe of the former and afford him a convenient base.

In one of the Times articles to which reference has been made, in which dominion home rule is advocated as against an independent republic, the writer asserts that the latter is impossible, and adds:

> It would be superfluous to investigate the reasons in detail. The most cogent of them are strategic and concerned with British inviolability, and the safety of British trade routes. Even were Ireland friendly, the peril involved would be great.

As under article 10 an independent Ireland would be guaranteed by all the world against attack from an outside quarter and England, in like manner, even from an enemy operating from Ireland, that argument loses whatever force it has. The fragile structure of England's justification for the perpetuation of the present relation would lose its main prop.

Moreover, Article 11 would afford Ireland an opportunity, either directly or through a friendly power, to bring her claims to the attention of the league. It is as follows:

> Any war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting any of the members of the league or not, is hereby declared a matter of concern to the whole league, and the league shall take any action that may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations. In case any such emergency should arise, the secretary general shall, on the request of any member of the league, forthwith summon a meeting of the council.

I have heretofore expressed the view that under that article the council can only advise, that its purpose is to afford a forum before which any condition likely to disturb the peace of the world may be discussed.

The contention advanced rather than argued on the floor that under it the league could aid or call on its members to aid in suppressing insurrection is utterly inadmissible. I suspect that Senators having hastily expressed the view that our country bound itself on entering the league to aid in suppressing rebellion within the dominions of another, having Article 10 in mind, and finding that contention refuted by its plain language, they sought to justify the untenable position taken by reference to Article 11. It will be observed that the nations obligate themselves in unmistakable language in Article 10. They do not agree by Article 11 to do anything. They clearly defined and narrowly limited the power of the council in the case of a war of aggression contemplated by Article 10. Its power in such case is simply to "advise upon the means by which this obligation shall be fulfilled." Article 10 is superfluous if the contention referred to be sound. Why should the nations entering into the covenant cautiously frame Article 10 so as to bind themselves by its terms only to preserve each other from external aggression, if by Article 11 they were obligated at the call of the council to protect each other from internal uprisings as well? Why should they carefully limit the council by Article 10 to advising simply upon the means by which the obligation thereof shall be fulfilled, if by Article 10 it is invested with plenary power? Observe that by Article 10 it is not the league that guarantees to preserve each member against external aggression, as the United States, by the Constitution, guarantees to each member of the Union a republican form of government and to protect it against invasion, but the members of the league undertake, each severally, undertakes, as in Article 10 recited. The reason for this distinction is obvious. The Government of the United States, it was contemplated by the Constitution, was to have an Army and a Navy. It was to be provided with the means whereby the protection which was guaranteed could be afforded.

The league having no army nor navy and no means of securing either did not make any guaranty, entered into no obligation by Article 10 further than to advise as to the means by which the obligation entered into by the members—by each member—should be fulfilled, a provision inserted in the covenant obviously to promote harmonious action. Article 11 must be interpreted in the light of this situation. The league can not make war, having no means to do so, and none of the nations entering into the covenant have bound themselves therein to engage in war, or, for the matter of that, to do anything else. Accordingly, when it is said therein that the league "shall take any action that may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations" it can not mean that the league is empowered to do anything more than to advise or recommend. The same may be said of the clause in Article 3, to the effect that "any matter within the sphere of action of the league or affecting the peace of the world" may be dealt with at meetings of the council. A forum is provided by Article 11 through which the opinion and judgment of the world may be invoked.

It is suggested, however, that the opportunity thus opened is withdrawn by the later provision found in Article 15, which deals with the case of a dispute arising between two members of the league, as follows:

If the dispute between the parties is claimed by one of them, and is found by the council to arise out of a matter which by international law is solely within the domestic jurisdiction of that party, the council shall so report and shall make no recommendation as to its settlement.

This paragraph, it will be recalled, was not found in the original draft. It was incorporated in the revised draft in the vain hope that American critics of the league might be appeased. It will be noted that it does not forbid the council to hear the cause, but simply precludes any recommendation as to the settlement of the dispute.

It is by no means indisputable, either, that the institution of a new system of government in Ireland, in view of the consideration heretofore dwelt upon, is a purely domestic question. We declined to regard the revolt in Cuba, which resulted ultimately in its independence, as such, so intimately did the conditions affect the life of our own people. Gen. Smuts recognizes quite clearly, as is to be gathered from his observations heretofore quoted, that the question has an international aspect.

It may not be inappropriate in this connection to remark that though the covenant in various provisions employs the very language of the draft submitted by Gen. Smuts, a circumstance which led the Senator from Idaho to assert, doubtless accurately, that it was the one which became the groundwork of the covenant, there was no equivalent for Article 10 in the Smuts plan, a sufficient refutation of the charge that it was cunningly inserted especially to insure the integrity of the British Empire.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. KELLOGG. If the Senator prefers, I will wait until he is through.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No.

Mr. KELLOGG. I wish to ask the Senator one or two questions with relation to the construction of article 10, if he has finished with that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator at this time.

Mr. KELLOGG. I wish to ask the Senator what he deems the proper construction of article 10, as to whether he agrees with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], whose statement I now read? Referring to article 10, and especially the latter part of it, the Senator from Virginia said:

This insures that the burden under this article will be fairly and properly distributed. While each member of the league makes a solemn pledge of mutual protection, yet each reserves its right of judgment as to duty and obligation in each case as it arises and the means by which it shall be discharged. Thus, under article 10, no troops of the United States could be sent to engage in war without the advice of her representatives in the council and the approval of her Congress. This insures us against undue burdens and impositions. It leaves the extent of our moral and political obligations to our own sense of honor, and we ourselves measure the just demands upon our plighted promise.

Does the Senator agree with that statement?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, it would be rather difficult for me to attempt to analyze everything said there, but I agree, as I have been able to follow it, with the general idea expressed in the language quoted by the Senator.

I may say to the Senator, however, that I went into that question at some considerable length, as the Senator may recall, in an address which I delivered to the Senate on June 11, and my views about the matter are very tersely expressed in this brief paragraph which I read:

Article 10 is unassailable on constitutional grounds. In its substantive part it is, to all intents and purposes, a treaty of alliance. It concludes, "In case of any threat or danger of such aggression the council shall advise upon the means by which this obligation shall be fulfilled."

Then I add:

The purpose of this clause is obviously to secure concert of action, but it is left to each nation to determine for itself the recommendation of the council, notwithstanding whether the occasion calls for action in fulfillment of its obligation and how that obligation ought to be discharged.

Mr. KELLOGG. Is there not under the first provision of the article an absolute promise to guarantee the territorial integrity and political independence of every country a member of the league without regard to the second provision?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Undoubtedly that is true.

Mr. KELLOGG. And if it is necessary in carrying out that promise, does the Senator from Montana understand that we would be obliged to send an Army to any country requiring that Army to repel external aggression?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. There is a possibility beyond question. I have so stated.

Mr. KELLOGG. But I understand the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] claims that not only are the recommendations of the council advisory merely, but as to the extent of our obligation it is for the Congress of the United States to determine the justness of the demand.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I agree with that.

Mr. KELLOGG. Then there can not be an absolute obligation to send an Army any time we are called upon.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Undoubtedly we are obligated to carry out that agreement and preserve the territorial integrity and political independence of every member of the league. Now, some member of the league may feel that its independence or its territorial integrity is imperiled by a certain power and may call upon us to redeem our obligation. It is for the Congress of the United States to say whether the conditions require us under that to send the Army.

Mr. KELLOGG. For instance, take the case of Ireland. If some country should come to Ireland's assistance in a rebellion against England and England should call upon us for an Army, it is not the view of the Senator from Montana that we should shock the public conscience of this Nation by sending an Army, but that Congress at that time should judge of the justness of the cause and whether we were required to send it or not.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; the Senator can not so understand me. That is not the situation at all. We will put a situation. Ireland rises in insurrection, Spain is mobilizing her army, and England says, "We are endangered by this mobilization of Spain's; it is directed against us; come to our assistance." We take advice from our representatives in Spain, who tell us that that is not the purpose of the organization at all, that they are just out there training. The Congress of the United States will determine whether the occasion has arisen for carrying out that obligation or has not arisen.

Mr. KELLOGG. And if Congress determines the occasion has not arisen, we have not violated our contract. Is that the view of the Senator?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly we have not.

Mr. KELLOGG. Then it must be left, in the Senator's view, for Congress at the time to decide whether the United States will come to any nation's assistance.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Whether that obligation is actual at that time and whether we are called upon to aid or not. Who else would decide it?

Mr. KELLOGG. I agree not with that position, but that we have the constitutional power to enter into a treaty of alliance. I do not doubt that at all, but the advisability of entering into such a treaty is entirely another proposition.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am very glad the Senator has opened up that inquiry, because he knows perfectly well that ofttimes one nation having a treaty of alliance with another would call upon the other to make good its obligation under the treaty of alliance, and the other would say, "We do not think the conditions require it."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Germany and Italy during this war, for instance.

Mr. KELLOGG. I think we should consider with great care any clause in any treaty which calls upon this country to send an Army to maintain the integrity of all the nations of the world in these troubled times.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I quite agree with the Senator that we ought to carefully consider every single provision of this covenant before we give our consent to it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. May I not suggest that article 10 only obligates us to preserve the independence of the other countries, but does not specify the agencies which shall be employed in such preservation; and would it not be a very proper question for the United States at the time to consider whether war is necessary at all or not?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Undoubtedly; the Congress of the United States might conclude that they could fully meet the requirements of the case by economic pressure, by an embargo, and that would fully meet the obligation of article 10.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit one other question, I do not understand the Senator to claim that under article 11 there is any obligation to engage in war or abide by any recommendation?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. On the contrary, I assert that there is not. That contention, however, if I may be permitted to designate the names, is made by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL].

Mr. KELLOGG. I have never made any such assertion.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; I fully exonerate the Senator.

SHANTUNG.

The provisions of the treaty in relation to Shantung have become the subject of spirited controversy. It is insisted that they not only work a grievous wrong upon China, but that under Article 10 the United States obligates itself to perpetuate that wrong by guaranteeing to Japan the title to the peninsula which she acquires by the treaty. It is aside from the subject of this discussion to canvass the demerits of the provisions themselves. I say demerits, because if they have any merits I have been unable to discover them. I concern myself with the attack on Article 10 in connection therewith. It is no secret that the provisions in question are assailed as a part of the effort to reject the treaty to accomplish the defeat of the covenant for a league of nations with which the name of President Wilson is so intimately associated, rather than to vindicate any injustice done to China. From this general statement an exception should, perhaps, be made as to the junior Senator from Nebraska.

I assume, for the purpose of discussion, that Japan acquires virtual sovereignty over the entire Shantung Peninsula, that China was robbed of this territory by Germany, of which I entertain no doubt, and that in justice it ought to be restored to the former and not confirmed to Japan, now occupying it, having taken it from Germany with her other possessions in the East. This was a substantial contribution to the general happy result, among other things, making relatively safe the transport of troops across seas from Australia, New Zealand, and the Orient generally. But it was taken from China and ought to go back to her, as the so-called gentleman's agreement admits it should, and as Japan has promised in her treaty of 1915 with China it should. But we are not left in doubt that Japan insisted upon retaining whatever rights Germany acquired by virtue of her treaty in 1898 in the peninsula. It is understood that a secret treaty was made with Great Britain and France on her entering the war that Japan should thus profit in the event of victory, and though our representatives were under no obligation to respect that treaty, or any other secret treaty between the Allies in the disposition of conquered territory, it is comprehensible how the representatives of Japan should attach such importance to it in the partition, and particularly how the Japanese at home should. Their plea for the recognition of racial equality had been rejected. According to current report they made accession to their demands with reference to Shantung the price of their further participation in the deliberations of the Congress. Naturally British and French representatives, considering their treaty, were disposed to acquiesce. China had equally agreed by her treaty of 1915 with Japan that the latter should succeed to the rights of Germany in Shantung, but insisted that she had been diplomatically forced into that treaty. President Wilson eventually yielded that Japan might be induced to come into the league. That is what hurts. "Wilson saved the league by giving Shantung to the Japs" expresses equally malice toward the builder and his creation.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. NEW. As I understand the Senator, the price asked of us in order to obtain Japan's membership in the league of nations was our acquiescence in the effort to compel China to give up the Province of Shantung to her most feared enemy. Is that correct?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I assume for the purpose of discussion that that was the case.

Does the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who professes his attachment to the plan of a league of nations, believe that had he been the negotiator or had we been represented by some other statesmen at Versailles, the hold of Japan on Shantung would have been loosened, either with or without a covenant for a league? He asks us to reject the treaty. Does he believe that further negotiation with Japan, at another congress, will right the wrong of which he complains?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator a question in connection with what the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] would have done if he had been in Paris instead of Mr. Wilson being there at the time. If the Senator from Nebraska had been clothed with the authority and the President had been here at home, suppose he had undertaken to bluff Japan out of Shantung, how could the bluff have been followed up except by a threat of war, and how honorably could a threat of war have been followed up except by war? So I should like to know whether the Senator from Nebraska would be willing to put the selective draft upon the American people in order to take Shantung back from Japan and give it to China, because Japan is now in possession, at any rate, whether rightfully or wrongfully.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I was about to express the same idea.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg the Senator's pardon for anticipating him.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the treaty is rejected, Shantung remains with Japan and will remain with Japan until she restores it to China of her own free will or until she is compelled to do so by force of arms. Are Senators prepared to make war upon Japan to compel the evacuation of Shantung? China loses no territory by the treaty; she simply does not get back what she lost to Germany 21 years ago. But what does the world gain, what does China gain by the league, and particularly by article 10? Germany has not been the only aggressor against China. England and France have despoiled her. Japan and Russia fought over Manchuria, a Chinese Province. Korea has become Japanese territory. The partition of China is an eventuality to which the world has been looking for a generation. Moreover, ever since the Russo-Japanese War the keenest apprehensions have been felt lest Japan should some day conquer the whole of China or bring it under her dominion in some other way, and with its millions and its limitless resources venture upon the subjugation of the world, precipitating a contest between the white and the yellow races. This is the real "Yellow Peril." Now, while China does not get back Shantung, which she lost 21 years ago, she does get, if she signs the treaty, the obligation of all the civilized nations of the earth, by virtue of Article 10, that never again need she fear the loss of a foot of territory by foreign aggression. Japan has Shantung, keeping it under a more or less indefinite gentleman's agreement to surrender it to China, not to speak of her treaty with that country referred to, but the world has her promise, her solemn treaty obligation, never to violate the soil of China with a purpose to annex a foot of it, and China has the undertaking of forty or more nations of the earth, including its great powers, to come to her aid should the neighborly pact be broken by Japan. The Shantung section of the treaty is not satisfactory, but the compensations are so great that it would be madness—yea, midsummer madness—in our country to reject it on that account.

Perhaps too much attention has been paid to the criticism of Article 10, too little to its merits.

On a former occasion I referred to it as the soul and spirit of the covenant. It is the greatest guaranty of peace that document affords. It is because it is such that those who for one reason or another wish to see the plan proposed defeated or rendered ineffective, if adopted, desire to emasculate Article 10 by "amendments." Its effect was made plain by a colloquy occurring in the debate, in the course of which the senior Senator from Missouri, descanting upon his favorite theme that under the covenant the United States would be called upon to "police Europe," explained that by Article 10, if Bulgaria should make war upon Roumania, the boys of this country would have to go to the aid of Roumania to repel the invader. It apparently had never occurred to him, however, or he had never permitted himself to consider, that the boys of Great Britain would equally have to go—indeed, the boys from every part of the far-flung British Empire, as well as the boys of France and Italy and Spain and Norway and Denmark, of Brazil and Argentina, with those of a half hundred lesser nations—and that Bulgaria, in that situation, would probably take counsel with herself and determine that after all it would be more profitable to submit whatever differences she may have with Roumania to the arbitrament of the executive council of the league.

If I have any proper conception of the underlying principle of the league, and particularly of Article 10, it is the same as that which has secured peace among individuals comprising a nation or a community. When gold was first discovered in Montana adventurers from all parts of the country flocked there. With these hardy argonauts, the distinctive American type, came also a horde of miscreants who roamed the plains, scourged for their crimes from their former homes, ready to—

Rob, murder, and commit
The oldest sins the newest kind of ways.

There was no government of any kind. Every man carried a gun for the defense of his person and his property and was quick to use it. Soon, however, the law-abiding organized a rude government. In substance, each member of the community agreed to give up the use of his gun except for defense, and each, in effect, solemnly obligated himself to defend the life and property of every other member. The whole community held itself in readiness to be called out at any moment to make good the guaranty. Our annals disclose with what thoroughness the obligation was fulfilled. No man was permitted to be the judge of his own cause and to exact by violence reparation for any wrong done him or which he conceived had been done him. A tribunal was constituted before which he might have a hearing, and which undertook to do justice between him and the party accused. The vital principle of the arrangement was that every man promised at once to come to the aid of any who should be attacked, to hunt down the aggressor and visit upon him punishment befitting his crime, and to do so without any reference to the merits of the controversy, if there were any controversy. A wrong done one was an offense against all.

All government can be traced to the same necessity, and the same tacit understanding, though the development was more rapid and dramatic with us, owing to the suddenness with which remote regions in our great territory became populous. Article 10 is the application of the same idea to the nations of the earth. It is the embodiment of the notion expressed by the senior Senator from Massachusetts in his Union College address delivered on June 9, 1915, in which, advocating the plan of a league of nations to preserve the peace of the world, he said:

Turn it back and forth as we may, there is no escape from the proposition that the peace of the world can be maintained, as the peace and order of a single community are maintained, as the peace of a single nation is maintained, by the forces which united nations are willing to put behind the peace and order of the world.

There are just two ways by which "the forces" of the "united nations" can be "put behind the peace of the world"—either by the creation of an international force, against which public opinion outside of France is generally arrayed, or by an agreement such as that evidenced by Article 10, by which the nations agree to provide the force as occasion shall arise.

Senators profess to fear, even assert, that by reason of the obligation we incur under Article 10, should the treaty be ratified, we shall be continually involved in wars in all parts of the world, often between petty States in whose quarrels we have no concern. But we have been warned by the late war that we may most unexpectedly be involved, however remote from us the scene of initial hostilities may be or though we have no interest whatever in the controversy that precipitates them. Senators lose sight, however, really only seem to lose sight, of the fact that under the operation of Article 10 there can not be the recurring wars of which they declaim. Inadvertently they admit this even in the midst of their denunciations. The junior Senator from Washington, in an address delivered on Independence Day at Rochester, N. Y., pursuing the argument he has so vigorously made in the Senate that the Monroe doctrine is destroyed by the league, vociferated: "The Monroe doctrine has done more to preserve peace for 100 years than all the leagues of nations ever formed." Yes, and how has the Monroe doctrine preserved peace? Because through it the United States declared in effect its purpose to make war upon any European nation that should attempt to violate the soil of an American Republic; because we voluntarily and without any reciprocal agreement or other consideration bound ourselves and avowed our purpose to "preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and political independence" of the Republics of the Western Hemisphere.

In his speech of June 17, 1919, the junior Senator from Pennsylvania, in an effort to meet the suggestion that he must at one time have harbored views contrary to those he now avows of the power of our Government to enter into a treaty obligating it to make war, since as Attorney General he acted as the legal adviser of the President who negotiated the treaty with Panama under which its territorial integrity and political independence were guaranteed by the United States, remarked, touching that treaty, that we did not desire to have the territory adjacent to the canal, its "immediate environment," to use his language, "vexed by war." That consideration afforded an additional reason, inducing us, as a matter of policy, to enter into the obligation; but it plainly affects not at all the question of the power of the President and the Senate to enter into the treaty. We might take the view that it would not be to our interest that any territory adjacent to ours should be vexed by war—Mexico, for instance. The treaty before us is founded upon the idea that there is a public policy in seeing, so far as that end can be achieved, that no part of the earth shall be vexed by war. The Senator, for whose ability his colleagues as well as his countrymen have a profound regard, ought to make another attempt to harmonize the views he entertained in 1904 with that he now proclaims, or otherwise remove the evident inconsistency between them. The treaty with Panama accomplished the end which the Senator says the United States had in view in entering into it. The territory adjacent to the canal has not been vexed by war since. Why? Because the United States served notice upon the world by it that we would make war upon any nation that should invade Panama, no matter what provocation it might have. Here is the stipulation:

ARTICLE 1. The United States guarantees and will maintain the independence of the Republic of Panama.

If it were not for this treaty, assuming that Panama would ever have come into existence but for our aid, it would long since have been involved in a fratricidal war with Colombia. Costa Rica is even now engaged in war with Nicaragua, bordering on her north, but she has the prudence not to take up arms against Panama, which adjoins her territory on the south. There is a dispute concerning the line that divides them, but Costa Rica will arbitrate the question. She will never fight about it.

The Senator from Pennsylvania, in his speech of March 1, 1919, advanced the idea that the proposed league is a league for war and not for peace, because, he said, under the covenant war is permissible in seven cases and mandatory in three, one of the three being by virtue of Article 10. The junior Senator from California, in his peculiarly forceful style, following the same line of reasoning, denounces the league as a "war trust." In exactly the same sense the treaty with Panama was a treaty for war, not a treaty for peace. But peace was the result. Of course, the covenant contemplates war, both mandatory and permissible. The very purpose of a league of nations such as that being considered is, as expressed by President Roosevelt, "not only to keep the peace among themselves but to prevent, by force, if necessary, its being broken by others."

It is quite impossible to follow all the inconsistencies of the opponents of this great work of the statesmanship of the world.

An immense amount of sarcasm has been expended on the assumption, quite in contrast with the line of comment considered, that it proceeds upon a theory that mankind has suddenly been regenerated and will hereafter be controlled by the noblest ideals of justice and Christian charity. The senior Senator from Missouri has exercised his talents along this line without stint. One group attacks the league because it contemplates war; another because it is founded on wholly impractical notions of human perfection. In truth, it recognizes the inveterate character of greed, vanity, selfishness, and allied vices in humanity—in nations as well as in individuals. They now assert themselves, restrained, only feebly, perhaps, by the precepts of the Gospel or an intelligent perception of self-interest. The league attempts only to add, in the case of nations, the coercion which even primitive man found essential to his welfare in the case of members of his little community.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I think that England and Ireland, and America, too, which has so much in common with both, so many hereditary reasons to honor both, may all three be grateful to the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] for the manner in which he has divested himself of blood prejudice and traditionary prejudice and brought the cold light of nonpartisan, unimpassioned reason to bear upon the question which he discussed this morning.

Mr. President, his address is not in keeping but is very much in contrast with a great many things that we have lately heard in this body. It is very much in contrast with the effort of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to scare us to death about negroes and other colored races, forgetting that it will be rather difficult to make Chinese and Japanese cooperate against the United States or against the white races. They are very much more likely to be at daggers' point with one another and neither can effect any entente cordiale with either of the "Nigger Republics" in the league. It was also quite in contrast with the attempt of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] to scare us to death about the Pope, poor old man over there in Rome saying his prayers and trying to be nice to everybody as well as his age may permit. It was also very much in contrast with the attempt to scare us to death about Japan in Shantung the other day. In its moderation and conservatism it was very much in contrast with the misrepresentation, if not falsehoods, that were urged in that connection. An area of something like 100,000 square acres was magnified into 56,000 square miles, and a population of 50,000 was magnified into a population of some 27,000,000 to 57,000,000—nobody criticizing the league seemed to know which. That was the exaggeration made by no less man than the leader of the Progressives upon the other side—the "pendulous progressives," as Sam Blythe called them, because they are always waving in the air, dependent upon where committee assignments are—and by no less a man than the stand-pat, old-school Republican leader, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

I took the liberty the other day of calling their attention to the mistakes they had made in population and area and expressed the hope that they would of themselves correct them. I anticipated that at least one of them would correct the error as soon as he found it out. This morning, Mr. President, the Washington Post published an article from ex-President Taft, which I am going to ask to have inserted in the RECORD as an absolute reply to what was said by the Senator from Massachusetts, and what was said by the Senator from Idaho on these points, and as proving the total misapprehension upon their part or else of the attempt to totally misrepresent the facts to the American people. Whichever may be the case, I confess I hardly know which. I now ask unanimous consent to have the article by ex-President Taft inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

TAFT SAYS FAILURE TO YIELD TO JAPAN MEANT NEW WAR—DECLARES WILSON'S COURSE IN ACQUIESCING IN SHANTUNG GRANT TO SAVE LEAGUE OF NATIONS WAS STATESMANLIKE—CONTENDS WORST THING THAT COULD HAPPEN TO CHINA WOULD BE FAILURE OF LEAGUE.

(By William Howard Taft.)

The outburst in the Senate by Senator BORAH and others with respect to the Shantung Province is not, of course, as "highly unimportant" as Senator REED'S cry of negro domination or Senator SHERMAN'S fright at the restoration of the temporal power of the Pope has become. But in the end this new issue is not likely to affect the ratification of the treaty.

The exact facts in respect to the Shantung matter have not been set forth as clearly and fully as could be desired. What Germany had in China was granted her by China at the time of the Boxer troubles by way of an indemnity for the killing of her minister, Baron Kettler, and was one of the concessions to foreign powers which grew out of the rising against the foreigners in the time of the dowager empress. That which Germany seems to have secured was a lease, with political and exclusive dominion for 100 years, over the town of Kiaochow, with 50 000 inhabitants, together with the economic right to construct a railway through the Province of Shantung, which Germany and China should jointly operate and which Germany might police.

NO POLITICAL DOMINION.

The superficial area over which Germany was given absolute political dominion was about 200 square miles. She acquired no other governmental control, except the indirect influence of operating and policing a railway through a great province of 40,000,000 inhabitants. To represent this as a cession of political dominion over them and their country is, of course, inaccurate.

When Japan was induced to unite with Great Britain and France and Russia against Germany one of the inducements offered her, it seems, was a transfer of German rights in China. She thereupon proceeded to conquer Kiaochow, a work of considerable difficulty, and establish herself in possession of the German holdings. She then policed the Pacific for the Allies and drove Germany out of that very large part of the globe. She also helped to guard transports from Australia and other countries of the allied nations into the Mediterranean.

When the question arose as to the disposition to be made of German colonies and holdings outside of Germany, Japan claimed these rights in Shantung as a part of the contract under which she entered the war. The contract, of course, did not bind the United States, but it did bind the other Allies.

NOT IMMEDIATE RESULT OF WAR.

It related to a status which was not the immediate result of war and which had been established for 15 years when the war began. It would have been well if these German encroachments upon Chinese independence and territory could have been wiped out as a result of the war, but in view of the circumstances it was exceedingly difficult to secure the consent of Japan.

Japan is one of the great powers. Japan has more of the Prussian spirit than any of the nations still strong. She has gained wealth and power out of the war. She is a nation whose alliance with Germany in the future might be dangerous to the peace of the world. She is a nation whom it is important to have as a cooperating member of the league of nations to secure peace. She is a nation whose disposition to encroach on China needs restraint. The other results of the Boxer rebellion, with the territorial acquisition of the other Governments, are not to be changed. In other words, the reform under the league of nations and the principles declared in the 14 points can not practically be made retroactive in every case.

CALLS IT STATESMANLIKE COURSE.

Of course, we deprecate Japan's insistence on retaining German rights, but we would be unreasonable if we did not realize how exceedingly difficult it was for the President to change a situation created before he was a factor in it. It is said that he yielded on the Shantung business in order to save the league of nations. Be it so. That was the statesmanlike course to pursue. Suppose instead of that insistence upon a restoration of Kiaochow and the economic rights to China had led Japan to refuse to subscribe to the league of nations and to stand out against such a peace settlement. Her then position in the world would have been a constant threat. Germany would promptly take advantage of her attitude and an alliance between the two would be quite certain. The necessary result of such an alliance would be the beginning of a new alignment, ultimately to result in another war.

How much prejudiced is China by this result of the war? Japan is not likely to have any more spirit of encroachment than Germany would have had. Senator BORAH and Senator JOHNSON were certainly not in favor of our going to war with Germany to take the Shantung rights away from her. Are they in favor of doing so now with Japan? Do they advocate conscription for the purpose?

SEES WILLINGNESS TO EXAGGERATE.

Are they really stirred by love of China and the Chinese? How earnest should we regard such eloquent periods coming from those who are demanding the maintenance of our isolation and are painting in lurid colors the certain sacrifices of our soldiers in remote wars under article 10? Is it not fair to say that this outcry is only another evidence of a willingness on the part of extreme opponents of the league to exaggerate the effect of any feature of the treaty, to defeat the league of nations?

The worst thing that could happen to China would be the failure of the league of nations. Japan could then work her exploiting purpose with China with little or no restraint from us. The league of nations offers to China a full opportunity to bring Japan before the tribunals of the league and before the considered public opinion of the world over any schemes of Japan to secure further dominion over the Chinese Republic.

The provisions of article 10 and article 15 of the league are drafted with great care to bring before the league disputes over such attempted encroachments and to restrain the exercise of power over the weaker nation. The unanimous recommendation of the council, exclusive of Japan, or a unanimous recommendation of the countries represented in the council, excluding Japan, and of a majority of the other nations members of the assembly would impose a limit on any affirmative action of Japan against China, which Japan, under the league, must abide and acquiesce in.

"NO FRIENDS OF CHINA," HE SAYS.

The membership, therefore, of China and Japan in the league is of the highest importance to China and greatly more to be desired than the mere restoration to China of Kiaochow and the economic rights in the Shantung Railway, long ago parted with. They are no friends of China who seek by agitation of this Shantung matter to destroy the league of nations and to leave China without any of its protection against Japan.

An amendment striking out the Shantung provisions of the treaty insisted on by the Senate will certainly be objected to by Japan and by the allied powers, who are bound to Japan by contract in this matter, and will greatly delay the ratification of the treaty and endanger the league of nations. It is not possible that the moderate Republicans of the Senate will consent to be led into such an unwise step.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, to proceed: When my good friend, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], of whom I am personally very fond—and I think I am chiefly fond of him because of the fact that he is an out-and-out Republican partisan and I am an out-and-out Democratic partisan, and we can at least put our fingers on one another, and do not belong to the crowd of "uplifters" in one party and so-called "progressives" in the other, who simply "uplift" themselves into Senate committee assignments or "progress" themselves into public office—at any rate, when the Senator from Connecticut appeared the other day in an apparently extemporaneous manner, as if he were speaking impromptu, you know, such is my universal good nature, such is my amiability, such is my love of my kind, that I thought that the front he was putting on was the real building behind it. I absolutely thought that he was not posing; I thought that he had risen in a momentary impromptu condition of mind to express his indignation because the President of the United States had been, in his opinion, feloniously concealing something from the American people, to wit, the fourth article of the Anglo-Franco-American treaty. I had no idea that he and other Senators had met the night before and discussed what he should do the next day; I had no idea that he came upon the floor duly "advised with" and instructed to make this "impromptu" attack.

It reminded me a little bit of a man who was running against me for office. One day his friends, in an "impromptu" and "extemporaneous" way, did him the honor of carrying him up the street in a chair—"chairing" him, as the English say. It turned out, however, that a carpenter three days before had nailed handles to the chair whereby four men could "chair" my opponent. When that fact was discovered the "chairing" did not amount to much.

I do not know whether what I am now going to read is true or not, but as to that I will ask the Senator from Connecticut:

The attack on the President was deliberately planned and carefully staged in advance. It developed to-day that Senators LODGE, KNOX, BRANDEGEE, and BORAH held a conference late last evening—

This was published, I believe, on Friday morning, the day after the Senator from Connecticut made his speech—and discussed the matter of reprisal against the President at length. It was determined to execute the program carried into effect to-day.

That is the "impromptu" rebuke.

Mr. President, in the discovery of this mare's nest, this English-French-American treaty, declaring that America and England will protect France from an unprovoked attack from Germany, the average uninformed, unsophisticated American citizen last Friday, after the Senator had spoken and solemnly "rebuked," would have imagined that the Senator from Connecticut had just discovered it—that he was a great political Columbus. In order to prove that it was true, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], whose lips and tongue and countenance demonstrated awe and registered tragedy, read the treaty in the original French. Think of it! The solemn demonstration of the President's felonious concealment! He said, "Here is article 4, in French; the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] is not misrepresenting things; and to prove it, I will read it in the original French"! However, as a matter of fact, the whole thing had been published in the Associated Press in the United States of America on July 3, the day after Clemenceau had communicated it to the French Corps du Legislatif. I received on my plantation in Mississippi, even before the treaty was published in full here by the Associated Press, a telegram from the New York Times, I believe it was—at any rate, from a New York paper—asking me what I thought the Senate would do about the Franco-American treaty. I did not know what it was, and wired back to know what it was, for I was out on my plantation, 12½ miles from a railroad or telegraph station, so that the telegram had to be communicated to me by telephone. The question asked me was whether I thought the Senate of the United States would ratify the treaty. My reply was, "God alone knows what the Senate of the United States will do, but I know what it ought to do; it ought to ratify it." The French people ought not to be left as they are in fear of another unprovoked attack from Germany over Belgium's or some other nation's body—maybe Switzerland next time—whenever Germany again reinstates herself, ought not to be left to overwhelm France while the great English-speaking race in England, Australia, South Africa, and the United States is getting ready. Germany ought to be told by solemn treaty utterance—told beforehand—just what she has to expect if she attempts a repetition of her attempt to murder neutral or enemy while asleep and unexpectant of assault.

Even I knew it on the plantation that long ago. Is it possible to believe that a Senator residing in the Hub of the Universe and another in the wide-awake little Nutmeg State had the information take them by surprise on Friday last?—take them so much by surprise that one had to support the veracity of the other's statement of the existence of article 4 by reading it "in the original French"?

This was the mare's nest; and not only does the Senator from Connecticut discover it, and not only does the Senator from Massachusetts, with that wise way about him that makes everything he says at least look impressive, prove it by the original French text, but there comes along Col. Harvey, who has been hating Wilson ever since Wilson, in his first race, virtually confessed to him that he thought his cooperation worse than his enmity, and writes himself into the fame of professed ignorance on the subject. This is what the New York Times or the New York World—I have forgotten from which paper I cut this clipping—says, and I am reading this to keep the Senator from Utah from objecting to my putting it into the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; the Senator can put anything into the RECORD he desires.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, you always scold me about it. The editorial is headed, "Col. Harvey's newest mare's nest," and reads:

The regular hebdomadal mare's nest of Harvey's Weekly takes the form in the current issue of the French treaty, the text of which is printed in full on the theory that "to the best of our knowledge it has not been published in this country, which seems strange, if we are correctly informed that it has appeared in England."

Wonder of wonders! This great editor of a great weekly is quoted to the effect that to "the best of our knowledge" this treaty had not been published in the United States at the date of his editorial.

Yet it was carried in full by the Associated Press on July 3, and publications of an agreement thought to have been negotiated between us and France was published as Paris news prior to that. Here is this great, wise statesman, who hates the President, discovering this mare's nest and saying that "if he is correctly informed it had not appeared in the United States, although it had appeared in England." The editorial continues:

It may interest the editor of Harvey's Weekly to know that the full text of the French treaty was printed in the New York evening newspapers of July 3 and in the morning newspapers of July 4, the treaty having been made public by the French foreign office on the evening of July 2. Probably Col. Harvey was so busy draping the American flag around him preparatory to celebrating the Fourth of July that he had no time to read the newspapers, but what interests us even more than the colonel's latest mare's nest is the letter sent out to Republican—campaign contributors from the headquarters of the Republican national committee at 452 Fifth Avenue, Tuesday, July 22, over the signature of Will H. Hays, the chairman.

Has it struck you that when ex-Senator Root, a great Republican of Nation-wide repute, had to communicate his views to the United States he communicated them to the chairman of the national Republican campaign committee? Has it struck you that when Taft's confidential letter had to be stolen and published it was stolen somewhere around or about the Republican campaign committee headquarters? Has it ever struck you that if you were Root or if you were Taft you would write a letter to the American people and not to "My dear Will," addressed as "the chairman of the Republican national executive campaign committee"? Has it struck you that if you had written a letter to "Dear Will," the chairman of the Republican national executive campaign committee, that you would have been big enough to say that you were trying to make a party issue out of the league of nations? An ordinary Mississippi planter, with ordinary honesty, would have done one of two things: He would either have taken into his confidence the people of America by a public letter or he would have taken into his confidence only the Democratic Party, and only the executive working campaign part of it; but if so, he would have made no secret of the fact that his party was trying to make a partisan issue of it.

It is in keeping with what went before. First, there was a Republican round robin. It has its partisan beginning there. Here is our friend from Missouri over on this side scaring us to death with "niggers," and here is our friend from Illinois on the other side scaring us to death with the poor old Pope, bless his dear old heart—they tell me he is as good an old fellow as exists anywhere in the world and is more anxious to lead his flock to make their peace with God than he is to capture the league of nations. I do not believe in his infallibility, even in matters of faith, but a great many people as good as I do believe in it. Then on Friday comes the climax, when these gentlemen were scaring us to death about the pretendedly concealed duplicity of the President of the United States in deceiving the American people by secreting and hiding and covering over with leaves article 4 of the French-American-English treaty, although it had been published in full all over the United States on July 3—carried by the Associated Press—the most public thing in the United States, except, perhaps, an executive session of the Senate.

I read further from the editorial referred to. Will H. Hays, under his signature as chairman, sends this out from Republican headquarters as a Republican campaign document:

You will of course hear of and no doubt will see in full the editorial by Col. George Harvey—

I do not know how he ever got to be a colonel, but they call him "Colonel" in this article at any rate—published this week in Harvey's Weekly, relative to the proposed Franco-American treaty. I want to be sure that you see this, with its remarkable subject matter; hence this letter calling your attention to it.

With sincerest personal regards.

Then follows his signature. "I want to be sure that you see this"!

This letter was written July 22. Poor George Harvey. If he ever had been a sure-enough colonel, he would have had a hard time keeping up with his regiment; would have been 20 days behind all rumors of its whereabouts. The editorial then goes on:

Will Hays could hardly be expected to read the newspapers either; but what arouses our curiosity in the light of this correspondence is to know whether Col. George Harvey is working for the Republican national committee or the Republican national committee is working for Col. George Harvey. Or do they split 50-50 on street sales and new subscriptions to the Weekly?

But let us leave all this picayunish stuff. Ah, Mr. President, a man could go through the Lord's prayer and find fault with it here and there provided he put his own interpretation upon it. A friend of mine said to me the other day, "I do not like one thing in the Lord's prayer; it says 'lead us not into temptation,' whereas it ought to say 'teach us to resist temptation.'" He did not know he was doing anything remarkable; he was just sitting in judgment on the Son of God; that was all, just as a lot of the gentlemen who see sun specks all the time are sitting in judgment on the work of Clemenceau, "The Tiger"; David Lloyd-George, the greatest intellect and the best poised man of this generation; and Woodrow Wilson, whose name will go sounding down the aisles of time when no man in America called upon to name the membership of the Senate will be able to name three of them. Five great nations, represented by their best intellects and as an analytical result of five years' war and suffering, come together and do the best they can. Woodrow Wilson goes over there and gets, out of the tangled web of hate and fear, the best he can. He could not get everything, and because he could not get everything Senators here looking through smoked glasses at the sun see a great big speck, and one of them says, "My goodness, George, that is the sun itself; do you not see it?" Everything outside of it is only a rim of radiance, and of visions, and of idealism, but the real, dark spot, the real speck, is the thing you and I are looking at.

These gentlemen tell us our sovereignty is attacked. If you go out of the Chamber and smoke a cigar, that is an assertion of your sovereignty. If the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] and I agree we will not smoke any more cigars for a month, along come the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and say "THOMAS, you and WILLIAMS are sacrificing your sovereignty." Whenever you reserve the right to do whatever in the mischief you please you are maintaining your sovereignty; whenever you assert the right to refuse and agree to refuse to do something you have concluded to be wrong and agree with another, to be guided by God-given law and right and ethics and honor and honesty and agree with two or three other people that they shall be guided by it as well as you, you are all sacrificing your "sovereignty."

Mr. President, in that connection I ask permission to insert in the RECORD a manuscript sent me by John P. Miller, an old friend of mine, who for years was around Washington as one of the reporters and signed article writers of the Baltimore Sun. I want every Senator in this body, if he can find the time, to read it. I insert it simply because it deals with the whole matter of so-called surrender of sovereignty in a shorter and more terse and more convincing and persuasive way than I can, and it will save your time as well as mine to have it inserted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the matter will be inserted in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

"The concerted line of attack upou the league of nations is illogical, if not insincere. In a perusal of the argument advanced in opposition to the treaty the impression is constantly recurrent that the assumed unfamiliarity of the general public with international procedure and the underlying principles governing the relations of one nation with another is presumed upon.

"The objections to the league upon which opponents rely in their efforts to prevent ratification could not be valid unless the treaty by its terms delegated sovereign power to the council of the league. In the absence of such a delegation of power there is no force in the line of argument advanced by the opposition.

"But if the treaty did delegate power that would be a sufficient reason for every patriotic citizen of this and other nations to at once repudiate it. There would be no occasion to invoke other objections and alleged structural defects. The whole thing would be bad and it would be rendered no worse and no better by reason of some detail of the modus operandi of procedure.

"It is to be presumed that if anywhere in this treaty could be found a clause which by assertion or implication delegates sovereign power to the supreme council of the league of nations, Senators of acknowledged familiarity with international procedure and international law who are opposing the treaty would have discovered it and concentrated their efforts upon making this fact clear to the public and would not have wasted a word or a moment in the discussion of mere details of the treaty.

"The mere assertion, to be sure, has frequently been made that the league, in its permanent organization, was endowed with some sort of supersovereignty, but this assertion has never been sustained by any citation of phrase, clause, or paragraph in the treaty which might bear such interpretation. The citations relied upon for this assertion are such in character as may be found in almost any treaty of consequence entered upon by two or more nations.

"While it must be assumed that opposition Senators themselves can not be ignorant of the distinction between an agreement not to exercise some sovereign right and an agreement that some other authority shall assume your sovereign powers, yet it may be that they are warranted in assuming that the distinction is sufficiently vague to the public mind to enable them to deceive the public and give plausibility to an assertion which is utterly without warrant. It should be a fair assumption on the part of the public that if opponents to the league of nations who have had years of experience on the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate or have served their terms as Secretary of State with a chart of international relation spread before them, could find in this treaty any delegation of sovereign power they would waste no time in further analysis of the document and would not indulge in specious argument to arouse the suspicion that provisions of the treaty which are proper and necessary to its execution have some sinister and remote significance.

"It may be that the general public, who have had no special occasion to give thought to the subject, have but an indefinite idea of what 'sovereignty' is, but it is not to be assumed that men whose duty it is to give advice and consent as to treaties have failed to give thought to this subject.

"The struggle between democracy and autocracy, which has been in progress since the vision of liberty first enlightened the mind of man, has been nothing more nor less than a contest between two theories of sovereignty. Autocracy is the assertion of sovereign power over the people. Democracy, expressed in terms of government, is the exercise for the people of sovereign power derived from the people. Autocracy speaks of the 'sovereign lord.' Democracy speaks of the 'sovereign people.'

"Disassociated and isolated, sovereignty dwells supreme with the individual. The organization of society and of government is based, not upon an inherited authority but upon the surrender of some sovereign right by the citizen to the community, by the community to the State, and by the State to the central government. In a democracy the sovereignty is no more than what has been delegated to it by its people. That sovereignty is supreme.

"An agreement granting, extending, qualifying, or in some manner prescribing the exercise of some sovereign right is what constitutes a treaty between nations. A nation without treaty obligation has the sovereign right to enter upon an unjustifiable and an unprovoked war upon another nation. Any two or more nations have the sovereign right to enter into a treaty engagement not to go to war without just cause and provocation, and to prescribe means by which the justice of a cause of war may be determined. In entering upon such an agreement each nation is exercising its sovereign power in agreeing not to perform a certain sovereign act or to qualify the conditions under which it may be performed. The authority to grant or to accede to a special thing or condition is more sovereign than is the exercise of power to seize that which is in possession of another.

"An agreement between foreign nations that neutral vessels shall not be seized and searched upon the high seas would not be a surrender of sovereign power on the part of any nation, but it would be the abandonment of a practice which has been exercised by nations as a sovereign right. The agreement of one nation to go to the support of another when unjustly invaded is the exercise of a sovereign right, not an abandonment. The right to assume obligations and even to accept conditions is inherent to sovereignty. The United States has a sovereign right to discriminate as to tariff rates and tonnage dues and port regulations; it also has the sovereign right to apply the most-favored-nation principle to the commerce of all nations at its own ports.

"In the present treaty, as in all other treaties that this Nation has entered upon, the question at issue is one of policy. No question of surrender of sovereign power is involved. The pretense of anything else must be subject to a suspicion of insincerity unless concrete evidence that the treaty does surrender sovereignty can be produced.

"If the sovereignty of any nation has been sacrificed or jeopardized by this treaty, this effect extends to every nation that is a member of the league, and the negotiators for each of the nations have either been blind or have betrayed their countries by the most gigantic conspiracy of treason that the mind of man can conceive of. Such a charge as this must be substantiated before the treaty for a league of nations can be stigmatized as imperialistic.

"A pledge by a group of nations that each will forego or place conditions upon the exercise of some sovereign right is neither an imperialistic compact nor a surrender of sovereign power. The most violent opponent of this treaty, unless he be utterly ignorant of international affairs and the principles of government, knows this to be true.

"This treaty was made in the name of democracy, based upon the principles of democracy, and a result of the triumph of democracy throughout the world. It marks the victory of the 'sovereign people' over the 'sovereign lord.' An association of governments controlled by democratic principles can not be measured by the standards of autocratic power. There can be no similarity of purpose or effect between an alliance among nations in support of the 'sovereign-lord' theory of government and one among nations to extend recognition to the 'sovereign-people' theory of government.

"The merging of national sovereignty into one autocratic power is possible only when sovereignty is recognized as a power over and independent of the people. The close association of popular sovereignties, on the contrary, is essential to the extension of democracy and is inherent to its fundamental principles. 'United we stand; divided we fall' applies to democracy throughout the world.

"Unless the theory of our Government is merely a barren ideal, the sovereignty delegated to the National Government by the Constitution is not a supersovereignty but is the collective sovereignty of the people, organized and exercised under constituted authority to render it consistent and effective.

"If those familiar phrases which are presumed to reflect the underlying principles of our Government, 'sovereign people,' 'inalienable rights,' are not merely sounding phrases to be incorporated with party platforms and to give flattering unction to oratory, it would seem to imply a lack of confidence in the virtue of democracy to voice any apprehension at its extension to the rest of the world. Unless we are ready to concede that the application of our theory of government has proven a failure; that there is no such thing as 'sovereign State' or 'sovereign people'; that no inherently 'inalienable rights' survive in citizen or State, apprehension of danger through the league of nations is not warranted and obstruction to the progress of democracy throughout the world is not defensible.

"Neither in theory nor practice have the citizens of the United States surrendered their right of sovereignty even to their own Government. In democracy government is but an authorized agency with power of attorney to act in all matters of common national concern. The power does not reside in our National Government to take from the people or the State any rights that are reserved under the Constitution. The power does abide with the people, however, to extend or to qualify the powers of the Federal Government by constitutional amendment procured through the action of an adequate number of States. When it is realized just what the character of American sovereignty is under a democratic form of government, how can there be any suggestion that this sovereignty can in any way be impaired by implication in a treaty with foreign nations?

"The outstanding feature of this treaty is not that the United States surrenders its authority, jeopardizes its principles, or recognizes a supersovereignty, but that all nations party to the compact accept the democratic theory of sovereignty which concedes the source of all authority to be the peoples of the nations, the right of self-determination by the people of each nation being inviolable.

"In this treaty the theory of 'sovereign lord' is abandoned, and with its abandonment the danger of establishing an imperialism is dispelled.

"In every article and paragraph of the treaty that has to deal with matters correlated with the exercise of sovereign power, the sovereignty of every nation is scrupulously regarded.

"The provisions for the enforcement of decisions arrived at through the league contemplate no action which might not be taken by any group of nations acting independently of each other, and being in concert by the mere chance of circumstances. The league provides an orderly and rational method of arriving at the just determination of any question involving the relations between nations, but does not assume to exercise authority over any nation. If it is the sovereign right of a nation to go to war with another nation, with or without just cause, with no other guide than its own arbitrary will, is it not also the sovereign right of a nation to remain at peace with the rest of the world? If it is the sovereign right of a nation to remain at peace, does not a declaration of war against it by another nation violate its sovereignty? The most drastic provision of the treaty is that of article 16, which provides:

"Should any member of the league resort to war in disregard of its covenants under articles 12, 13, or 15, it shall ipso facto be deemed to have committed an act of war against all other members of the league, which hereby undertake immediately to subject it to the severance of all trade or financial relation, the prohibition of all intercourse between their nationals and the nationals of the covenant-breaking States, and the prevention of all financial, commercial, or personal intercourse between the national of the covenant-breaking State and the national of any other State, whether a member of the league or not.

"This provision protects the sovereignty of the nation which does not want to go to war, and the penalty is one which might, under the present order of things, without any league of nations, be put into effect by any nation having the power to do so. Such action by a nation or group of nations directed against an offending nation would not be a violation of international law as now recognized. This provision extends no power to nations who become members of the league of nations which they do not now possess collectively or severally. The thing contemplated has just happened, without the intervention or instrumentality of a league of nations.

"The much-discussed article 10, guaranteeing territorial integrity against foreign aggression, is in its very essence a recognition of independent sovereignty. It is a reciprocal obligation to respect and defend nationality. The council undertakes merely to 'advise' upon the means by which the obligation shall be fulfilled. The honor of each nation is involved in the fulfillment of this obligation, which is one for its own defense no less than for the defense of its associates, but the manner of its fulfillment and whether, in fact, an occasion for intervention has arisen, is left to the self-determination of each Government. Each nation will be governed by its established method of procedure and its moral standard.

"The principles embodied in the treaty, the language employed, and the things provided for accentuate recognition of the sovereign independence of every nation entering the league. The right of self-determination and independent existence and freedom from depredation of marauding neighbors is the pervading spirit of the treaty.

"If the league were a cloak for imperialism, would not the exploitation of Germany, a conquered nation, have been resorted to in fulfillment of this object? But the sovereignty of even Germany is scrupulously regarded. By the standards of imperialism Germany would have fallen to the allied nations as the spoils of war and been employed in the building of empire. But the suggestion of war for conquest is repudiated by the terms and very spirit of the treaty. The right of self-determination has been extended to people liberated, and territory alienated from the German Empire has not been appropriated by the Allies, but has been given freedom and independence, with association and government determined by the natural choice and affiliation of its population. The treaty throughout presents the antithesis of imperialism.

"Taken one by one, the obligations assumed and pledges made by nations in becoming members of this league do not disclose a single instance where sovereignty is surrendered directly or by implication.

"Participation in the formulation of a code of international law is not a surrender of sovereignty, but, on the contrary, is an act of sovereignty.

"The obligation of obedience to laws so made is no more an act of subjugation on the part of a nation than is obedience to the law of the land an abandonment of liberty on the part of a citizen. In both cases the one obligated to obey the law has participated in its making.

"No sacrifice of sovereignty is involved in the acceptance of an obligation to observe the rules of justice and to scrupulously respect all obligations. Neither a nation or individual can suffer loss of character from this. It is an obligation always implied, which can not be disregarded without the sacrifice of integrity and honor.

"An obligation not to resort to violence when avoidable is one that can always be assumed without loss of honor or independence. Upon it depends the peace and good order and morals of communities and nations alike.

"Participation in the establishment and operation of an agency for inquiry, the determination of facts, agreement, and advice as to the enforcement of obligation is a legitimate procedure on the part of a government, and no sovereign power is extended to this agency unless it is expressly empowered to perform acts of sovereignty. No action by the council or delegates of the league of nations authorized by this treaty involves the exercise of sovereign authority, and no sacrifice of sovereign power by any nation is involved in an agreement to conform to certain prescribed conditions, applicable to all other nations, in the performance of certain acts which are of sovereign right, but have relation to and effect upon the rights of other nations.

"The obligations of this treaty are no more onerous than those of good citizenship, and their benefit to society is corresponding.

"An obligation of honesty and decency—which is all that this treaty imposes—in no way abridges the sovereign rights of citizens or nations, and, without a league, it lies within the right of nations, either separately or collectively, to punish any nation that violates these obligations.

"Of course this treaty, like other treaties and all other laws of the land, is subject to our Constitution. No declaration of this fact is necessary; and to make it would imply that the contrary might be true if this reservation were not expressed, amounting to an acknowledgment of subservience inconsistent with national dignity.

"JOHN P. MILLER."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, one more thought and I shall quit. Here are other mare's-nest discoverers who have found out that we have all gone to pieces because when we get into the council there are 6 votes, I believe, or 4 votes to our 1, and when we get into the league itself there are some twenty-odd votes to our 1. What a stupid thing that is. If it had been known before the Constitution was ratified that there were going to be 48 States in this Union and each one of the 48 was to have two representatives in the Senate, imagine a man coming to me or to you and saying, "If you enter that body there will always be 94 men against you." What would your reply be? It would be: "Possibly 94 men might be against me, but it is inconceivable that they should be unless I should be mighty nearly dead wrong." You tell me that there would be 94 Senators against Mississippi with her two representatives, but you forget that at some time or other Mississippi might, accidentally at any rate, be right; and if she was accidentally right there would be a few other men in the Senate representing other communities in the United States with sense enough to see it, and, having sense enough to see it, with patriotism enough to recognize it by their votes.

Suppose every State in the original thirteen Colonies, or say the original nine—because we said this thing was going into operation if nine adopted the Constitution, deliberately leaving out the others if they did not—suppose each one had said: "Why, there will be in the Senate of the United States 16 votes, Rhode Island, against your 2; 16 votes, Virginia, against your 2; 16 votes, Massachusetts, against your 2." The answer would have been: "Oh, yes; but Rhode Island or Massachusetts or Virginia, provided they were right, would probably be a part of the majority sometimes and not always just two, and if either was so dead wrong as always to have nobody else with her, then she ought to overslaughed."

Now we come to chauvinism—this dead-set, mean, selfish, egotistical idea that leads a man, as a citizen of a nation, to say: "I want my nation left free and untrammeled to do whatever it pleases. I do not want to enter into any entangling agreement with anybody to do anything, whether it is right or wrong. I want to be left free at the time to judge for myself." What would become of a municipal society composed of individuals founded upon that sort of basis?

Suppose the Senator from Utah, as a citizen of the State of Utah, went out and said: "I decline to be trammeled; I decline to enter into an agreement to abide by the pistol-toting law, or by the homicide law, or by the thievery law, or by anything else. I will do right myself. I am my own sovereign, responsible to nobody but God, and at the right time I will do the right thing, and I want to be left free to say when I shall do it and where I shall do it and how I shall do it." Could you get civilization in a State out of citizens of that persuasion? Suppose each State in the Union said that to the other States in the Union. Could you get civilization in the American Union out of that? Why is it that thus far you have never gotten any civilization in the international world? Just simply because one nation after another, in blind chauvinism, has uttered that infernal, stupid selfishness. What is the difference between the American who says it and Bernhardi and Treitschke and these other Prussians who preached the unlimited and illimitable right of a State to do whatever it pleases whenever it pleases, and who have said that the only limitation upon the right of a State is the power and might of the State?

You tell me that now and then the league of nations may decide against the United States. I imagine it will. We are not popes. We are not infallible. We do not even pretend to be. But I will undertake to say that whenever it does do it it will be because the United States is plainly and palpably and obviously wrong, because they will have to decide it by a unanimous vote of all the nations except the United States, the United States, as an interested party, being excluded from the vote, just as the Senate would decide a question against Mississippi by practically a unanimous vote over Mississippi's two votes, Mississippi being thereby substantially excluded from the vote. Can you conceive that that would happen unless Mississippi was plainly and palpably and obviously wrong?

If you get in the league a unanimous vote of everybody except the interested parties, it will be a clear demonstration beyond all peradventure of a doubt that one or the other of the interested parties is wrong.

Suppose you had had this league of nations when Germany undertook to invade Belgium. That would have been one of the few questions in the world where the league of nations would have sat down with a vote against Germany; but even there, probably, Austria would have voted with Germany.

Now, Mr. President, another favorite argument against this league of nations—I am not making any set speech; I was just roused by a few things the Senator from Montana mentioned; he told how the opponents of the league have grown sarcastic. "You can not change human nature," they say. "You are visionaries."

You can not change human nature! What a stupid, barbarous utterance that is! If human nature had not been changed from the day that our ancestors were drinking mead and beer out of the skulls of their enemies, this world would have been in a mighty bad fix. If human nature had not been changed, even at that date, from the original time when their remote ancestors perhaps ate one another whenever they found them, and ate one another raw because they were not sufficiently enlightened to know how to build a fire, the world in their day even would have been in a bad fix; and if human nature had not changed from the day of Jesus Christ, and the precious leaven that He had thrown in it to leaven the whole lump, from what it was then to what it is even now, as bad as the world is even now, we would be in a much worse fix.

Why, there is no way of securing progress, there is no way of going forward from savagery to barbarity, and from barbarity to civilization, and from civilization to enlightenment, except by changing human nature. So much so is that the fact that the only thing lacking in a successful adoption and operation of this league of peace is the will of humanity to have it and to make it work; the minute you can change humanity's will to the point where men want it, they will get it. Indeed, they will not have to get it; they will have it already. If you make up your minds to want it, you will have it.

Oh, miserable politicians, miserable heathen without knowing it, who imagine that while they are nominally Christians they are really Christians, tell us, "Well, you can not change human nature. War and fighting are a part of human nature, and you must have them all the time, and you can not settle difficulties in any other way." Can you not? The Senator from Montana described to-day how they quit settling difficulties that way and began to settle them in other ways out in the mining camps in Montana. They proceeded to settle them first by self-appointed vigilance committees and then by regularly organized courts. What had happened? They had changed the human nature of the camp, and the human nature that was not willing to be changed was kicked out of the camp; and every nation upon this globe that is not willing to change its human nature far enough to leave questions in controversy to fair arbitral determination, instead of going around and cutting one another's throats by way of settlement, will be kicked out of the civilized arena, and ought to be kicked to death. What will happen to them will be what happened in the mining camps. The persistent criminals who did not want to "surrender their sovereignty" were lynched. The fellow that did not accept the new order and was not willing to change his nature that far was just simply carried out and hung to the limb of a tree.

Oh, Senators, you who talk that way! Is America one of the countries that deserves to be lynched? Is she one of the countries that wants to preserve the so-called right to do whatever she pleases when strong enough to do it? She may want to do wrong. If so, she deserves to be restrained by the conscience of the world.

It is not a bad thing now and then for the civilized opinion of mankind to brand an individual or a nation as the enemy of all humankind. If we had had anything of this sort before this war had started, Germany would have found out that instead of her fighting France over the prostrate body of Belgium she would have to fight the civilized world, and Austria would have found out that instead of having in prospect, as she thought, the easy game of swallowing and digesting Serbia she would have to swallow and digest the entire world. Austria would have arbitrated her difference with Serbia. Germany would never have invaded Belgium.

Oh, "you can not change human nature"! What was Christ born for? What was Socrates born for? What was Savonarola born for? Why did the Son of God come to the earth? You have changed your human nature either for the bad or the good. Some of us have not changed it very much for the good, but we had the opportunity, and we could have done it; and it is a lie to say that you can not change human nature. With God's help, you can change it upward and upward and onward and onward more and more. As Thomas Jefferson said, "You can not hope for the perfection of human nature, but you can hope for its indefinite perfectability."

Sun specks, mare's nests, new discoveries of presidential sins! Why, you would think, to hear a lot of gentlemen over there and some other gentlemen over here as well, that the President of the United States had gone to Europe and committed felony, or treason, or something of that sort. Why, I read this morning a speech purporting to come from a Senator over there, pronounced in a church, saying that any man who votes for this league of nations was from his standpoint comparable to Benedict Arnold. Think of that! A man who at the very worst entertains a dream of international peace, entertains Tennyson's dream, entertains Jesus Christ's dream, entertains the dream of Immanuel Kant, and at the worst may be mistaken about it, at the very worst is unpractical, is to be compared with Benedict Arnold! Why? Because he wants to bind this Nation, in cooperation with other nations, to keep the peace of the world, and not uselessly and aggressively and offensively go to the business of throat cutting rather than go to the business of summoning a fair board of arbitration to sit in judgment upon quarrels and decide them.

Oh, you say they may decide wrong. Of course they may. I have represented clients in ten or a dozen lawsuits where the court went wrong, in my opinion; but it was a great deal better for the court to decide the issue than it was for my client and the other lawyer's client to cut each other's throats. The chief good about municipal law and about international law for the preservation of peace is not that the decision shall always be right, but that there shall be a decision and an end of litigation. If you can not bring it around in any other way in municipal matters, you bring it around by statute of limitations. Many a dishonest man has owed an honest debt to which he has pleaded the statute of limitations, but the world has thought that it was better to have an end of litigation than it was to let it go on forever and be renewed from one term to another and from one generation to another.

Senators, however finespun your webs, you can not get away from the common ethics and common sense and common morality of this proposition of bringing about a measure of world peace by a world agreement. You can take up the treaty and quarrel with this provision and that, and so can I. I do not like the Shantung provision. I do not like the idea of trying the Kaiser of Germany, although most of you do. I would do as my boy advised—shave him, have an international barber shave him every other day, and turn him loose, the miserable, cowardly whelp, to meet with the contempt of all humanity all over the whole world. I would not run the slightest risk of making a martyr out of Hohenzollernism. I can find some other things there that I do not like; but when I compare the specks on this sun with this sun itself, which, as I hope, shall shed light to all mankind, giving men courage, giving women hope, giving children a promise of the future. giving education in the world a chance, giving progress an opportunity, under the wings of the angel of peace, a chance to grow from one generation to another, adding the fruits of one generation to the fruits of those gone before, and inviting the new generations to forget the ugly past, what care I about Shantung, and what care I about the Kaiser? I started to say, what care I about the Monroe doctrine? But I will not say that, because the Monroe doctrine is by the treaty absolutely salvaged and saved.

In the first place, all that the Monroe doctrine ever did was to pronounce upon our part that we would defend the political independence and the territorial integrity of South and Central American countries. This league defends the political independence and the territorial integrity of all the member nations in the world. Moreover, as if that were not enough, as if we wanted to be left, without any help or assistance, sole guardian of the territorial integrity and the political independence of South and Central America, Mr. Wilson comes back with the instrument excepting from the operation of the league of nations the Monroe doctrine, eo nomine, by specific name mentioned in the treaty itself; and they say it is misdescribed!

Why, what if it is? Suppose I named MARK SMITH and said he had a very pale countenance. Suppose you knew MARK SMITH. Would the fact that I had described his countenance inaccurately keep him from being MARK SMITH? And would the fact that some people said that the Monroe doctrine was not "a regional understanding" keep it from remaining the Monroe doctrine any more than MARK would cease to be MARK because I had said his countenance was pale?

Mr. President, I am not a pious man. Hardly a day passes over my head when I can thank God for many things good that I have done and when I would not pray Him to forgive me for a good many things wrong that I have done; but I hope the time will never come when God can curse me because, having had the opportunity of doing something toward the ultimate peace of the world and toward saving the lives of men and the happiness of women and the future of children, I failed to do it because I saw specks on the sun.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the major portion of the Senator's address I shall not refer to, because I have heard it many times and it contains nothing in which I am particularly interested at the present time. I do not care to discuss the coming of Christ or the doctrine of chauvinism or the color of the face of the Senator from Arizona, or many of the other interesting topics with which the Senator from Mississippi has entertained the Senate. What I do wish to say, however, is that on the 24th day of July I placed in the RECORD, and it appears on pages 3075, 3076, and 3077 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, an article from Harvey's Weekly. I stated at the time that I did not vouch for the article. In that article appears a statement as follows, speaking of the Franco-American treaty:

> In any case, to the best of our knowledge, it has not yet been published in this country.

After I had retired from the Senate that day, I understand that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] made the statement that it had been published in the papers of July 3——

Mr. THOMAS. July 2; the afternoon of July 2 and July 3.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. July 2 and 3?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; July 3.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; the afternoon of July 2.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I beg pardon; I do not want to settle the dispute between the two Senators.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; there is no dispute about July 3, but I never saw it in the paper of July 2.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Well, I did not see it in either, and I do not take it as particularly important whether it was July 2 or 3. At any rate, upon one of those dates the Senator from Nebraska says the Associated Press had carried it in the papers in this country. Be that as it may, that is totally irrelevant to anything that I said. I do not care whether the Associated Press or any other press printed that treaty in this country on that date or any other date. What I do care about is this:

The President, when he submitted to the Senate the treaty of Versailles—the treaty of peace with Germany—stated:

> I shall presently have occasion to lay before you a special treaty with France, whose object is the temporary protection of France from unprovoked aggression by the power with whom this treaty of peace has been negotiated. Its terms link it with this treaty. I take the liberty, however, of reserving it, because of its importance, for special explication on another occasion.

Mr. President, so far as I have been advised, that treaty has not yet been laid before the Senate. According to the article in Harvey's Weekly and the article in the London Times and the article in the Paris Figaro, article 4 was in that treaty, and it reads as follows:

> The present treaty will be submitted to the Senate of the United States at the same time as the treaty of Versailles is submitted to the Senate for its advice and consent to ratification. It will be submitted before ratification to the French Chamber of Deputies for approval. The ratifications thereof will be exchanged on the deposit of ratifications of the treaty of Versailles at Paris, or as soon thereafter as shall be possible.

Now, Mr. President, when the tripartite treaty—what is called the triple pact—was published in the London Times it was some sort of an official paper, because the British Government, as I understand, submits its treaties through what are called White Papers, and the London Times is considered to be official when it publishes them; and the London Times of July 4 stated, as appears upon page 3078 of the RECORD:

> The text of the Franco-British and Franco-American treaties signed at Versailles on the day when the peace treaty was signed (June 28) is issued as a White Paper (Cmd. 221).

Mr. President, the gravity of this situation is not at all whether this treaty has been published in some newspaper in this country. It appears by article 4 of the treaty itself that the President of the United States, the head of our peace commission, the man who negotiated this treaty and, so far as he could, executed it and set the seal of his approval upon it, agreed in the treaty to lay it before the Senate of the United States at the same time that he laid the treaty of Versailles before us. He did not do it. The frivolous and silly explanation was attempted to be made, when I put that article in the RECORD on July 24, that "at the same time" meant some time or other, so long as it got here before the other one got out. I venture to say there is no lawyer in this country fit to try a cow case who will say that when two things are to be done at the same time that phrase can be complied with if one of them is done at one time and another one at any other old time. It is absurd on the face of it. The charge stands unexplained and undenied. So far as anybody who can read the English language can understand or see, the President has violated article 4 of the treaty which he himself drafted.

Now, I do not pretend to say why, and he has not as yet said why. He has violated it, and the violation can not be atoned for. He has violated it beyond redemption. He can never perform the stipulation of that article. If he laid the treaty before us to-morrow, he has still violated the treaty which he drew, because he agreed solemnly to lay it before the Senate when he laid the other treaty before the Senate, and he has not done it.

He also stated that the two treaties were linked together, and what he has linked together we ought to be able to consider together. They were both laid simultaneously before the British House of Commons and considered together. They were laid simultaneously before the French Chamber of Deputies and are now being considered together. Only one of them has been laid before this body. That is the charge. Col. Harvey only said that "according to the best of our knowledge" it had not been published in this country. Well, it appears that it had been published in this country. He has made no misstatement. It was quite a while ago, but a mere newspaper publication of an alleged pact in this country is not the submission of it to the Senate. A treaty can not be submitted to the Senate except by the President of the United States, the other branch of the treaty-making power.

Mr. President, when the President of the United States submits a treaty to the Senate of the United States he is supposed to give the reason why it ought to be ratified and why he made it. Now, we are asked to consider the treaty of Versailles, the treaty of peace with Germany. The Committee on Foreign Relations for a week or two has been considering it, and we have asked for information. The President says he is unable to get the papers together to give us information for some time. He can not tell us which papers he will give us or when. We are entitled to have the President's reasons for the negotiation of the Franco-American treaty before the Committee on Foreign Relations at the same time we are considering the treaty of peace with Germany. They are linked together, the President says, and we are entitled to know if one of them should be passed why the other should be ratified or whether they both need to be ratified.

Treaties ought not to be extracted from the United States Senate piecemeal, getting one if you can, and then come and demand the other. What the President has linked together let no man put asunder, least of all himself. It is necessary for the Senate of the United States to have that treaty and to have the President's reasons for making it.

If I had my way I would not proceed one day further in the consideration of the treaty of Versailles in view of what the President of the United States himself has told us and in view of the fact that France and England have both treaties before their parliaments. I would not proceed one day further with the consideration of this treaty until I had the other link. I would not take one link and have the other gentleman keep the other link. I want to know what the two links are for and why they should not be kept together. I think we are entitled to it, and I think the country is entitled to it, and the charge can not be brushed away or sidetracked by a mere statement in Harvey's Weekly that he did not know the treaty had been published in this country, which is an absolutely irrelevant matter.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] talks about a conference that had been held between the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and myself. The only conference that was held was when I saw this article in Harvey's Weekly charging that the President had broken the treaty which he had made himself. I could not believe it. I said there must be some mistake about it, and not being familiar with treaty-making myself I went to the two best men, one of whom had been Secretary of State and Attorney General of the United States, and the other chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and who has made more treaties than Mr. Wilson ever has or ever will, and asked them if it was possible that article 4 could be in this treaty. We got the London Times and the Paris Figaro and found it was in both their copies of the treaty, and so we assumed that it must be in this copy. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] sat there the other day while I read this purported treaty from Harvey's Weekly and said that he had an authentic copy of the treaty in his pocket, and he pulled it out. I said let the Senator produce it. If this one is not authentic let him produce the authentic one. Why one Senator should have an authentic copy of the Franco-American treaty and the Senate as a whole or the Committee on Foreign Relations should be denied it, I do not know. He said he has an authentic copy of that treaty which the President up to date has neglected to lay before the Senate. There was no conference besides that. Before I read an article in a public print charging the President with having violated the treaty that he himself had made I wanted to be satisfied that article 4 was still in the treaty. When I found that the British House of Commons had acted upon almost the same treaty, when I found that it was printed in the London Times and the Paris Figaro as being in it, I thought prima facie it was in it. If it is not in it, anybody can deny it now. It is not too late.

The Senator wonders why former Senator Root writes to Mr. Hays giving his opinion about this treaty. He wrote to Mr. Hays because Mr. Hays wrote him a letter and asked for his opinion. That is the reason, at least, that ex-Senator Root gave me.

Mr. President, as I said when I rose, I care nothing about the rambling remarks of the Senator, after he finished trying to answer the charge I made by abusing the man who had made a trivial mistake, if it was a mistake, in an irrelevant matter, and by generally denouncing those who do not take his views of this treaty. I stick to my statement that in my opinion the President has violated the treaty, and if I can have my way we will not proceed any further in the consideration of the Versailles peace treaty until he lays before us the Franco-American treaty and gives us his reasons for negotiating it.

DAUPHIN ISLAND RAILWAY & HARBOR CO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1361) further extending the time for the commencement and completion of the bridge or bridges authorized by an act entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the Dauphin Island Railway & Harbor Co., its successors or assigns, to construct and maintain a bridge or bridges, or viaducts, across the water between the mainland, at or near Cedar Point, and Dauphin Island, both Little and Big; also to dredge a channel from the deep waters of Mobile Bay into Dauphin Bay; also to construct and maintain docks and wharves along both Little and Big Dauphin Islands," approved June 18, 1912, as extended by an act approved June 30, 1916, which was, on page 2, after line 10, to insert:

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, about two years ago a committee of educators, composed of presidents of leading colleges and men prominent in educational work throughout the United States, conferred with me as to the importance of establishing a department of education, with a member of the Cabinet at its head. These men were active workers in different Christian religious denominations, earnestly seeking to serve their fellow men, their country, and their God, by broadening educational opportunities for our children and citizens.

As nothing concerns more our national life than the education of our citizens, it needed little argument to enlist my active interest in the proposed measure.

After free discussion a committee was appointed to draft a tentative bill. The bill was worked over a number of times, and finally, about 12 months ago, I introduced a bill providing for the creation of a Department of Education, with a secretary in the President's Cabinet, and copies of the bill were sent to those interested in the subject in various parts of the United States for further criticism and suggestion. Modifications were made in the bill, and it was again introduced during the last Congress changed somewhat in details. It has been, since that time, reviewed and criticized by committees from various organizations.

The bill introduced in the House by Judge TOWNER, H. R. 7, and by myself in the Senate, S. 1017, still contains much of the bill which was pending at the last session of Congress, but changes which seemed to improve the original bill have been made.

The National Education Association has a membership of 35,000. It was organized in 1857, and many of our ablest college presidents and educators have presided over its meetings. Committees of this organization aided in the revision of the bill, and at the July meeting of the association the bill received the cordial approval of its members.

I request to print, without reading, the resolutions passed by the National Education Association.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolutions referred to are as follows:

THE SMITH-TOWNER BILL.

Resolution adopted by National Education Association, Milwaukee meeting, July, 1919:

This association has urged for years that education should be given just recognition by the Federal Government, and that a department of education should be established. The war has so emphasized the importance of education from a national standpoint that the necessity of the immediate consideration of this question is universally recognized.

Moreover, a commission on the emergency in education, appointed by this association one year ago, acting under the instruction of the association, prepared a bill creating a department of education with a secretary in the President's Cabinet, and authorizing the appropriation of $100,000,000 to encourage the States in the promotion of education, particularly in the removal of illiteracy, the Americanization of immigrants, physical and health education, teacher preparation, and the equalizing of educational opportunities, and

This association, through its commission, and with the cooperation of other great national organizations, secured the introduction of this bill in the Sixty-fifth Congress, and more recently its introduction in the Sixty-sixth Congress in a carefully revised and perfected form, known as the Smith-Towner bill, H. R. 7 and S. 1017: Therefore

Resolved, That this association gives its hearty and unqualified indorsement to the Smith-Towner bill, H. R. 7 and S. 1017, now before the Sixty-sixth Congress, and instructs the official staff of this association to use all honorable means to secure its passage.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the American Federation of Labor and the American Federation of Teachers have given the measure a hearty indorsement.

I request to print, without reading, their resolutions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection, it is so ordered.

The resolutions referred to are as follows:

Resolution No. 123, by Delegate Charles B. Stillman, of the American Federation of Teachers.

Whereas in accordance with the instructions of the last convention, the executive council of the American Federation of Labor, working with the American Federation of Teachers and the National Education Association, has cooperated in the preparation and introduction of the educational bill, H. R. 7, which creates a Federal department of education and appropriates $100,000,000 to be apportioned among the States to aid in the payment of more adequate teachers' salaries, in the equalization of educational opportunities, in the removal of illiteracy, in Americanization of immigrants, in physical education, and in the preparation of competent teachers; and

Whereas the present period of reconstruction is revealing even more clearly than the preceding period of the war the need for a national educational policy to secure coordination among the States, and to promote national welfare, efficiency, and unity; and

Whereas the threatened collapse of our schools, which influenced the action of the last convention, is still more imminent now, through the forcing out of our best teachers by the thousands by sheer economic pressure, and through the refusal of young men and women of ability and independent spirit to prepare themselves for a calling which does not offer a self-respecting living; and

Whereas the ultimate national need is for educated manhood and womanhood, a need which will become more urgent in the period we are entering; and

Whereas the recent past has forced upon us a realization of the necessity of more effective physical education, of the removal of illiteracy, and of the Americanization of immigrants; and

Whereas in the fields of vocational and agricultural education, the value of the stimulus to the States of Federal appropriations available to a State on its meeting specified standards, and on the appropriation by that State of equal amounts, has been proved by experience; therefore, be it

Resolved, That this thirty-ninth convention of the American Federation of Labor, in conformity with the recommendation of the preceding convention, indorse the educational bill, H. R. 7, and instruct the president and executive council to use the full influence of the American Federation of Labor in its support.

Adopted.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the Good Government Club of Cleveland, Ohio, has given the bill its indorsement, which I request to print without reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request is granted.

The resolutions referred to are as follows:

THE OHIO STATE GOOD GOVERNMENT CLUB,
Cleveland, Ohio, July 12, 1919.

To the honorable United States Senate.

GENTLEMEN:

Whereas it is a deplorable fact, revealed by our selective service conscription, that there are over 5,000,000 people in the United States who can not read or write—thousands useless to their country for lack of understanding, handicapped thereby in transmitting their ideals; and

Whereas there is no reason for such a condition in an enlightened government: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Federal Government must solve the educational question to facilitate its own growth and development; that democracy is based on an enlightened citizenship; and, further, that it is the province of the Government to preserve its own entity; and that

Whereas the Hoke Smith bill, known as S. 1017, is the best solution thus far advanced to meet the requirements and produce the long-hoped-for results:

Therefore, We respectfully request the United States Government, in Congress lawfully assembled, to give careful consideration to the bill designated above.

Very respectfully, yours,

THE OHIO STATE GOOD GOVERNMENT CLUB.
By C. L. CASE, Chairman.
J. H. DAVIS, Secretary.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the Jane Jefferson Democratic Club of Colorado indorsed the bill.

I request to print, without reading, their action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

JANE JEFFERSON DEMOCRATIC CLUB, INCORPORATED,
Denver, Colo., June 25, 1919.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR SMITH: The Jane Jefferson Democratic Club of Colorado takes pride and pleasure in indorsing the Smith-Towner bill (S. 1017 and H. R. 7) introduced by you and Congressman HORACE MANN TOWNER, respectively.

This club is a State-wide organization and has been in existence over twenty years, doing effective organization and political work. Its membership is composed of many of the leading women of Colorado, State and county officials, club leaders, Mothers' Congress officers, educational leaders; in fact, all women eminent in all walks of life, as well as the great voting rank and file, who, after all, in a democracy, are those who count.

This club believes that the passage of this bill is essential to the best type of after-the-war educational reconstruction, and it congratulates you and Congressman TOWNER on assuming responsibility for this piece of great constructive legislation.

Trusting that the measure may be enacted into law before the adjournment of the special session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, I am,

Very sincerely,

ANNIE PARKER HYDER (Mrs. J. B.),
Acting Secretary of the Jane Jefferson Democratic Club.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the New Jersey State Federation of Women's Clubs has indorsed the bill.

I request to print, without reading, their letter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, leave is granted.

The letter referred to is as follows:

NEW JERSEY STATE FEDERATION OF WOMEN'S CLUBS, DEPARTMENT OF LEGISLATION,
June 26, 1919.

To the Hon. HOKE SMITH,
Senator from Georgia, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I am instructed, as representative of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, composed of 200 organizations aggregating 22,000 women of this State, to write you indorsing H. R. 7, known as the "Smith-Towner bill." We feel that the need for a system such as outlined in the bill is great, and we believe that this need has been capably met in this proposed legislation. We respectfully ask, therefore, that you act favorably on this measure.

Very truly, yours,

JESSIE BUCHANAN,
Secretary.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The New York Section of the Council of Jewish Women has indorsed the bill.

I request that without reading it be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection, the request is granted.

The letter referred to is as follows:

NEW YORK SECTION OF THE COUNCIL OF JEWISH WOMEN,
New York, July 15, 1919.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SENATOR: I have to-day written to the Hon. WILLIAM S. KENYON, chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, Hon. WILLIAM M. CALDER, and Hon. JAMES W. WADSWORTH, jr., urging them to do everything they can to support your national education bill, as follows:

"The New York Section of the Council of Jewish Women, comprising over 3,500 members, heartily indorses the national education bill introduced by Senator HOKE SMITH, and respectfully urges you to do everything you can to secure its passage.

"This bill provides for a Federal Department of Education to aid the States in the work of abolishing adult illiteracy, of carrying through an effective Americanization program, of providing physical education and health service for school children and adults, of securing better teacher training and compensation, of assuring standardization of educational facilities throughout the country. This bill is the most far-reaching national education bill ever proposed, and its passage would result in great benefits to our country."

Very truly, yours,

TISSIE T. LEHMAN,
(Mrs. Irving Lehman,)
Chairman Committee on Legislation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The League of Foreign Born Citizens has indorsed the bill. I request that without reading it be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolutions referred to are as follows:

Whereas there is now pending before the Congress of the United States a bill known as the Smith-Towner bill creating a Department of Education with a secretary in the President's Cabinet and authorizing an appropriation of $100,000,000 to encourage the States in the furtherance of education; and

Whereas the passing of said bill will promote the education of native illiterates, of persons unable to understand and use the English language, and of other resident persons of foreign birth; will provide for cooperation with the States in the education of such persons in the English language, the fundamental principles of government and citizenship, the elements of knowledge pertaining to self-support and home making, and in such other work as will assist in preparing such illiterates and foreign-born persons for successful living and intelligent American citizenship; and

Whereas the grave menace of illiteracy and of the nonassimilation of the foreign born was made strikingly manifest during the war; and

Whereas no problem of reconstruction more intimately concerns the development of a sound citizenship and a complete Americanism amongst the peoples dwelling in our midst; and

Whereas we believe that a great advance in solving the problem of illiteracy and building for a more complete Americanism will be accomplished through the wider use of the common language, English, as provided for in the proposed law: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the League of Foreign Born Citizens, numbering many thousands of peoples of different nationalities united in love and loyalty to America and to its institutions, does hereby indorse and urge the passage of the Smith-Towner bill; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the members of the committees of the United States Senate and House of Representatives and to the Senators and Representatives from the State of New York; and be it further

Resolved, That the chairman of the committee on legislation, or some other member to be designated by the president, be present in Washington at any date or dates that may be fixed for public hearing on said bill.

Dated New York, July 17, 1919.

LEAGUE OF FOREIGN BORN CITIZENS,
By NATHANIEL PHILLIPS, President.
By CHAS. HENRY LEE, Administrative Secretary.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the education department of the General Federation of Women's Clubs has indorsed the bill.

I will read an extract from a letter issued by their educational department, addressed to their members:

To members of the General Federation:

America's women have always championed public education. We now have an opportunity unprecedented in the history of our country to do effective service in support of this great cause.

There is before Congress a bill, introduced as House bill 7, by Congressman HORACE MANN TOWNER, of Iowa, and as Senate bill 1017, by Senator HOKE SMITH, of Georgia, which is the most important educational measure ever proposed in the United States.

This bill provides for the establishment of a Federal department of education with a secretary of education in the President's Cabinet, and for an annual appropriation of $100,000,000 with which to aid the States in stamping out illiteracy, in Americanization, in the equalization of educational opportunity, and the improvement of rural schools, in the promotion of health education and recreation, and in raising the standards of teacher training and compensation.

The measure is as nearly perfect as it is possible to prepare, and has the enthusiastic support of the General Federation of Women's Clubs; of the National Education Association; of the American Federation of Labor; of the American Federation of Teachers; and of the Mothers' Congress and Parent-Teachers' Association.

Thoroughly democratic, and absolutely necessary, unless we are to lose the fruits of our victory over aristocracy and absolutism, this measure has unlimited potentialities for good, and must not be allowed to fail. Its passage will mean more to the cause of education in the United States than any law ever enacted by Congress.

Cordially, yours,

THE EDUCATION DEPARTMENT.

Many other organizations, including school boards and chambers of commerce, have indorsed the measure. Indeed, so far as I know, the only discordant note of opposition has come from certain Catholic organizations, based, I must believe, upon a misapprehension of the bills.

In the Morning Star, printed in New Orleans, on May 31, I find the statement that the Federation of Catholic Societies condemn the Smith-Towner educational bill as un-American and un-Christian, and certain resolutions were reported as adopted which I request to have printed without reading them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Rev. M. Kenny, S. J., read this section of the report of the Committee on Education:

"Whereas Catholic education, and particularly our parochial school system, are indispensable nurseries of religion and of the virtues essential to true civic character and to the maintenance of Christian civilization; and

"Whereas the Constitution of the Nation and of the States guarantees religious liberty to every citizen and strictly defines the authoritative boundaries of State and Federal power; and

"Whereas certain legislative measures now introduced in Congress and various legislatures aim, directly and indirectly, to weaken, emasculate and destroy religious schools and educational individuality, and to subject all schools, in finance and curriculum, to a centralized bureau of political nationalization in Washington, thus robbing State and family and individual of their God-given rights: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we, the representatives of the Catholic Federated Societies of Louisiana, are unanimously opposed to such measures as both un-American and un-Christian, and earnestly urge our people to support our Christian schools with increased unanimity and loyalty, and to combine with all Christian and patriotic citizens in opposing, by voice and pen and vote and every constitutional instrument, the advocacy, adoption, and advocates of those subversive and destructive educational schemes, thus erecting an impregnable barrier against this sinister menace to religion and Constitution, to family and Nation; be it further Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President and Cabinet of the United States, to the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House, and to our State and National Representatives."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the Morning Star on the same date commended the "magnificent stand which the Federation of Catholic Societies has made against the Smith educational bill which is to be reintroduced into Congress under the name of the Smith-Towner bill."

The Star of the same issue quoted from a paper called "America," declaring that the Smith bill was for the Prussianization of the public schools and that the Smith-Bankhead bill, for the Americanization of illiterates, was a scheme scarcely less dangerous.

On July 1, 1909, at Peru, Ill., the National Benedictine Educational Association of America adopted a platform of educational reconstruction condemning the Smith-Towner bill. I request that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

BENEDICTINE NATIONAL EDUCATIONAL ASSOCIATION PROTESTS AGAINST AUTOCRACY IN EDUCATION.

JULY 1, 1919.

Assembled at a time when the war-worn peoples of the globe watch with anxiety the threatening triumph of might over right, of tyranny over democracy, of international chaos over organized government, The National Benedictine Educational Association of America, convened in St. Bede College, Peru, Ill., and representing independent institutions in the States of Oregon, Washington, Minnesota, Illinois, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas, Virginia, North Carolina, Alabama, Georgia, and Florida, hereby reproclaims its solemn conviction that education is the bulwark of freedom, and invites the universal cooperation of serious-minded American citizens upon the platform of educational reconstruction that here follows:

1. Federal cooperation with our free and self-controlled educational activities we recognize and welcome as an ally of educational freedom. Federal domination we condemn as educational tyranny.

2. The spirit of liberty, the fountainhead of our national Constitution, serves to condemn any governmental agency that tends to disregard or abolish the God-given right of each and every American father to create and control for his child a school which satisfies the dictates of his conscience.

3. Power to create and control the school depends on the power to control the man that creates the school.

4. Consequently, Federalization of all school moneys, the essential feature of the Smith-Towner bill, is the death knell of educational freedom.

5. Consequently, the voters of America will employ all legitimate agencies, and the final sanction of the ballot box, against a measure subversive of the educational freedom guaranteed to our families and our States by a Constitution that has lately been rewritten in the life-blood of their sons and brothers. Shall the educational tyranny of Bismarck, after devouring with cynical smile the flower of American manhood, ride with our returning armies across the Atlantic to complete in Washington what it began in Berlin?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I trust these attacks upon the bills to create a Department of Education have been due to a lack of knowledge of the real provisions of the bills on the part of those who made them. I can not believe that these attacks represent the mature views of any considerable number of our citizens. Rather, I believe, they have been inspired by addresses such as that recently delivered by Rev. E. D. L. McDonnell, S. J., of Loyola College, Baltimore, Md. The address to which I refer was reported in the Washington Post on the 16th day of June. I send to the desk of the Secretary of the Senate some extracts from that report, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From The Washington Post, June 16, 1919.]

PRIEST ATTACKS BILL.—REV. MR. MCDONNELL WARNS OF MENACE IN EDUCATIONAL ACT.—SPEAKS TO G. U. GRADUATES.—DECLARES SENATOR HOKE SMITH'S MEASURE FOR DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION WOULD MEAN "DICTATOR" IN WASHINGTON.

A bitter attack upon Senator HOKE SMITH'S educational bill and similar measures pending in Congress creating a Department of Education was made yesterday by the Rev. E. De L. McDonnell, S. J., of Loyola College, Baltimore, Md., in a baccalaureate sermon delivered before the graduating classes of Georgetown University.

* * * * * * *

WARNS OF AN "OVERSEER."

Dr. McDonnell referred to the proposed legislation as "designed to place the whole educational machinery of the country under the control of one autocratic overseer here in Washington," and described it as "the most dangerous and viciously audacious bill ever introduced into our halls of legislation, having lurking within it a most damnable plot to drive Jesus Christ out of the land."

Dr. McDonnell continued:

"And now, last of all, but by no means least of all, our freedom is still further threatened, and still greater power is to be given to the Central Government, and State rights are still further to be weakened by a bill in Congress, the Hoke Smith educational bill, by which the whole educational machinery of the country is to be placed under the control of one autocratic overseer here in Washington.

* * * * * * *

"But there is another aspect of this bill which, for us Catholics and for every right-thinking American, must seem much more serious, for whilst the bill does nothing ostensibly against religion, in effect it aims at banishing God from every schoolroom, whether public or private, in the United States.

* * * * * * *

"This bill destroys all freedom of education, takes away the sacrosanct duty and right of parents to educate their own children and the right of the children to be so educated. It is a direct assault upon religion and it penalizes Jesus Christ, His faith and all who believe and teach it."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, this address embodies three distinct charges against the pending bills to create a department of education.

First. That the whole educational machinery of the country is to be placed under the control of one autocratic overseer here in Washington.

Second. That the bill takes away the duty and right of parents to educate their own children and the right of the children to be so educated.

Third. That the bill would banish God from every schoolroom and is a direct assault upon religion.

Each of these charges is so utterly false that it is difficult to understand how anyone could have been willing to make them. It is especially difficult to understand how a preacher of the Gospel of Jesus Christ could have been their author.

I request now to have printed in the RECORD, without reading, Senate bill 1017, which is almost identical with House bill No. 7, introduced by Congressman TOWNER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection, the request is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SIXTY-SIXTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION. S. 1017.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

May 28, 1919.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

A bill to create a Department of Education, to authorize appropriations for the conduct of said department, to authorize the appropriation of money to encourage the States in the promotion and support of education, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there is hereby created an executive department in the Government to be called the Department of Education, with a Secretary of Education, who shall be the head thereof, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall receive a salary of $12,000 per annum, and whose tenure of office shall be the same as that of the heads of other executive departments; and section 158 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to include such department, and the provisions of title 4 of the Revised Statutes, including all amendments thereto, are hereby made applicable to said department. The Secretary of Education shall cause a seal of office to be made for such department of such device as the President shall approve, and judicial notice shall be taken of said seal.

SEC. 2. That there shall be in said department an Assistant Secretary of Education, to be appointed by the President, who shall receive a salary of $5,000 per annum. He shall perform such duties as may be prescribed by the secretary or required by law. There shall also be one chief clerk and a disbursing clerk and such chiefs of bureaus and clerical assistants as may from time to time be authorized by Congress.

SEC. 3. That there is hereby transferred to the Department of Education, the Bureau of Education, and the President is authorized and empowered, in his discretion, to transfer to the Department of Education such offices, bureaus, divisions, boards, or branches of the Government devoted to educational matters and connected with or attached to any of the executive departments or organized independently of any department as in his judgment should be controlled by, or the functions of which should be exercised by, the Department of Education; and all such offices, bureaus, divisions, boards, or branches of the Government so transferred by the President or by act of Congress, shall thereafter be administered by the Department of Education, as hereinafter provided.

All officers, clerks, and employees employed in or by any office, bureau, division, board, or branch of the Government, transferred in accordance with the provisions of this act to the Department of Education, shall each and all be transferred to said Department of Education at their existing grades and salaries, except where otherwise provided in this act; and the office records and papers on file and pertaining exclusively to the business of any such office, bureau, division, board, or branch of the Government so transferred, together with the furniture and equipment thereof, shall be transferred to said department.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of Education shall have charge, in the buildings or premises occupied by or assigned to the Department of Education, of the library, furniture, fixtures, records, and other property used therein or pertaining thereto, and may expend for rental of appropriate quarters for the accommodation of the Department of Education within the District of Columbia, and for the library, furniture, equipment, and all other incidental expenses, such sums as Congress may provide from time to time.

All power and authority conferred by law upon or exercised by the head of any executive department, or by any administrative board, over any officer, office, bureau, division, board, or branch of the Government, transferred in accordance with the provisions of this act to the Department of Education, and any and all business arising therefrom or pertaining thereto, and all duties performed in connection therewith, shall, after such transfer, be vested in and exercised by the Secretary of Education.

All laws prescribing the work and defining the duties and powers of the several offices, bureaus, divisions, boards, or branches of the Government, transferred in accordance with the provisions of this act to the Department of Education, shall, in so far as the same are not in conflict with the provisions of this act, remain in full force and effect and be executed under the direction of the Secretary of Education, to whom is hereby granted definite authority to reorganize the work of any and all of the said offices, bureaus, divisions, boards, or branches of the Government so transferred, in such way as will in his judgment best accomplish the purposes of this act.

SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of the Department of Education to conduct studies and investigations in the field of education and to report thereon. RESEARCH SHALL BE UNDERTAKEN IN (A) ILLITERACY; (B) IMMIGRANT EDUCATION; (C) PUBLIC-SCHOOL EDUCATION, AND ESPECIALLY RURAL EDUCATION; (D) PHYSICAL EDUCATION, INCLUDING HEALTH EDUCATION, RECREATION, AND SANITATION; (E) PREPARATION AND SUPPLY OF COMPETENT TEACHERS FOR THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS; AND (F) IN SUCH OTHER FIELDS AS, IN THE JUDGMENT OF THE SECRETARY OF EDUCATION, MAY REQUIRE ATTENTION AND STUDY.

In order to carry out the provisions of this section the Secretary of Education is authorized, in the same manner as provided for appointments in other departments, to make appointments, or recommendations of appointments of educational attachés to foreign embassies, and of such investigators and representatives as may be needed, subject to the appropriations that have been made or may hereafter be made to any office, bureau, division, board or branch of the Government, transferred in accordance with the provisions of this act to the Department of Education; and where appropriations have not been made therefor the appropriation provided in section 6 of this act shall be available.

SEC. 6. That for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and annually thereafter, the sum of $500,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Department of Education, for the purpose of paying salaries and conducting investigations and paying all incidental and traveling expenses and rent where necessary, and for the purpose of enabling the Department of Education to carry out the provisions of this act. And all appropriations which have been made and which may hereafter be made to any office, bureau, division, board or branch of the Government, transferred in accordance with the provisions of this act to the Department of Education, are hereby continued in full force and effect, and shall be administered by the Secretary of Education in such manner as is prescribed by law.

SEC. 7. That in order to encourage the States in the promotion and support of education, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and annually thereafter, $100,000,000, to be apportioned, disbursed, and expended as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 8. That in order to encourage the States to remove illiteracy, three-fortieths of the sum authorized to be appropriated by section 7 of this act shall be used for the instruction of illiterates ten years of age and over. Such instruction shall deal with the common-school branches and the duties of citizenship, and when advisable shall prepare for some definite occupation. Said sum shall be apportioned to the States in the proportions which their respective illiterate populations of ten years of age and over, not including foreign-born illiterates, bear to such total illiterate population of the United States, not including outlying possessions, according to the last preceding census of the United States.

SEC. 9. That in order to encourage the States in the Americanization of immigrants, three-fortieths of the sum authorized to be appropriated by section 7 of this act shall be used to teach immigrants ten years of age and over to speak and read the English language and to understand and appreciate the spirit and purpose of the American Government and the duties of citizenship in a free country. The said sum shall be apportioned to the States in the proportions which their respective foreign-born populations bear to the total foreign-born population of the United States, not including outlying possessions, according to the last preceding census of the United States.

SEC. 10. That in order to encourage the States to improve educational opportunities, five-tenths of the sum authorized to be appropriated by section 7 of this act shall be used in public elementary and secondary schools for the partial payment of teachers' salaries, for providing better instruction and extending school terms, especially in rural schools and schools in sparsely settled localities, and otherwise providing equally good educational opportunities for the children in the several States, and for the extension and adaptation of public libraries for educational purposes. The said sum shall be apportioned to the States, one-half in the proportions which the number of children between the ages of six and twenty-one of the respective States bear to the total number of such children in the United States, and one-half in the proportions which the number of public-school teachers employed in teaching positions in the respective States bear to the total number of public-school teachers so employed in the United States, not including outlying possessions, said apportionment to be based upon statistics collected annually by the Department of Education.

Provided, however, That in order to share in the apportionment provided by this section a State shall establish and maintain the following requirements unless prevented by constitutional limitations, in which case these requirements shall be approximated as nearly as constitutional provisions will permit: (A) A LEGAL SCHOOL TERM OF AT LEAST 24 WEEKS IN EACH YEAR FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL CHILDREN OF SCHOOL AGE IN SUCH STATE; (B) A COMPULSORY SCHOOL ATTENDANCE LAW REQUIRING ALL CHILDREN BETWEEN THE AGES OF SEVEN AND FOURTEEN TO ATTEND SOME SCHOOL FOR AT LEAST 24 WEEKS IN EACH YEAR; (C) A LAW REQUIRING THAT THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE SHALL BE THE BASIC LANGUAGE OF INSTRUCTION IN THE COMMON-SCHOOL BRANCHES IN ALL SCHOOLS, PUBLIC AND PRIVATE.

SEC. 11. That in order to encourage the States in the promotion of physical education, two-tenths of the sum authorized to be appropriated by section 7 of this act shall be used for physical education and instruction in the principles of health and sanitation, and for providing school nurses, school dental clinics, and otherwise promoting physical and mental welfare. The said sum shall be apportioned to the States in the proportions which their respective populations bear to the total population of the United States, not including outlying possessions, according to the last preceding census of the United States.

SEC. 12. That in order to encourage the States in the preparation of teachers for public-school service, particularly in rural schools, three-twentieths of the sum authorized to be appropriated by section 7 of this act shall be used to provide and extend facilities for the improvement of teachers already in service and for the more adequate preparation of prospective teachers, and to provide an increased number of trained and competent teachers by encouraging, through the establishment of scholarships and otherwise, a greater number of talented young people to make adequate preparation for public-school service. The said sum shall be apportioned to the States in the proportions which the number of public-school teachers employed in teaching positions in the respective States bear to the total number of public-school teachers so employed in the United States, not including outlying possessions, said apportionments to be based on statistics collected annually by the Department of Education.

SEC. 13. That in order to secure the benefits of the appropriation authorized in section 7, and of any of the apportionments made in sections 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 of this act, a State shall by legislative enactment accept the provisions of this act and provide for the distribution of such funds as may be apportioned to said State, and shall designate the State's chief educational authority, whether a State superintendent of public instruction, a commissioner of education, a State board of education, or other legally constituted chief educational authority, to represent said State in the administration of this act, and such authority so designated shall be recognized by the Secretary of Education: Provided, That in any State in which the legislature does not meet in 1920, the governor of said State, in so far as he may have authority so to do, may take such action temporarily as is herein provided to be taken by legislative enactment in order to secure the benefits of this act, and such action by the governor shall be recognized by the Secretary of Education for the purposes of this act, when reported by the chief educational authority designated to represent said State, until the legislature of said State shall have met in due course and been in session 60 days.

In any State accepting the provisions of this act the State treasurer shall be designated and appointed as custodian of all funds received by said State as apportionments under the provisions of this act, to receive and provide for the proper custody and disbursement of the same, such disbursements to be made in accordance with the legal provisions of said State, on warrants duly drawn by the State's chief educational authority designated to represent said State in the administration of this act.

A State may accept the provisions of any one or more of the respective apportionments authorized in sections 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 of this act, and may defer the acceptance of any one or more of said apportionments: Provided, however, That no money shall be apportioned to any State from any of the funds provided in sections 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 of this act unless a sum equally as large shall be provided by said State, or by local authorities, or by both, for the same purpose: And provided, That the sum or sums provided by a State for the improvement of educational opportunities, for the promotion of physical education, and for the preparation of teachers, shall not be less for any year than the amount provided for the same purpose for the fiscal year next preceding the acceptance of the provisions of this act by said State: And provided further, That no money apportioned to any State under the provisions of this act shall be used by any State or local authority, directly or indirectly, for the purchase, rental, erection, preservation, or repair of any building or equipment, or for the purchase or rental of land, or for the payment of debts or the interest thereon.

SEC. 14. That when a State shall have accepted the provisions of this act and shall have provided for the distribution and administration of such funds as may be apportioned to said State, as herein provided, the State's chief educational authority designated to represent said State shall so report in writing to the Secretary of Education. If such report shows that said State is prepared to carry out the provisions of this act with respect to any one or more of the apportionments authorized in sections 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 of this act, the Secretary of Education shall apportion to said State for the fiscal year, or for the remainder of the fiscal year, as the case may be, such funds as said State may be entitled to receive under the provisions of this act, and shall certify such apportionment or apportionments to the Secretary of the Treasury: PROVIDED, THAT THIS ACT SHALL NOT BE CONSTRUED TO REQUIRE UNIFORMITY OF PLANS, MEANS, OR METHODS IN THE SEVERAL STATES IN ORDER TO SECURE THE BENEFITS HEREIN PROVIDED, EXCEPT AS SPECIFICALLY STATED HEREIN: AND PROVIDED FURTHER, THAT ALL THE EDUCATIONAL FACILITIES ENCOURAGED BY THE PROVISIONS OF THIS ACT AND ACCEPTED BY A STATE SHALL BE ORGANIZED, SUPERVISED, AND ADMINISTERED EXCLUSIVELY BY THE LEGALLY CONSTITUTED STATE AND LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AUTHORITIES OF SAID STATE, AND THE SECRETARY OF EDUCATION SHALL EXERCISE NO AUTHORITY IN RELATION THERETO EXCEPT AS HEREIN PROVIDED TO INSURE THAT ALL FUNDS APPORTIONED TO SAID STATE SHALL BE USED FOR THE PURPOSES FOR WHICH THEY ARE APPROPRIATED, AND IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE PROVISIONS OF THIS ACT ACCEPTED BY SAID STATE.

SEC. 15. That the Secretary of Education is authorized to prescribe plans for keeping accounts of the expenditures of such funds as may be apportioned to the States under the provisions of this act, and to audit such accounts. The Secretary of Education may withhold the apportionment or apportionments of any State for the next ensuing fiscal year whenever he shall determine that such apportionment or apportionments made to said State for the current fiscal year are not being expended in accordance with the provisions of this act: Provided, however, That before withholding any such apportionment from any State, as herein provided, the Secretary of Education shall give due notice in writing to the chief educational authority designated to represent said State, stating specifically wherein said State fails to comply with the provisions of this act.

If any portion of the money received by the treasurer of a State under the provisions of this act for any of the purposes herein provided shall, by action or contingency, be diminished or lost, the same shall be replaced by said State, and until so replaced no subsequent apportionment for such purpose shall be paid to said State. If any part of the funds apportioned annually to any State for any of the purposes named in sections 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 of this act has not been expended for such purpose, a sum equal to such unexpended part shall be deducted from the next succeeding annual apportionment made to said State for such purpose.

SEC. 16. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay quarterly, on the 1st day of July, October, January, and April, to the treasury of any State designated to receive such funds, such apportionment or apportionments as are properly certified to him by the Secretary of Education, and he shall discontinue such payments when notified so to do by the Secretary of Education, as provided in this act.

SEC. 17. That the chief educational authority designated to represent any State receiving the benefits of this act shall, not later than September 1 of each year, make a report to the Secretary of Education showing the work done in said State in carrying out the provisions of this act, and the receipts and expenditures of money apportioned to said State under the provisions of this act. If the chief educational authority designated to represent any State shall fail to report as herein provided, the Secretary of Education shall notify the Secretary of the Treasury to discontinue the payment of all apportionments to said State until such report shall have been made.

SEC. 18. That the Secretary of Education shall annually at the close of each fiscal year make a report in writing to Congress giving an account of all moneys received and disbursed by the Department of Education, and describing the work done by the department. He shall also, not later than December 1 of each year, make a report to Congress on the administration of sections 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17 of this act, and shall include in said report a summary of the reports made to him by the several States showing the condition of public education therein, and shall at the same time make such recommendations to Congress as will, in his judgment, improve public education in the United States. He shall also from time to time make such special investigations and reports as may be required of him by the President or by Congress.

SEC. 19. That this act shall take effect April 1, 1920, and all acts and parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, no one can read the bill without observing that no autocratic overseer of education is created in Washington.

It will also readily be seen that the bill in no way interferes with the right of a parent to place his child in a private school or religious denominational school if he sees fit to do so.

The bill seeks to aid the States in fighting illiteracy, in teaching the English language to immigrants, in strengthening the schools by adding to the pay of teachers, and by contributing toward the better preparation of teachers for their work.

The charge that it banishes God from the schoolroom and that it is an assault upon religion will be tolerated only by one who opposes public education conducted by the State or local authorities, and who opposes all schools, except denominational and parochial schools.

Let us consider the bill somewhat in detail.

The first four paragraphs of the bill provide for the creation of a department of education, with a secretary of education who shall be a member of the President's Cabinet. They transfer the Bureau of Education to the Department of Education, and authorize the President to transfer from time to time, at his discretion, other national educational activities to the Department of Education. They give the secretary of education supervisory authority over the department of education.

Section 5 requires the department to conduct studies and investigation in the field of education and directs that research be undertaken in illiteracy; immigrant education; public-school education, and especially rural education; physical education, including health education, recreation, and sanitation; and preparation and supply of competent teachers for public schools.

It will be seen that these provisions give the department in Washington no authority over the problems of education named, but require research in the interest of the schools of the entire country, that the information thus gathered may be furnished for the benefit of all States and all schools in the States.

Sections 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 provide for appropriations, a part for the instruction of illiterates; a part for the Americanization of immigrants; a part to be used in public elementary and secondary schools toward payment of teachers' salaries and for providing better instruction and extending school terms, especially in rural schools and schools in sparsely settled localities; a part for physical education and instruction in the principles of health and sanitation, and for providing school nurses and school dental clinics and otherwise promoting physical and mental welfare; a part for the preparation of teachers for public-school service, particularly in rural schools.

These funds, except the amount to be used to conduct the work of investigation by the department here in Washington, are to be distributed to the States, and used by the States and the educational authorities of the States.

So far from giving the department here control over the work in the respective States, it is specifically provided in section 14:

> That this act shall not be construed to require uniformity of plans, means or methods in the several States in order to secure the benefits herein provided, and the use of the funds and all the educational facilities encouraged by the provisions of this act and accepted by the States, shall be organized, supervised and administered exclusively by the legally constituted State and local authorities of said States. And the Secretary of Education shall exercise no authority in relation thereto, except as herein provided, to insure that all funds apportioned to said State shall be used for the purposes for which they are appropriated.

The language of the bill shows how absurd was the charge that the educational machinery of the country is to be placed under the control of one autocratic overseer here in Washington.

A provision is made that each State must duplicate the fund offered by the National Government if it is to be received by the State, and a further provision is found in section 10 that in order to share in the apportionment provided by this section (which is the appropriation to be used in public elementary and secondary schools for the partial payment of teacher's salaries), a State shall establish and maintain the following requirements, or these requirements shall be approximated as nearly as constitutional provisions will permit: "(a) A legal school term of at least 24 weeks in each year for the benefit of all the children of school age in such State; (b) a compulsory school attendance law requiring all children between the ages of 7 and 14 to attend some school for at least 24 weeks in each year; (c) a law requiring that the English language shall be the basic language of instruction in the common-school branches in all schools, public and private."

The purpose of the bill is to aid the States in furnishing an opportunity for each child to attend a public school and to aid in improving the work of the school; to require a term of at least 24 weeks in each year for the benefit of all children is a reasonable provision, and the least that any State should furnish.

If the bill stimulates every State to furnish public schools, open for not less than 24 weeks each year to all the children of the State, it will do great good.

Surely no one will question the propriety of making the English language the basic language of instruction in the common schools, public and private.

This disposes of two of the three requirements necessary to sharing in the appropriation.

The provision requiring a compulsory school-attendance law does not require that the children shall attend the public schools but requires the 24 weeks' attendance to be in some school, public, parochial, or private, leaving the choice to the parents. That all children may have a chance to go to school, the State must see to it that the opportunity is given, but no requirement is made upon parents that their children shall attend the public school.

The Presbyterian Church in the city of Atlanta of which I am a member, maintains a church school. The bill in no way interferes with this school. Attendance for 24 weeks each year upon this school or any church school—Presbyterian, Baptist, Methodist, Episcopal, or Catholic—or any private school meets the requirements of the bill. The claim that it takes away the right of parents to educate their own children is plainly false.

The charge that this bill would banish God from every school is without the slightest foundation. The bill can only be considered an assault upon religion by those who oppose public schools, and by those who believe ignorance on the part of the masses increases religious faith. The charge is really an attack upon public education and shall not be permitted to hide behind an expressed attack on this bill. It is founded upon opposition to taxing all the people that all the children may have an opportunity to obtain an education. It is an assault upon our public-school systems in every State, and carried to its logical consequence would abolish all public education conducted by State or local authorities.

If public education were suppressed, more than half of the children of our country would grow up in ignorance.

I need not dwell upon the calamity which would be visited upon our country if the opportunity for education at public expense were suppressed.

Taxes paid for the support of public schools are the highest contribution made by wealth for the welfare of our citizens and for the future of our country.

These attacks might have been expected of leaders of thought in the Dark Ages; at the present time they are surprising and shocking.

I can not believe that the real leaders of the Catholic Church or the rank and file of its members in the United States are opposed to public schools, or to an opportunity being given to every child of obtaining an education at the public expense.

I hope they will learn the real meaning of these bills to create a Department of Education. If they do so, and if I am right in my estimate of their attitude toward public schools, they will aid in stopping the unwise opposition to these bills to which I have referred.

I wish to add a table showing the native-born illiterates, and the foreign-born immigrants in each State. The table also shows the allotment made by the bill to each State for illiteracy and Americanization. I request that the table be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

ARKANSAS RIVER BRIDGES.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce, I ask leave to report back two bridge bills, which ought to be passed at once, and I shall ask for their consideration.

Mr. CURTIS. Let them be read.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Very well; they will be read.

From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2594) to extend the time for the construction of the Broadway Street Bridge across the Arkansas River between the cities of Little Rock and Argenta, Ark., and I submit a report (No. 112) thereon. I ask that the bill be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto, authorized by act of Congress approved August 7, 1914, to be built from Broadway Street, in the city of Little Rock, Ark., to a point on the north bank of said river in the city of Argenta, county of Pulaski, Ark., are hereby extended one year and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2595) to extend the time for the construction of the Main Street Bridge across the Arkansas River between the cities of Little Rock and Argenta, Ark., and I submit a report (No. 113) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto, authorized by act of Congress approved October 6, 1917, to be built across the Arkansas River at the city of Little Rock on the site now occupied by the free highway bridge constructed by said county in the years 1896 and 1897, are hereby extended one year and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have listened with close attention to the remarks of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] upon the so-called Smith-Towner bill. The objections to the bill which he has discussed seem to me to be untenable; but I have been impressed with the fact this bill, if enacted into law, however carefully it is drawn and whatever limitations may be originally placed upon the subject, will be the beginning of a policy of transferring to the General Government complete jurisdiction over the cause of education. The attractive feature of the bill to those who are very actively engaged at present in cultivating a propaganda for it—for I am getting multitudes of letters identical in expression in favor of it—is the fact that it carries an appropriation of $100,000,000. That is a bait, Mr. President, which few men in this country can resist at this time, particularly when these benefits are to be shed like the dews of heaven over the just and the unjust in all the States and Territories of the Union.

I believe in the education of the people of the United States and of their children, as I believe in the cause of education everywhere, but I am also profoundly convinced that one of the things that the States reserved to themselves and which is essential to their integrity and to the integrity of the cause of local self-government is their continued retention of jurisdiction over the education of the people within their borders.

I know that it may be said that this duty has in large degree been neglected in certain portions of the country in the past and is now being neglected. I know that it is claimed, with perfect truth, that the percentage of illiteracy in some sections of the country is simply appalling and that it constitutes a menace to the integrity of the Nation. That is to say, that the States are not functioning; that is to say, that the Government must assume the obligation of discharging the duties of the States wherever the States themselves fail, in whole or in part, in assuming the obligation themselves.

The tendency of the Federal Government to extend its powers and activities far beyond the original purposes contemplated is a tendency which is encouraged by the people of the States of the Union whenever it appears that the extension carries with it the assumption of the financial obligation which the discharge of the duty involves. I know of no reason if this is a logical movement why we should not have a minister of police as a member of the Cabinet of the President, to whom should be given the authority of enforcing police regulations throughout the country, the States themselves being negligent or indifferent or sometimes wholly failing in the discharge of that local obligation. I know of no reason why we should have States at all if this tendency is to continue, and particularly if it is to continue with the encouragement of the people of the States. If that is to be the policy of the United States hereafter, let us make one bite at the cherry and establish in the city of Washington a department for all of the local activities of the country.

Mr. KING. And wipe out the States?

Mr. THOMAS. It would wipe out the States. It is being done through the constant operation of what might be called the law of political gravity; and it may be entirely useless, probably it is, for those of us who believe that there should be some semblance of authority left to the States to contend against this manifest movement. The fact is that in some sections of the country, if I can judge from the letters which I have received upon this subject, people have come to the conclusion that the Government has heretofore been extremely remiss in not taking over these agencies and relieving the local government from the consequent burden of taxation.

The Senator from Georgia has so drawn this bill that the activities of the States are to continue and the revenues raised for educational purposes are not to be diminished; but the Government, out of its inexhaustible revenues, is to begin with the trifle of $100,000,000 in supplementing educational funds. I make the prediction that within 10 or 15 years from now, largely through the action of the States themselves, this obligation will be more and more imposed upon the shoulders of the Federal Government until by that time education in the United States will be bureaucratized and subjected to all of the evils of bureaucracy, with its concomitants of red tape, multitudinous officials, and inefficiency which during the war were brought so startlingly to the attention of the country in regard to matters military.

Mr. President, I had a friend who during the war gave his entire time to the people of the United States. He is a man of means, an engineer, who in his work in the world has accomplished many things of magnitude and made his own fortune. About a year ago he became impressed with the necessity of securing for the soldiers of the Expeditionary Forces in France every possible and effective supply against the gases which at that time were being used so prodigally by the Germans in their frantic efforts to stop the advance which, once begun, only ended with the armistice. The demand that came for this class of material was overwhelming; the need of it was everywhere admitted. This gentleman gave special attention to it, and was one of those who brought to public attention the need for conserving the shells of coconuts, the seeds of peaches and almonds and of other small fruits, the incineration of which furnished a class of charcoal of very superior quality and peculiarly desirable for this particular use. He designed a building for the rapid and effective incineration of this material, but the bureaucratic authorities of the War Department, dissatisfied with his plans, prepared and presented their own plans for buildings, the completion of which alone would in all probability have taken not less than three months. This gentleman said, "All right; go ahead with your plans, but we must have this charcoal at once; the demand for it now is emergent; by the time this newly designed factory is created the war may be over and Germany may be victorious. What we want we must have, and we must have it now. I have some kilns of my own in the city of Toledo; they are at present unoccupied and inactive; and I will undertake to supply this material myself. If the Government pays me, well and good; if it does not pay me hereafter, all right; but I will do it. The need for it is overwhelming, and every man should recognize it and act accordingly."

So he telegraphed to his associates, got his kilns in condition, reported to the proper authority, and asked for the material. He was met with the reply that he could not have it, because he had no contract with the Government permitting it. It was not until this gentleman appealed directly to the higher authorities, pointing out the tremendous emergency with which he was confronted and what he was required to do and trying to do on his own account and with no hope of reward, that he managed grudgingly to secure the needed supply, made the charcoal, and sent it across. Of course, that is an unusual instance; it may not be typical; but it indicates the result of bureaucracy in a centralized government like this. So, when this bill is enacted, as it probably will be—for no doubt the $100,000,000 lure will be sufficient to get votes enough to pass it in both Houses—the Senators upon this floor who are perhaps 15 or 20 years younger than I am will in all probability live to see everything affecting education throughout this country emanating from general headquarters in the city of Washington, and necessarily passing through the manifold processes and subdivisions of an organized bureaucracy.

This, Mr. President, in brief, is the basis of the objection that I shall offer to the passage of this bill when it comes up for final consideration.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I do not desire at this time to enter into a discussion of the general merits of the bill. My only object in speaking to-day was to present an answer, by an analysis of the bill itself, to the charges that have been brought against it, unfounded as they are, believing that a presentation of the real provisions of the bill would relieve the minds even of some of those who have brought the charges.

I think it can be easily shown that the views of those of us who framed the bill are sound. We insist that the National Government should contribute toward the education of the children of the country. We believe the educational responsibility to be a triple one—in part resting upon the locality, in part resting upon the States, and in part resting upon the National Government. The spirit that inspired this bill and preserved the entire control in the State governments, I think, will endure, and I do not share the fear suggested by the Senator from Colorado that in a few years the State control and State administration will be wiped out. I believe that the work will be so excellent, I believe the stimulating influence to the States will be so inspiring, and the better operation of the schools as the result of the operation of this bill will be so apparent, that, instead of modifying the view that all the control must be kept in the States, it will be strengthened. So I do not feel that anyone need have any hesitancy about supporting the measure on that account.

The National Government, by Federal legislation, has determined that every child from 7 to 14 must be kept away from work. The National Government has assumed this responsibility. It is only fair that a portion of the national income may be used to provide that the children between 7 and 14 may be furnished an opportunity to obtain preparation for better work when with them work begins.

We have passed legislation giving to the National Government large revenues through income taxation; we draw to the National Government large sums through inheritance taxes. The great incomes of the people of this country are not made in the States where the owners live. The real instrumentality that produces the large incomes are in many States away from the State of residence. For this reason it is fair that the National Government should contribute in part toward carrying the responsibility and the burden of education in the States.

The lack of education by citizens injures the locality of residence, the State of residence, and the Nation.

We may well regard the duty of education one to which all three shall contribute. But I will not now discuss the subject. I will do so at a later day.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, July 28, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we would praise and magnify Thy holy name for the God-like faculties Thou hast bestowed upon Thy children, illustrated in the work displayed by our doctors and surgeons in the late war—snatching men from the jaws of death by their skillful application of science, restoring them to life and health.

We thank Thee that the Government is furnishing ways and means to alleviate the suffering and needs of our wounded, especially the maimed and blind, by furnishing vocational schools and skilled educators to fit them for useful members of society and the business world, giving them new hope and happiness. Hear us and let the good work go on. In the name of the world's Great Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, July 26, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message in writing from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, was announced, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed joint resolutions and bill of the following titles:

On July 19, 1919:

H. R. 7343. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

On July 21, 1919:

H. J. Res. 120. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to receive, for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point, Tao Hung Chang and Zeng Tze Wong, citizens of China.

On July 26, 1919:

H. J. Res. 65. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan tents for use at encampments held by veterans of the World War.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

The SPEAKER. The Member elect from the fourth district of Minnesota is present and his certificate of election has been presented in due form. Without objection, the gentleman will present himself and take the oath of office. [Applause.]

Mr. OSCAR E. KELLER, Member elect from the fourth district of Minnesota, appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, on July 22 I introduced H. R. 7708, for the purchase or condemnation of a site for a target range by the War Department. This bill, through an error in the indorsement of it, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. It is the same as a Senate bill which passed the Senate in the last Congress and was considered by the Committee on Military Affairs of the House. I have consulted the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, as well as other gentlemen, and there is no objection to the change of reference. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that this bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the change of reference?

There was no objection.

GEN. PERSHING.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I have a copy of the London Post of June 28, 1919, in which is set forth a historical sketch of Gen. Pershing's activities in the war. It is very laudatory, and ought to be made a matter of history. I ask unanimous consent that it be published in the RECORD.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, we can not hear what the gentleman says the article is.

Mr. MADDEN. A historical sketch of Gen. Pershing's activities in the war on the other side, and well worth while preserving as a matter of history.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Whose article is it?

Mr. MADDEN. An article printed in the London Morning Post.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The article is as follows:

We are very glad that Gen. John J. Pershing, the distinguished commander of the American Army in France, should have accompanied Marshal Joffre to Oxford and should have shared in the honors which Oxford reserves for men of mark. We have not always been able to see eye to eye with President Wilson in matters of policy, but in relation to the conduct of operations by sea and land, and the preparations in the United States itself, we freely allow that the President merited well of his country and of the great cause, and set, indeed, an example which other of the allied and associated Governments might have followed with advantage. We believe it to be correct that on no single occasion did the President and his advisers transmit to Gen. Pershing any plans of campaign, suggestions, or criticisms, and we can almost say that this constitutes a record, and that no commander in the field was ever left so free a hand. Gen. Pershing merited this great and sustained confidence that was reposed in him. When he reached France in June, 1917, he was faced by a task which might well have appalled the stoutest heart. He had first to create his own general headquarters from elements which, though trained in the fine school of West Point, were unacquainted with modern war on a large scale and had no practical knowledge of the war of masses nor of the vast and complex administrative problems with which they were immediately confronted on landing. He had to prepare the coast bases and lines of communication so that they might become capable of receiving and transporting the troops, horses, carriages, guns, supplies, hospitals, munitions, aircraft, and scores of other things which constitute the provision of armies. He had to negotiate laboriously with the French at almost every step, to supplement their deficient rolling stock, and to establish vast training schools at Langres and elsewhere to fashion the leaders in subordinate grades. He had so to select the place for the eventual American effort that his armies could there not only be deployed but sustained and enabled to intervene effectually in the war. With the utmost energy and perseverance Gen. Pershing and his staff laid themselves out to carry out a work of which the magnitude and difficulty have been little understood in England, or even in the United States, and it is their title to fame that they accomplished it.

From first to last Gen. Pershing had determined to unite a great American Army in the northeast of France, and he held to his plan with iron resolution. The allied defeats in the spring of 1918 turned him only temporarily from his plan. He then lived very hard days. All his program of arrivals was changed, and in place of complete divisions there arrived masses of infantry and machine guns at the rate of 300,000 men a month. Pershing, with grand good comradeship, placed all his resources at the disposal of the Allies. There was a moment when not a single division remained under his command, but the moral and material support given by the American troops to us and to the French was of inestimable value in those days of trouble. This value can best be reckoned by the vexation caused, when things quieted down, by Pershing's withdrawal of most of these troops for the purpose of his original plan. But we all held firm, while Pershing at St. Mihiel first, and then in the Argonne, gradually accustomed his staffs and troops to the terrible ordeal of the modern battle, and with implacable resolution created that American instrument which would, by the spring of 1919, which was Marshal Foch's original date for the decisive effort, have proved worthy in every way of the mighty Nation which had joined for an ideal in the great crusade. We honor Gen. Pershing because he looked to the end, and attained it successfully in spite of frightful difficulties. His competence and his character have stood the test of trial in the seven-times heated furnace of the war, and he richly deserves all the honors that can be bestowed upon him. For all time to come we shall remember those American troops who fought so valiantly shoulder to shoulder with us on the British front, and stood ready in rear to support us in case of need. These things go very deep into the hearts of nations, and Gen. Pershing will always personify for us the fine spirit of soldierly comradeship in which America fought the Great War in France.

RECESS FROM AUGUST 2 TO SEPTEMBER 9.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming submits a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the House adjourns on Saturday, the 2d day of August, it stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian, Tuesday, the 9th of September.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the House has been in session for over two months, during which the daily sessions have been very continuous and, considering the heat of the summer and the importance of the matters we have had to pass upon, somewhat trying. In that time much has been accomplished, not only in the way of legislation but in the way of preparation for legislation. The more important committees of the House are now at work on legislative proposals of the greatest importance. The Committees on Ways and Means, Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and the Merchant Marine and Fisheries are at work, the first having to do with the many and important questions of taxation and revenue; the second, the great railway problem; the third, the great problem of the future shipping policy of the country. These and other committees are now steadily at work on important legislative propositions. The more important of the problems which the House will be called to pass upon are the problems that will be primarily proposed and presented to the House by these committees. I think we all realize that these and other committees under existing conditions can prosecute their work and bring it to an early and successful conclusion very much better if they are not continually called from their committee labors to attend the sessions of the House. I believe that an overwhelming majority of the Members are of the opinion that the work of the session will be advanced and promoted by taking a recess such as has been suggested. At the end of the proposed recess these committees, some of them at least, will undoubtedly be ready to present their legislative proposals to the House. We can then proceed earnestly to the consideration of these measures.

It has been suggested that the taking of a recess by the House might have some effect upon the prohibition legislation now pending in the Senate. My information and understanding is that that is not likely to occur. In fact, it is hardly possible that it shall occur. The Senate is now so busily engaged in other matters that there is little likelihood that they can give attention to these and other matters of legislation until they have further advanced the consideration of the great treaty questions now before them. No important questions, no public business will suffer, as I see it, through a recess of the House, and, on the contrary, I believe the public business will be advanced by a five-week adjournment such as is proposed. [Applause.]

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FERRIS. Does the gentleman not think we might make some progress in the advancement of soldiers' legislation if we went ahead and put that through the House now?

Mr. MONDELL. I think that is possible.

Mr. FERRIS. Eighty-five per cent of the soldiers have been demobilized, and the balance are being demobilized rapidly, and these ex-soldiers are wandering around over the country. I wonder whether six weeks or two months' delay might jeopardize the chances of our doing anything for them.

Mr. MONDELL. The adjournment proposed is for only five weeks; and while it is true that if the House were in session during that time there are various measures that might be taken up and considered, I think the gentleman will agree with me that perhaps after all, after these rather arduous two months, the House might be in a better frame of mind to legislate on the return from a short period of recess. I think that is true, at least with regard to those who will be privileged to leave. As to that very considerable number who will remain here attending to the public business, by that time they will have settled and determined, so far as they are concerned, a number of important questions, and therefore will be in a better frame of mind and better qualified to pass upon other questions.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield me four or five minutes after he has concluded?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. BAER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. BAER. Is it not true that many of these soldier bills have not been reported by the committees, and that it will take five or six weeks before they are ready to be considered by the House?

Mr. MONDELL. That is true of all manner of legislation. Many of the most important measures that have been presented have not as yet received thorough and careful consideration by the committees to which they have been referred, and they can not receive that thorough and careful consideration so long as the House is constantly in session, particularly under conditions that have required, as they have in the past, the constant attendance of the majority of the Members on the floor during the entire period of the daily sessions.

Mr. GARNER. Is it not also a parliamentary fact that the Senate is now considering the peace treaty, and that it is not likely that the Senate is going to take up any important legislation until it disposes of that very essential matter?

Mr. MONDELL. That is entirely true. There is no probability of the Senate taking up these measures; and even if the House should pass certain bills, it is doubtful if that would advance their consideration in the other body and their final enactment.

Mr. GARNER. And it does not look like the Senate will more than have completed its work on the treaty in five weeks.

Mr. MONDELL. That is true.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Does the gentleman agree with the statement of the gentleman from Oklahoma that 85 per cent of the soldiers are wandering about over the country wondering what Congress is going to do for them?

Mr. MONDELL. I have taken no responsibility for the statements of gentlemen who have made the statements on their own responsibility.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I dare say that there are not 5 per cent of the soldiers wandering about the country and wondering what the Congress is going to do for them. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Mississippi has asked the question I intended to ask the gentleman from Wyoming. The gentleman from Oklahoma left the impression that "85 per cent of the soldiers were wandering aimlessly around the country wondering what Congress was going to do for them." The gentleman from Wyoming does not subscribe to that statement?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not, as far as the soldiers are concerned that I am acquainted with or know anything about. The very large majority of the returned soldiers from my part of the country are busy about their own affairs and actively employed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I desire to make the same statement as to the soldiers in Pennsylvania. They are being employed about as rapidly as they present themselves.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman from Mississippi would seek to convey the idea that he is opposed to the recess——

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Oh, no; I simply rose to say that I did not think that 85 per cent of the soldiers were wandering around the country.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not a fact that the House is about five weeks ahead of legislation in the Senate all the time?

Mr. MONDELL. That is true at this particular time, beyond all question, but perhaps it is not always true.

Mr. BLANTON. And we will not lose anything at all by this recess?

Mr. MONDELL. Not at all, in my opinion.

Mr. WELTY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. WELTY. Why not take a recess for a longer period of time while they are considering the treaty?

Mr. MONDELL. I will say—and I think the House is entitled to know about it—that the question of the period of the recess has been discussed with many gentlemen on both sides and in the other Chamber, and the time proposed, five weeks and one day, seems to be a fair average between the extreme views on the subject.

Mr. WELTY. How long does the gentleman think they will debate the treaty?

Mr. MONDELL. I think the Senate will be debating the treaty at least that length of time.

Mr. WELTY. If we are five weeks ahead of them now, why not take a recess for 10 weeks?

Mr. MONDELL. Because, having consulted with a good many gentlemen on both sides, the time suggested is about the approved happy medium, as near as we can reach it. Some gentlemen wanted a recess for a longer and some for a shorter period.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman outline the legislative program for the rest of this week?

Mr. MONDELL. That is difficult to do definitely, but I will say that there will be matters from the Committee on Ways and Means. Just what measures they will bring up I do not know. There will be at least one bill from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and I trust there will possibly be a measure or two from the Committee on Banking and Currency. There are some District matters. We hope to get along as fast as possible with bills now on the calendar.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does the gentleman expect to be in session all day Saturday?

Mr. MONDELL. That will depend on how well we have dispatched the public business up to that time. And that raises the interesting and important question as to attendance. If we are all in constant attendance on the sessions of the House this week, we can make excellent progress in the dispatch of public business. If we are not, it may not be possible to adjourn as is proposed.

Mr. WINGO rose.

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WINGO. I want 10 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Would not the gentleman be satisfied with five? I have promised to yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, evidently an agreement has been made to adjourn the House for about five weeks. I do not know what the agreements are, only what I have seen in the papers, and it was not necessary that I should know. I have asked for this time to state my own position on this proposed adjournment. My position is that 85 per cent of the soldiers are demobilized and all the soldiers are expecting Congress to do something for them in the way of providing homes. My own notion is that the House ought to deal with that proposition prior to this five weeks' vacation or any other vacation. There is some difference of opinion on just what should be done for them. But it can be and should be worked out. Surely there can be no difference of opinion that some relief should be accorded. But if there is any difference of opinion on that subject I would like to hear from the gentleman who holds that opinion. In other words, if there be Members who are opposed to any relief for them I do not know of it.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. If we should pass some legislation now on this subject of relief for the soldiers, does the gentleman think the Senate would consider that before the latter end of October?

Mr. FERRIS. I think the gentleman and I have both been here long enough to know that every step forward you can take with legislation always progresses it that much, and to wait and wait and let the soldiers get scattered, and let their minds become scattered, and let the Congress get scattered, only delays it just that much longer. It ought not to wait longer. Something ought to be done now.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I do not. I have a few ideas of my own. What is the proposition?

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I hope the gentleman will permit me to go on. I have a very short time. There is another question that is a burning question. I do not think either side of the House is to blame for it, but I state on my own responsibility as a Member here that the high cost of living must have some attention from somebody, and have it very quickly. [Applause.] Men and women working for $75 or $100 or $150 a month say they can not make ends meet. Men working for small wages are not able to make enough to take care of their families. I do not know what the solution will be, but it deserves the best efforts of all of us, and if we adjourn it will not get it. The laboring men are here now before these boards, and I talked with some, talked with both sides on the question last night.

They are here trying to get their wages raised—the railroad men—insisting that they can not make both ends meet. One of two things is certain, either we will have to raise their wages or raise the railroad rates, or keep the railroads and go on subsidizing the railroads. The Republican Party is in control in both ends of the Capitol. The problem is theirs. They ought not to delay. It has been delayed too long now.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. No. The Public Lands Committee have authorized a bill to remedy this and to deal with the soldier question. I do not think it sufficient, but it is a start. It can be amended. It can be made acceptable. It ought to be made acceptable. There are bills to deal with other important questions—the railroads, the modification of the War Risk Bureau insurance, so as to make it applicable to peace times and make it acceptable to the soldiers; and whether they ought to take a recess at this time and let all these questions go unsolved is the question for the majority to decide. For my own part, while I do not carry the responsibility at all for the Congress, except my own, I am not in favor of neglecting those salient things for any sort of a recess, for five weeks or five days or one day or two days or any other time.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. I just wanted to ask if the gentleman does not think the President made a great mistake when he did not call us together 60 days earlier than he did? [Applause on Republican side.]

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, we are here now, and on the job. I am not the President's keeper. Personally, I am willing to deal with things in front of me, not behind me. I repeat I make no effort to shape the course of other than my own—but to me there is too much left undone that can not wait to take this long recess.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kansas, Col. LITTLE, who just asked a question of the last speaker, recalls to my mind the fact that the Republican Party in the last Congress defeated the great supply bills deliberately through their leaders at the other end of the Capitol, in order to force the President to call this Congress together to meet the alleged urgent needs for reconstruction legislation——

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Oh, no; I can not yield in five minutes.

Mr. LITTLE. For just one small question?

Mr. WINGO. Oh, the gentleman could ask questions forever. If the gentleman will get me 30 minutes I will answer all his questions. I would like to have 30 minutes to put into the RECORD some magazine articles that appeared respecting this matter, particularly that which appeared in a Sunday magazine issue of a Washington paper a few days before the adjournment of the last session of Congress, by one of the great Republican leaders of this House, pointing out the great reconstruction legislation that should be enacted and which the Republicans would enact should we have an extra session of Congress. What has happened? You have been in session now for some time, and what have you done? The net result of months of your work is to report a bill to repeal the tax on soda water. What is your program on the railroad problem? What is your program on the soldiers? What is your program on taxes and tax legislation? Have you got one? Nobody but that mysterious body known as your steering committee knows; your own side does not know. You went to the country upon the plea that you would repeal a lot of taxation. [Cries of "Oh, no!" on the Republican side.] Oh, yes, you did; and I have a lot of literature and at the right time I shall put it into the RECORD—the campaign arguments of some Republicans sitting on this floor, as to the reason why the Republican House should be elected, promising to lower taxes and lower cost of living. And what happened? The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] came in here with certain repeal legislation, and what happened to that? Why, the steering committee took him by the seat of his parliamentary breeches and yanked him and his bill off the floor, and nobody knows where that bill is. Oh, yes; you are sick and tired and you want a recess. You do not want to go to the golf links. Oh, no; you want to be able to settle your differences and map out a program, because you have not any, notwithstanding the promises you made the voters. You got this House on false pretenses. [Applause on Democratic side.]

What are you going to do? Go and read some of your literature; go read what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] said in his magazine article—that it was necessary to bring this Congress together in order to enact important legislation; and yet you have been here for months and what have you done? You have organized a few smelling committees and have growled at the President, and you are investigating the high cost of the war, but you are dodging like a skittish mule the question of the high cost of living. What are you going to do about it? The responsibility is yours. You now attempt to lay it on the Senate, saying that you are five weeks ahead and that the Senate is going to debate the treaty question. You know that that is not the reason. Men on the Democratic side and on the Republican side say that they want to rest, because it is too hot, but there is another reason, and that is on account of your steering committee. It might be a good thing for you to give you this five weeks, so you can settle your differences and frame some of the legislation you promised, but I predict it will take you longer than five weeks to settle the petty differences and jealousies of your leaders in your party, to quell the rising spirit of the West that realizes that it has been bunkoed by the Republican organization of this House. [Laughter and applause.]

You will not do it in five weeks. You voted down in your caucus the other night a proposition to give the West representation on your steering committee. What is this Republican steering committee? Nobody knows what it is. Nobody can name who it is. I asked a leading Republican to state who the members were the other day, because I had forgotten, and he could not tell me. But we know that when committees of this House meet before they will take final action in the committee the chairman of the committee goes to the telephone, calls up the steering committee, and gets an order as to what they shall do. Then talk about the caucus of the Democratic Party, and yet you have got a secret committee that gives orders. [Laughter on the Republican side.] Oh, gentlemen may laugh, but I notice the Members from the West do not laugh; it is too serious a matter for them. And gentlemen to-day are laughing, leaders whom that Progressive Republican, Theodore Roosevelt, denounced in days gone by—and at some later day I shall put his denunciation in the RECORD—you are laughing now, but it is in a hollow, metallic tone, because you laugh as men going through a graveyard. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You have been here for months, in control of both the House and the Senate, and what have you done? Absolutely nothing but pass the supply bills that would have passed in March if it had not been for your Republican filibuster. Nothing else have you done but growl and abuse the President and organize your smelling committees. Not one single constructive measure have you reported to the House, and now you are running away under the pretense that you must wait on the Senate and that it is too hot. If you do not quit growling at the President and quarreling among yourselves, it is going to get hotter for you, and no five weeks' recess will cool you off. Let us stay here and make an effort to solve the great problems that confront us. Do not recess, but bring out your bills and get to work. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, it is certainly very agreeable to witness the performance of the self-appointed conservator of the Republican Party from Arkansas. I am very glad to see the solicitude with which he witnesses the harmony that exists on the Republican side of the House. He need not worry about what the party will do for the soldiers, or with all the great problems that are confronting the country. The Republican Party has always stood for the development of the country and all its great enterprises. It has always stood for a proper compensation to labor. It has always stood for proper treatment of men who have given their blood that the country might exist, and there need be no fear anywhere but that legislation will be enacted in proper time to meet any emergency that may arise. There ought not to be any doubt about the wisdom of a recess at this time. We have reached the stage in the proceedings of legislation of the country where we can afford to take a recess. The Members of the House are all tired as the result of the hard work we have already done. They will be much better qualified to legislate when we return after they have been in the sunlight for awhile mixing with the people and understanding the sentiment of the country better than they may understand it now. It applies to Democrats as well as to Republicans. There is no serious division upon this question of the sides of the House. Everybody who has given thought to the question realizes that we ought to get away for a short period. The enactment of any legislation at this time can not advance its final passage. The Senate is busy in the consideration of the great problems affecting the peace of the world. They are not going to be able to adjust those problems without more serious consideration than they have already been able to give. Time is bound to be consumed in its consideration. Whatever the legislation we pass from this day on until the completion of the ratification of the treaty will receive no serious consideration on the other side. It can not be otherwise. It must be understood by the American people that it is so, and while we are waiting for the completion of this important work on the part of the Senate and with the House itself in the preparation of important legislation that affects the future of the Nation we can well afford to recess and meet our constituents and learn their wants to the extent that mixing with them will enable us to do. These committees will be better able to proceed while we are away on the important work they have under consideration and it will be of an advantage to the Nation to permit them to proceed with their work unhampered by roll calls, compelling them to report on the floor of this House 10 or 15 times a day. [Applause].

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN].

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I regret to differ with my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] and my distinguished friend from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] with respect to adjournment. If I thought, as the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] seems to think, that if we stayed here the next five or six weeks a Republican House and a Republican Senate would reduce the high cost of living, why, of course, I would not vote for adjournment, but I have not the confidence in the Republican House and Senate which the gentleman seems to have. [Laughter and applause.] And if I thought, as he seems to think, that this Republican House within the next five weeks would pass a genuine, sincere, helpful soldiers' relief bill, I would stay here and fight until I was as "bloody as an ox" before permitting the Republicans to adjourn this House [laughter], but I know the Republicans will not pass any such bill in the next five or six weeks. I know that if we did pass a proper soldiers' relief bill now it is impossible for the Senate to consider it a moment before the last of September or 1st of October, and an adjournment for five or six weeks will not delay the passage of a soldiers' bill. I know the Senate will not consider either the prohibition-enforcement bill, which has been referred to, or the soldiers' bill, or the reduction of the high cost of living, or any other important bill, before September 15 or October, because from now until that time, if not longer, it will be discussing the league of nations, with which, of course, the House has nothing whatever to do. But how about the soldiers' bill? The bill which the Republican committee considered is the Mondell bill.

Gentlemen, when the House adjourns, if Mr. MONDELL and other Republicans in favor of that bill, and all of us who are considering that bill, will go home and talk to the soldiers in every section in our districts, I believe we will find that the soldiers do not approve that bill—that they prefer a different plan and bill. If we go back and talk to the soldiers and our people, when we come back here we will report and pass a better bill. [Applause.] I want to tell you how I look at this thing of adjournment. I have not as much confidence in the Republicans of this House as those two gentlemen have. I am one of those gentlemen who believe the less time the Republicans stay in session and in control of this House the better it is for the country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I am one of those Democrats who believe that every day the Republicans are out of this Capitol they have one day less opportunity to do harm to this country. [Applause.] The big mistake of that resolution is that it does not provide for adjournment until the first Monday in December. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a question in line with what has been stated in reference to the bill? I have been informed that the committee before which this has been pending has reached a conclusion on the terms on which the bill will be reported, and it will probably be reported before we adjourn. Can the gentleman from Wyoming confirm that information?

Mr. MONDELL. The bill has not yet been reported and is not on the calendar.

Mr. FERRIS. The committee has authorized it.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, my own judgment about it is that we ought to pass this resolution. I would like to see it extended a week or two. A few more days like yesterday in this town will put a good many people in the hospital. There is no question about it. I believe men work better when they are in good physical condition, and this intense heat of Washington puts everybody in bad physical condition. Such days as these a man is only partially efficient—not over 50 per cent. There is wisdom in the old saying that a bow constantly strung soon loses its resiliency. It is also true of the human mind. There is such a thing as brain fag.

I thoroughly sympathize with the speeches made by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS]. It was very unfortunate that those three Republican Senators held up necessary legislation in the last Congress and thereby compelled this extra session of Congress. [Applause on the Democratic side.] While I am not the political adviser of the Republicans in this House, my judgment is that for the purposes of 1920 you would have been better off if you had let us keep the House and the Senate of the United States in this Congress. One thing dead sure, you have not made any political capital in this House in this session. [Applause on the Democratic side.] As a matter of fact, you have lost caste. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I am as much in favor of doing something for the soldiers as any man living. There is nothing too good for them. I think the suggestion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] was very wise—that we get home and consult with our soldiers about this so-called Mondell bill, or Lane bill, or whatever you want to call it, and about certain amendments gentlemen have in their heads to offer to it, or perhaps to offer as a substitute for it.

So far as the cost of living is concerned, it must be remedied soon or there is going to be all sorts of trouble in this country. Individually, I am in favor of penitentiaring every profiteer in the land [applause]—I do not care whether he is a big profiteer or a little one. He is on a par with thieves and robbers. I received a letter from a very good man in my district this morning, and in it he said that nobody ought to object to the packing houses making a profit. I wrote and told him that I did not object to any man making money honestly, provided he did not skin me and the rest of the people by the money he was making. And that is the way I feel about it.

These bills have not been perfected. Some of you have forgotten a thing or two. Congress has been practically in session ever since Taft was elected President in 1908. We never have had but one long vacation in all those years, and that was in 1915, and we expected every day then to be called together all during that nine months. No one dared to make a contract that would take very much time during that period. Everybody knows the habit of the United States Senate. There is no harm to talk about that. It seems to have taken originally for its motto festina lente—hasten leisurely.

When I was a boy down in Kentucky one of our amusements was to catch dry-land terrapin. They would draw up in their shells, but when we would put a coal of fire on it they would light out like Ten Broeck or Mollie McCarty. The Senate is the same way. When it gets too hot for those elderly gentlemen over there to stay here they speed up a little. Everybody on earth knows that the one thing the American people have their minds fastened on, whether they are for or against it, is this proposition the Senate is debating now—the league of nations. The people themselves would not be willing for the Senate to sidetrack that thing in order to get at any other species of business that is pending over here. I am as certain of the fact that I have just stated as I am that I have got to die some day.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a couple of more minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Whether they think it is a universal cure-all or whether they do not think it is a cure-all, or whether they think it is a humbug, the people want it settled. [Applause.] If the Senate really wanted to commend itself to the American people, they would get through with the debate over there in as short order as it is possible for the Senate to get through with a debate on a great question.

Individually, I want to go home. Of course the Speakership is a very confining office. There is an idiotic rule in this House that should be repealed, to the effect that the Speaker can not appoint a Speaker pro tempore for more than one day. Consequently he must stay here almost constantly. Eight years is a long time, and I want to get home and get reacquainted with my constituents. [Applause.] All the rest of you who have been here during all these years are very much of the same opinion. There is no use to haggle about it. Even if the Democrats did not want to adjourn, the Republicans have the votes with which to pass this resolution. So far as I am individually concerned, I am going to vote for it. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri seems to be of the opinion, speaking from a strictly political standpoint, as I understand it, that our party would have been advantaged had the Democratic Party remained in power in both branches of Congress. Well, that is a matter of opinion. It is always a question of opinion as to whether a party gains more political advantage by the continued mistakes of the other party than by meritorious legislation on its own part and for the benefit of the American people. [Laughter and applause.] But forgetting for the moment, as I hope we shall forget continually, the partisan side of it, and thinking of the matter only from the standpoint of the good of this great country and its people, of course it is much better for them that they be spared the continued mistakes of the Democratic Party and have the benefit of the wiser legislation of the Republican Party. And evidently that was the thought of the American people when they rendered their decision last November. [Applause on the Republican side.]

We have the responsibility, and we shall not shirk it; but we expect a considerable amount of assistance from gentlemen on the other side in the discharge of our responsibility, although from time to time gentlemen will talk and act otherwise. Just now we agree with them, as they agree with us, that as matters now stand the public business will be advanced and advantaged and benefited by the recess we propose.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MAPES, Mr. DOWELL, Mr. DALLINGER, and Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas rose.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was passed, and move to lay that motion on the table. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves to reconsider and lay that on the table and, without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BUSINESS.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as under the rules of the House this is District day I had hoped that the day would be devoted to the consideration of bills on the calendar reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia. There are some important bills on the calendar reported by that committee. I recognize, however, the superior importance of bills on the calendar reported by other committees, and in recognition of that fact, and after consulting with those more responsible for the transaction of the business of the House, I have determined not to ask the House to take up District bills to-day. But it is hoped that later in the week a day may be set aside for the consideration of District bills, and with that in mind I shall not ask the House to take up District bills to-day. [Applause.]

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE OF WICKERSHAM AGAINST SULZER.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to call up House resolution 105, a privileged resolution, in the case of Wickersham against Sulzer, the contested-election case from Alaska.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa calls up a resolution which he states is privileged, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me to file a privileged report?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

PENSIONS.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa has yielded to me for the purpose of submitting a privileged report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana submits a privileged report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLAND submits a report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions to accompany the bill (H. R. 7539) to provide for monthly payment of pensions, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] submits a privileged report.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, is the last report a privileged report?

The SPEAKER. So the gentleman from Indiana stated. The Chair did not examine it. It is a general pension bill.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. It is a general bill from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. MANN. Just to save rights, I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois reserves all points of order on the bill H. R. 7539.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE OF WICKERSHAM AGAINST SULZER.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] sumbits a privileged report from the Committee on Elections No. 3, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution (H. Res. 105) authorizing an extension of time for taking testimony, arranging orderly procedure, and providing other relief in the Alaska contested-election cases.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to the fact that this resolution is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the resolution be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. What is this?

Mr. DOWELL. It is a resolution for the purpose of extending the time for taking testimony in the Wickersham-Sulzer contested-election case. It is the unanimous report of the committee, and I think it can be disposed of in a very few moments.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Does this resolution belong on the Union Calendar? It is a House Calendar resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not looked at the resolution, but the Chair is informed that it involves a charge on the Government in forwarding election returns and in calling soldiers for testimony, thereby involving expense.

Mr. DOWELL. I think it does involve expense.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa to consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved (1) That the time for taking testimony in the contested-election case from Alaska, James Wickersham, contestant, wherein the contestee, Charles A. Sulzer, died on April 15, 1919, two days before the issuance of the certificate of election to said Sulzer, be, and the same is hereby, extended for 90 days from the date of the passage of this resolution; (2) that contestant, Wickersham, shall have the first 40 days thereof in which to take his necessary additional testimony, which shall be taken as near as may be in the manner provided by the present statutes governing the taking of testimony in contested election cases by notice served on the successful candidate in the special Alaska election of June 3, 1919; (3) the candidate who is successful in said special election to have the next 40 days in which to take testimony in opposition to contestant's claim to the election of November 5, 1918, and in support of his own right to be seated by virtue of said special election; (4) the contestant, Wickersham, to have the final 10 days in which to introduce rebuttal in both elections; (5) that the successful candidate at the special election may, if he wishes, on notice to contestant, cross-examine all those witnesses whose testimony the contestant has heretofore taken without notice, which testimony shall stand as contestant's examination in chief of said witnesses; (6) that the governor of Alaska and the custodian of the election returns and attached ballots of the election of November 5, 1918, be, and he is hereby, commanded and required forthwith to forward by registered mail to the Clerk of the House of Representatives the whole of the election returns and all attached papers and ballots of the election of November 5, 1918, for inspection and consideration as evidence by the House of Representatives in said contested-election case; (7) and if either the contestant or the successful candidate at said special election of June 3, 1919, desires the returns of that election introduced in evidence, it may be done under the same authority and in the same manner as is provided by this resolution for securing the returns of the election of November 5, 1918; (8) that any notice which contestant would be required to serve on said Sulzer, deceased, to take testimony of any witness mentioned herein, or to be called to sustain any allegation in contestant's case or any other notice which contestant might be required to serve on contestee, if living, may be served with the same legal effect on the successful candidate at the said special election; (9) and any notice which the successful candidate at said special election might find necessary to serve to present his case under either said elections may be served on contestant; (10) that the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested and required to order by telegraph immediately on the passage of this resolution that said 40 soldiers named and whose Army status is described in the certified list, dated June 11, 1919, signed by the War Department officials, and which list is attached to the application of contestant for the passage of this resolution, be assembled at the office of the commanding officer of the United States military cable and telegraph in the town of Valdez, Alaska, within the 40 days' period for taking testimony by the contestant, then to be examined under oath by contestant or his attorney or agent in the manner provided herein touching the matters and things alleged in the notice and statement of contest on file in this House and in this cause, and that each of said soldiers be, and he is hereby, required and commanded to state on said examination if he voted at said election on November 5, 1918, for any candidate for Delegate from Alaska to Congress, and if so, to state specifically which candidate he voted for, and the testimony of all witnesses shall be reduced to writing, signed by the witness, verified, and returned to the Clerk of the House of Representatives for use in these causes in the manner provided in the laws of the United States relating to contested elections as modified by this resolution.

With committee amendments, as follows:

On page 1 of the printed resolution, amend by striking out, in line 9, the words "necessary additional," and by striking out, at the end of said line 9 and the beginning of line 10, the words "as near as may be."

On page 1 amend by adding after the word "on," in line 12, the words "George B. Grigsby."

On page 2 amend by striking out, in line 1, the words "the candidate who is successful in said special election to," and by inserting in lieu thereof the words "said George B. Grigsby shall."

On page 2, line 6, amend by striking out the word "to" and insert in lieu thereof the word "shall."

On page 2 amend by adding after the word "rebuttal," in line 7, the word "testimony."

On page 2 amend by striking out all of paragraph 5 which includes the figure "5" at the end of line 7, and all of lines 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 down to and including the semicolon following the word "witnesses."

Also amend by renumbering the paragraphs accordingly.

On page 2 amend by adding after the word "candidate," line 21, the words "said George B. Grigsby."

On page 3 amend by adding after the word "on," line 7, the words "said George B. Grigsby."

On page 3 amend by adding after the word "which," in line 9, the words "said George B. Grigsby."

On page 3 amend by adding after the word "either," in line 11, the word "of."

On page 3 amend by striking out the words "and required," in line 13.

On page 3 amend by striking out the word "said," in line 15, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "the."

On page 3 amend by striking out the words "in the manner provided herein," in lines 23 and 24.

On page 4 amend by striking out, in line 1, the comma after the word "cause" and insert in lieu thereof a period, and by striking out all after the word "cause" in said line 1, and by striking out all of lines 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5.

On page 4, line 6, amend by inserting before the word "the," in line 6, the figure "10" and by capitalizing the word "the."

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, if no one desires time on this resolution, I desire to make a brief statement, and then I shall move the previous question.

It appears that in the election of 1918 James Wickersham and Charles A. Sulzer were both candidates for Delegate from Alaska. On the 17th of April the canvassing board determined that Sulzer was elected and issued to him a certificate of election. It appears, however, that Sulzer died two days prior to the issuance of the certificate. Thereafter Wickersham, who desired to make a contest, served notice upon the Clerk of this House of his desire to make a contest, and afterwards proceeded to take testimony ex parte for the purpose of establishing his right to a seat as Delegate. However, at the time of the expiration of the 90 days from the serving of notice upon the Clerk he had not secured sufficient testimony, and a resolution was introduced in the House and referred to the Committee on Elections No. 3 asking for further time to take testimony in the case. The facts were set forth in an affidavit filed by Mr. Wickersham upon which the resolution was based. To this resolution the committee made two important amendments, the others being mostly corrections and to make the resolution comply with the conditions existing after a special election was held in Alaska and Mr. Grigsby was elected as a Delegate to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Sulzer.

On page 2 the committee struck out paragraph 5, which relates to ex parte testimony.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry there?

Mr. DOWELL. Certainly.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman refers to this as "ex parte" testimony. Paragraph 5, which the committee have recommended to be stricken out, merely confers upon the successful candidate the right to cross-examine witnesses. How can such testimony be called ex parte testimony?

Mr. DOWELL. The purpose of the committee was not to use the ex parte testimony already taken in the case.

Mr. GARD. I do not understand how testimony can be called ex parte where there is the right of cross-examination.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman will notice that on page 1 the words "necessary additional testimony" are stricken out also.

Mr. GARD. I understand that.

Mr. HUDSPETH. It is the testimony taken prior to the special election that the committee propose to strike out—the ex parte testimony taken prior to the special election—in the contest of Wickersham against Sulzer.

Mr. DOWELL. If the gentleman will read the paragraph on page 2, line 11, he will notice that it says:

Which testimony shall stand as contestant's examination in chief of said witnesses.

Mr. GARD. I do not think that is a very good expression; but I think the phrase—that the successful candidate at the special election may, if he wishes, on notice to contestant, cross-examine all those witnesses whose testimony the contestant has heretofore taken without notice—should be allowed to remain.

Mr. DOWELL. But all the testimony must be taken hereafter.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARD. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given 10 minutes' additional time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Iowa be extended 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARD. I think the gentleman is probably in full accord with what I am trying to arrive at. It seems to me that there should be no restriction on the part of either of these persons in the cross-examination of any witness.

Mr. DOWELL. There certainly is none in the law or in this resolution. There is a provision here in this resolution which permits notice to be given under the same conditions and in the same manner as provided in the statutes. The only thing that will be done by striking out this paragraph will be to prevent the contestant from using ex parte affidavits and to permit the contestee to cross-examine these witnesses.

Mr. GARD. I do not think the gentleman's resolution goes to the extent of prohibiting the contestant from using these affidavits as testimony, but it does go to the extent of prohibiting the successful candidate from cross-examining the witnesses. There is nothing in this resolution, as I see it, which prevents the contestant from using this testimony which the gentleman calls ex parte testimony. If that is the intention, it should be expressed clearly.

Mr. DOWELL. The only thing we are trying to do here is to permit the contestant and contestee to proceed to take the testimony for the next 90 days as though no contest had been made heretofore.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Under this resolution no testimony taken heretofore can be introduced before the committee. The first 40 days the contestant is to have for the taking of his testimony, and after that is the contestee. Is not that the fact?

Mr. GARD. I desire to make further inquiry. I call the gentleman's attention to line 3 on page 3 of this resolution, where this language appears:

That any notice which contestant would be required to serve on said Sulzer, deceased.

Does not the gentleman think it would be better to say—any notice which contestant would be required to serve on said Sulzer, if living—rather than "deceased"?

Mr. DOWELL. I will consent to that amendment.

Mr. GARD. There could not be any notice under the terms of the resolution, because Mr. Sulzer is now dead, and you can not serve notice on a dead man.

Mr. DOWELL. I will ask unanimous consent that the amendment suggested by the gentleman be made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the adoption of an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GARD: In line 3, page 3, strike out the word "deceased" and insert in lieu thereof the words "if living."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDSPETH. For the benefit of some gentlemen on this side I will ask this question: If the taking of this testimony should force Mr. Grigsby, the contestee, into the cold period, then it was the unanimous understanding of the committee that they would give the contestee, Mr. Grigsby, further time. Is not that the fact?

Mr. DOWELL. That was on the theory, as I understood it, of 60 days; but now it is only 40.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I understood from the committee that if Mr. Grigsby did not complete his testimony under the time given for the resolution the committee would give him further time.

Mr. DOWELL. They did consider that, if further time was needed; but I think there was no agreement. If the gentleman desires to amend by giving him more time, I have no objection.

Mr. HUDSPETH. No; but I believe they will give him that time if he needs it.

Mr. DOWELL. I think the committee has not agreed to that, and I would not make any such agreement now.

Mr. HUDSPETH. That is my understanding—that they would give him additional time if needed—if the cold period set in before he could take his testimony.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to talk on the merits of the pending resolution. Apparently we have Alaska on our hands for the future, and may have an election contest from that far-away place every two years, or oftener if it is possible, and it might be just as well to consider the question of procedure. This is a simple House resolution, introduced and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, which had no jurisdiction, reported back to the House, and placed on the Union Calendar, where it did not belong, and is now up for consideration. These things are not material, but at some time they might be very material. The Committee on the Judiciary was not entitled to consider a resolution of this sort. It does not change and can not change the law. A simple House resolution can not change the law.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. GARD. I do not believe it was ever reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. I may be mistaken, but I do not think so.

Mr. DOWELL. It was never before the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MANN. I do not know; all I know is what the pending resolution says:

Mr. VESTAL submitted the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

Reported with amendments, committed to the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

If nobody knows where it came from, still worse.

Mr. VESTAL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. VESTAL. This resolution was introduced and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MANN. That is what I said.

Mr. VESTAL. This morning I found it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and I asked for a rereference, and it was referred to the Committee on Elections No. 3.

Mr. MANN. They have not found it out in the Clerk's office, and there is another mistake. I do not know where it is.

I want to say that in my judgment it did not belong to the Committee on the Judiciary, nor does it belong on the Union Calendar. It may involve an expenditure of money, but the House can not make an appropriation of money, the House can not involve the Treasury Department in an expenditure of money which is not already authorized to be expended. Sometime this contested election might be in a case highly partisan, with a very even division in the House, and it might make a great deal of difference as to how it was considered. Considering a bill in the House and considering a proposition in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union sometimes is a very important distinction. While there has been no ruling by the Speaker that this is a Union Calendar proposition, I do not want it to go as a precedent either that the Committee on the Judiciary has jurisdiction of a matter relating to the election of a Member or that the Union Calendar is to consider resolutions which may provide for taking testimony in contested-election cases.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman one question. Can the gentleman refer me to any case parallel to this?

Mr. DOWELL. I can not; I have not found one exactly like it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 21, after the word "Valdez," insert the words "Sitka and Fairbanks."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, in Alaska, as everybody knows, the distances are very great between centers of population. Since the committee reported this resolution we are advised that it would be very desirable that the soldiers mentioned in the resolution, who are to be used as witnesses, might be assembled at three different points—Valdez, Sitka, and Fairbanks—rather than at Valdez alone. I will say that Valdez is 600 miles distant from Sitka, and Fairbanks is 450 miles distant from Valdez.

Mr. GARD. I would suggest to the gentleman that he make a further amendment by striking out the word "town" and inserting the word "towns."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I am glad of the suggestion, and I ask unanimous consent to add that as a portion of my amendment, that in line 21 on page 3 the word "town" be stricken out and the word "towns" be inserted in lieu thereof.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I think that amendment should be adopted. I move the previous question on the amendments and the resolution.

Mr. GARRETT. Let us first vote on the amendment.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question? I did not hear all of the discussion.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the addition to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 21, strike out the word "town" and insert in lieu thereof the word "towns."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I have another amendment that I desire to offer. On page 1, line 6, I move to strike out the word "ninety" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred and forty," and in line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "sixty"; on page 2, line 4, strike out the word "forty" and insert the word "sixty," and in line 8 strike out the word "ten" and insert the word "twenty." I think, in view of the fact that this testimony must be all taken at this time, more time should be given to both the contestant and contestee.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VESTAL. Yes.

Mr. GARD. I have no criticism of the extension of time, but is it not a fact that an additional contest notice has been now served by Mr. Wickersham on Mr. Grigsby, so that there are two of these contests before the committee?

Mr. VESTAL. This is really, I think, all one contest.

Mr. GARD. And there is not anything to prevent a full consideration of that which is put in in the second contest, is there?

Mr. VESTAL. No.

Mr. DOWELL. I think the resolution permits all the testimony to be taken to be used in either of those cases.

Mr. VESTAL. Both elections.

Mr. GARD. But, as a matter of fact, since Mr. Grigsby has been seated in the House there has been another notice of contest served on him, and that in effect takes over all this, does it not, so that really this resolution is not very necessary?

Mr. DOWELL. I doubt that. I think the Sulzer-Wickersham contest should have a resolution to continue the time for taking testimony.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "ninety" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred and forty"; line 8, same page, strike out the word "forty" and insert "sixty." Page 2, line 4, strike out "forty" and insert "sixty"; line 8, same page, strike out "ten" and insert "twenty."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose this amendment. I want to state that this report is a unanimous report from the Committee on Elections No. 3. I would state further that this amendment was discussed in the committee, and if it is adopted it will force Mr. Grigsby, the contestee, to take his testimony during the cold weather that prevails in Alaska, and he will not be able to do it in the time allotted to him. As the resolution reads, the contestant, Mr. Wickersham, is given 40 days and the contestee, Mr. Grigsby, 40 days, and the last 10 days of the 90 days Mr. Wickersham has to offer his rebuttal testimony. This amendment is unfair to the contestee, and it was voted down in the committee. I therefore oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana. I want to state, further, that on this committee I saw no evidence of partisanship on the part of any member. As the resolution is reported it is with a unanimous report from the Committee on Elections No. 3. I think it ought to be adopted as it was reported.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I did not suppose that the offering of this amendment simply extending the time to both the contestant and the contestee would raise such a rumpus. I supposed it would be simply giving them both more time in which to take testimony.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VESTAL. Not now. All that the House cares about and all that I care about is to have the matter thoroughly understood and the proper man seated. It does not make any difference to me which man wins. If there is any objection on the other side to having more time, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I suggest an amendment on page 3, line 8, to strike out the word "may" and insert the word "shall" and to make the same amendment on line 13, so that the contestee and the contestant must serve their notices on the respective parties without question.

Mr. DOWELL. The language proposed is not as it might be, and I think there is no special necessity for the amendment, although I have no objection to it.

Mr. RAKER. Then I offer that as an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAKER: Page 3, line 8, strike out the word "may" and insert the word "shall," and in line 13, at the end of the line, strike out the word "may" and insert the word "shall."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. DOWELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO SIT DURING RECESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is this a privileged resolution?

Mr. DALLINGER. It is from the special committee appointed to investigate the eligibility of Victor L. Berger to a seat in the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the special committee authorized under House resolution No. 6 to investigate the right of Victor L. Berger to be sworn in as a Representative from the State of Wisconsin, be authorized to sit during the sessions and recesses of the present Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

PARTIAL REPORT FROM COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it be in order for the Select Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, on Tuesday, July 29, 1919, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of the business upon the Speaker's table, to present a partial report, together with a House resolution accompanying the same, which resolution is as follows:

"Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States of America, That the Secretary of War be and is hereby requested to place on sale, without delay, the surplus food products in the hands of or under the control of the War Department now stored in the United States, under such plan as will safeguard the interests of the Government and insure an opportunity to the people of the United States to purchase the same directly from the Government."

That said report and resolution, together with the minority report accompanying the same, shall be thereupon read, after which there shall be four hours allowed for debate, one-half to be controlled by the chairman of said committee and one-half by the ranking minority member thereof, Mr. FLOOD, of Virginia, and said debate to be confined to the subject matter of the report and resolution. At the conclusion of said general debate, the resolution shall be read for amendment, and upon the conclusion thereof the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon said resolution and any amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, it is estimated that there is over $200,000,000 worth of food in the possession of the War Department that is a surplus, and that this surplus is accumulating from day to day as soldiers are discharged. The purpose of this resolution is to direct the Secretary of War to sell that surplus food now held by the War Department. This, I trust, will reach the question raised by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], who manifested so much anxiety this morning about the high cost of living. He stated that no action was being taken with a view to reducing the cost of living. This is for the purpose of aiding immediately in the reduction of the cost of living, and it is hoped that a measure of relief may be effected by placing this surplus food upon the market.

Mr. ASWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will.

Mr. ASWELL. Is not the Secretary of War selling these foodstuffs now as rapidly as he can find purchasers?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is a matter that will probably be discussed to-morrow.

Mr. ASWELL. But the fact is he is selling them wherever he can find purchasers.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And yet many people have endeavored to get some of these foodstuffs and can not get them. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question——

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield to me one minute?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield the gentleman one minute.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, there is no contest so far as the minority is concerned upon this resolution. The necessity of the resolution will be discussed when to-morrow comes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

SARAH LOUISE IRBY.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer the privileged resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 202.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Sarah Louise Irby, clerk to the late Hon. J. W. RAGSDALE, a Representative in Congress from South Carolina, at the time of his death, July 22, 1919, the sum of $220, being an amount equal to one month's salary of a clerk of a Representative in Congress designated, under the resolution now regulating the same, at $2,400 per annum and bonus.

The following committee amendments were read:

In line 6, strike out the figures "220" and insert in lieu thereof "120," and in line 9 strike out the figures "2,400" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,200."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

MESSENGER FOR COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 92.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, until otherwise provided for by law, compensation at the rate of $1,000 per annum for the services of a messenger to the Committee on the Judiciary, in lieu of a janitor at $720 per annum now authorized, such messenger to render services to said committee both as messenger and janitor.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL MESSENGERS, HOUSE POST OFFICE.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 138.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, until otherwise provided for by law, compensation at the rate of $1,200 per annum each for the services of four additional messengers in the House post office for the collection and delivery of mail in the House wing of the Capitol.

The committee amendments were read as follows:

Line 4, strike out the word "four," and in lines 5 and 6 strike out the words "for the collection and delivery of mail in the House wing of the Capitol."

So the resolution will read:

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, until otherwise provided for by law, compensation at the rate of $1,200 per annum each for the services of additional messengers in the House post office.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Certainly, sir.

Mr. GARRETT. Why the necessity for the committee amendment? Is this to leave it possible to have an unlimited number of messengers?

Mr. IRELAND. Oh, no; no, sir. Three. We reduce it from four to three.

Mr. GARRETT. Perhaps I misunderstood the reading of the resolution. I understood it just struck out the four and left it unlimited.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think the reading by the Clerk perhaps left the impression——

Mr. GARRETT. I did not hear anything about three.

Mr. MONDELL. That the number was not limited, but evidently it is intended, of course, to limit the number to three.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk tells the Chair that apparently by an inadvertence the amendment inserting the "three" was not inserted.

Mr. IRELAND. Then, Mr. Speaker, that is a clerical error, and I ask unanimous consent to amend it as amended by the committee, in order to make the resolution conform to the action of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution as amended by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 4, after the word "of," strike out the word "four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "three"; strike out all of the remainder of the resolution after the word "office," in line 5, so that it will read:

"Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, until otherwise provided by law, compensation at the rate of $1,200 per annum each for the services of three additional messengers in the House post office."

Mr. FERRIS. That is the amount that the messengers are receiving at present, the regular messengers there?

Mr. ASWELL. What is the necessity for the additional messengers?

Mr. IRELAND. A heavier mail in the post office, and just at present the postmaster is throwing mail himself, and he is paying three additional men there out of his own pocket, amounting to $12 a day, and at the compensation the postmaster receives he can not stand that very long. I might say further that the postmaster has no adequate additional help.

Mr. ASWELL. How has he managed heretofore?

Mr. IRELAND. Last year we granted one additional employee, I am sure, if not more than that. I remember one. Of course, the mail service has become a great deal heavier.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Certainly.

Mr. GARD. This contemplated increase of messengers means those who deliver mail around to the offices in parts of the House Office Building?

Mr. IRELAND. They are so assigned, I believe.

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman think that at this time, in view of the near approach of the adjournment, we should go ahead with these three additional messengers, when the Members will not be here for five weeks?

Mr. IRELAND. I think the gentleman will be convinced, if he will go over the situation, that they are necessary. I was really very much surprised.

Mr. GARD. I merely made that expression in view of the fact that we are going to quit for five or six weeks. Now, we bring in a resolution for three messengers at a time when no Members will be here.

Mr. RAKER. Will they not need the additional messengers because the Members will leave?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I have never noticed a diminution of my mail because I was not here, and it takes more clerks to handle the mail and jacket it and send it to me than for the ordinary delivery when Congress is in session and Members are here.

Mr. GARD. These messengers will have to do the actual delivery around the corridors and offices?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It will be delivered to their offices, as their secretaries will be there, no doubt.

Mr. RAKER. In addition to that, where you request the mail to be sent home these messengers will send it.

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. How long has the postmaster been paying this out of his own pocket? Two weeks?

Mr. IRELAND. I do not know.

Mr. RAKER. Will this resolution protect him for what he has paid out?

Mr. IRELAND. No.

Mr. RAKER. Is that fair?

Mr. IRELAND. I hardly know how it can be handled.

Mr. RAKER. I wish to say that he has been giving very efficient service.

Mr. IRELAND. He has been performing about 18 hours a day of actual work.

Mr. PARRISH. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit, I would like to ask him if that is a unanimous report?

Mr. IRELAND. It is not. I know that there was an amendment offered to make it two additional instead of three.

Mr. PARRISH. I was called out and was not there.

Mr. IRELAND. There was not a record vote on it. I can not recall accurately or positively about it, but do not believe the committee report was unanimous.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

REPEAL OF TAXES ON ICE CREAM AND SODA WATER.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House resolve itself in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2837) to repeal the tax on ice cream and soda water.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the House resolve itself in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 2837. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT. Does that require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It does not, but the gentleman asked unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman proceed in the regular way?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can make a motion.

Mr. FORDNEY. I move, then, Mr. Speaker, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 2837.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. KITCHIN. Pending that, let us see if we can not get an agreement as to time.

Mr. FORDNEY. Pending that, Mr. Speaker, I want to agree upon the time. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] wishes to have 40 minutes on a side on general debate. I will agree to that.

Mr. KITCHIN. To be confined to the bill.

Mr. FORDNEY. And one half of that time to be controlled by myself and the other half by the gentleman from North Carolina, the general debate to be confined to the subject matter of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that debate be limited to 40 minutes on a side, half to be controlled by himself and half by the gentleman from North Carolina, to be limited to the bill.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is recognized.

Mr. CANNON. The motion is not to go into Committee of the Whole, then?

The SPEAKER. Pending that. Really, the House had voted to go into committee.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of such importance that I desire to not obstruct the consideration of it, but it comes fresh for the first time in print this morning. The House ought to have a quorum here, and every man ought to stay here, so that we can understand it. However, it can be made on the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The motion has been made. The Chair stated that the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole had been agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I can make the point, then, if that has been done, that there is no quorum present, and I am going to insist that there be a quorum present in good faith, in order that we may act understandingly. I do not understand what this bill proposes to do.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to raise any technical points of order to delay matters, but if the Chair had announced that the House had resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, it would not then be in order to put the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY]. But I have no desire now to interfere with the request, but I suggest in the interest of orderly procedure that——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the exact condition. The gentleman moved that the House resolve itself in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the Chair put the question, and stated that the ayes had it; and then if the gentleman wished to ask unanimous consent it should have been done earlier, pending that motion. But the Chair, thinking it was the unanimous desire of the House to accommodate him, allowed the gentleman to put his unanimous-consent request, although technically it was too late.

Mr. GARRETT. I will make no point of order, Mr. Speaker. Has his request been put?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan that there shall be debate of 40 minutes on a side?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] makes the point of no quorum on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CANNON. I will make the point that there is no quorum. I would rather have the doors closed than to put the gentleman to the trouble of moving a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. Therefore the call is automatic. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absent Members. Those in favor of going into Committee of the Whole——

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, that motion has been adopted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair misunderstood the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT. I made no point of order, Mr. Speaker, on the request of the gentleman coming at the time it did.

The SPEAKER. The Chair misunderstood the gentleman. If the gentleman makes a point of order, the Chair sustains it, that it is too late to make the point of no quorum. The House goes into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] in the chair.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I gave notice that I wanted a vote on the proposition that the House go into Committee of the Whole before unanimous consent was given.

Mr. ASWELL. The gentleman made that request after the vote had been announced.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman did not understand the Chair. The Chair stated that the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House had been agreed to, and was so stated by the Chair, so that it was too late. Then the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] asked unanimous consent. The Chair understood the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] to say that he would not make the point of order, so that the Chair put the question and allowed the gentleman to make the point of no quorum. The Chair misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, in order to put myself correct——

The SPEAKER. It was a misunderstanding entirely. The Chair is not criticizing the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT. I did not make the point of order against the gentleman from Michigan requesting unanimous consent after the House had voted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair misunderstood the gentleman. The Chair supposed he would not make the point of order that the House had already voted to go into Committee of the Whole. The House automatically goes into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] will take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 2837, with Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 2837, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2837) to repeal section 630 of the revenue act of 1918, approved February 24, 1919.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 630 of the revenue act of 1918, approved February 24, 1919, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] to have a full attendance when he makes his remarks. I do not know whether there are a hundred Members here or not, but I will make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eight gentlemen are present, a quorum. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] is recognized.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the Committee on Ways and Means have reported this bill, which, if enacted into law, will repeal section 630 of the so-called new revenue bill. It repeals nothing else in the law but the tax on ice cream and soda water at the fountain.

The estimated amount of taxes that will be collected from those two items is $21,000,000; $9,000,000 on ice cream and $12,000,000 on soda water. The Committee on Ways and Means have also reported a separate bill to repeal taxes upon fruit juices, loganberry juice, grape juice, and apple juice. The committee also wish to take up in succession, after this bill has been disposed of, a bill to place an import duty upon chemical glassware, optical glassware, surgical glassware, and surgical instruments. The committee have had hearings for several weeks on those bills, and find that those articles are the products of what might be called war industries, and that it is very necessary that speedy action be taken to protect those interests from destruction by ruinous competition from Japan and Europe.

The committee have also reported favorably upon a bill to repeal Canadian reciprocity. Canadian reciprocity was passed by Congress in 1911. That same year or early the next year that bill was rejected by the Canadians, but it remained upon our statute books, and at any time that Canada wishes to accept the provisions of that treaty it would become a law, which would practically mean free trade between the United States and Canada. The Committee on Ways and Means have thought it advisable at this time to repeal that act, it having remained on our statute books since 1911.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Is it not true that the Underwood Act by implication repealed the Canadian reciprocity measure?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; it is not. But it does place upon the free list some articles that would have been placed on the free list by Canadian reciprocity if that act had been accepted by the Canadians. The Underwood tariff law has put on the free list wood pulp and print paper and many other things.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I am not sure but that the gentleman will find one or two decisions of the courts holding that the Underwood bill at least by implication repealed the Canadian reciprocity law.

Mr. FORDNEY. My opinion is that it does not repeal the law, and if there is any doubt about it we should make it plain and positive that this bill will repeal Canadian reciprocity.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. With all due deference to my friend from Tennessee [Mr. HULL], to whom the gentleman from Michigan just yielded, and for whose legal opinions I have the highest respect, I can hardly see how a court could make such a decision, because the Canadian reciprocity provision never could go into force and effect until accepted by Canada, and therefore there would be nothing, it seems to me, for the court to base such a decision upon.

Mr. FORDNEY. And it has not been accepted by Canada, and so far as I am concerned I do not want it to be accepted by Canada. I was always opposed to Canadian reciprocity, and am more clearly of the opinion now that it was a mistake and would be a mistake to enact it into law. Our tariff rates to-day are the lowest of those of any principal country in the world. The ad valorem rate on imports to-day is about 5 per cent. Some months it runs a little more, some months a little less. In the month of April the average ad valorem duties collected were 4.85 per cent on imports coming into the United States. That, in my opinion, borders very closely on free trade.

I want to make a very brief statement, and then I will yield to some other gentleman.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Is the committee considering the advisability of taking the tax off of moving-picture show tickets?

Mr. FORDNEY. All those matters are before the committee, but have not been acted upon. Several bills for the repeal of the so-called luxury taxes are pending before the Committee on Ways and Means, but these two are the only ones that have been acted upon.

Further, the committee have reported a bill to put an additional import duty upon tungsten, and several other bills are pending; for instance, a bill for a duty on dyestuffs, and the committee expects this week to make a report on an increased duty upon imported dyestuffs. The question is being considered as to whether or not a licensing feature shall also accompany the bill affecting the duties on dyestuffs. So far we have been unable to agree, but we expect to report a bill of some kind before the end of the week.

Mr. ROSE. Does the committee have under consideration a tax on the importation of Mexican fuel oil?

Mr. FORDNEY. I believe there is such a bill before the committee. We have not had hearings upon it, but expect to consider it in the near future.

Mr. ASWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. ASWELL. Has the committee considered the repeal of the tax on mixed flour, filled cheese, and oleomargarine?

Mr. FORDNEY. In the last Congress a very determined effort was made to repeal the tax on mixed flour. I opposed it very strenuously, and will do so as long as I live, because if that tax is repealed it will open the door wide to fraud. To-day under existing law the tax on mixed flour is under the supervision of the Government. I will say to the gentleman from Louisiana that nothing has ever been mixed with wheat flour for the purpose of making bread which was not a cheaper article than the flour itself, and it never will be.

Mr. ASWELL. Does not the gentleman believe that now is the good time to give some cheaper food articles to the people of this country and those of other lands?

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, I will say to the gentleman that when his party came into power six years ago there was no complaint about the high cost of living, and now gentlemen are shouting at the top of their voices asking the Republican Party to lower the cost of living which was brought about by the gentleman's party. [Applause.]

Mr. ASWELL. And your party voted for all the bills.

Mr. FORDNEY. We will attend to these matters when we reach them. We are going to remain in power. We have the confidence of the people, and we are going to show you how to run this Government in a practical manner.

Mr. ASWELL. The gentleman's party had that opportunity once for 16 years, and did not succeed.

Mr. FORDNEY. We were getting along admirably until you fooled the people into putting you into power, but you could not fool them all the time.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. McPHERSON. I should like to ask the gentleman if the committee have considered and will report out, at an early date, a bill that has been introduced providing for a duty on zinc ore and the products of zinc?

Mr. FORDNEY. Such a bill is before the committee, and I am very heartily in favor of putting the necessary tax upon imported zinc ores, in order to revive the zinc industry in Missouri and Wisconsin, where the mines have been closed down because of free trade on zinc ore. I pledge the gentleman my unwavering support to revive that industry by putting an adequate tax upon imported zinc ore coming into this country from Mexico, which has closed down the mines in Missouri.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. When does the gentleman hope to accomplish that result?

Mr. FORDNEY. I should like to see the Democrats of the committee join with us in a meritorious act like that, but whether they do or not time will tell, and the Republicans are going to report a bill which will do that, mark what I say.

Mr. GARNER. I repeat my question. When may we hope for the "meritorious measure" that the gentleman speaks of?

Mr. FORDNEY. Ask me something easy. There are many bills before the committee, and I do not know when we can report these bills. I have but one voice and vote among 25 men on that committee, and I expect to see the undivided opposition of the gentleman's party to the proposition for a duty on zinc ore. Am I right or wrong? I will ask the gentleman that question.

Mr. GARNER. I can not speak for the party or for anyone except myself. It depends on the rates that you put on.

Mr. FORDNEY. We will put a reasonable rate on.

Mr. GARNER. If he will put a reasonable rate on, I will join with the gentleman.

Mr. FORDNEY. Good.

Mr. GARNER. Of course, the term "reasonable" is somewhat elastic.

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not wish to discuss this matter any longer, but would yield to some one else, unless some one desires to ask a question.

Mr. MONAHAN of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. MONAHAN of Wisconsin. This morning I received signed petitions representing practically all of the lead and zinc industries of southern Wisconsin, Illinois, and Iowa asking for a tariff on lead and zinc ores, which I filed with the committee.

Mr. FORDNEY. I thank the gentleman for his statement.

Mr. GARNER. May I ask the gentleman a question before he takes his seat, in order that the committee and the House may understand the policy of the Committee on Ways and Means with reference to internal-revenue taxation? This is a proposition to repeal section 630?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. What will be the policy with reference to the repeal of other provisions of the internal-revenue law, such as the candy tax and other bills that have been introduced?

Mr. FORDNEY. I can not speak for the committee. I do not know what the committee will do in respect to reporting any other taxes, except that we have reported favorably a bill to reduce the tax on loganberry juice and grape juice and apple juice—fruit juices.

Mr. GARNER. May I get the gentleman's individual opinion about his policy with respect to these measures?

Mr. FORDNEY. I can hardly give it to the gentleman at this time. I will cross that bridge when I come to it.

Mr. GARNER. May I inquire in reference to the zinc-ore proposition? The gentleman says that he is willing to give adequate protection to Wisconsin and Missouri and Oklahoma and Kansas zinc-ore interests.

Mr. FORDNEY. On zinc ores.

Mr. GARNER. May I ask the gentleman what the policy of his committee will be with reference to a general revision of the tariff?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] is a member of the committee himself; and all this is out of order.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Michigan has the floor, and I think he can take care of himself without the assistance of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve my opinion upon those matters until later on. I will ask the gentleman from North Carolina to use some of his time now.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time to the gentleman from Louisiana as he desires.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am heartily in favor of the bill under consideration to repeal the taxes on ice cream and soda water; but there are other taxes whose repeal is vastly more urgent and important. The cost of food products is rising higher and higher and still higher. The price the producer receives as compared with the price the consumer pays reveals clearly that thieves, robbers, and highwaymen, under the euphonious name of profiteers, are still abroad in the land, rampant at our very doors. The remedy for this evil is pitiless publicity through the Department of Agriculture, which is not functioning in this important matter now. Yet the Congress sits supinely by and takes no drastic action. If there were ever a time, that time is now, when the Congress should strike straight for the protection of the consumers and the toilers of the country. There are prices of food products that can be easily and directly reduced. I refer to the reductions proposed by H. R. 7160, which is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7160) to repeal the internal-revenue taxes upon wholesome foods and the special license taxes imposed upon producers and dealers in such wholesome foods.

Be it enacted, etc., That all laws and parts of laws which impose internal-revenue taxes upon wholesome foods and special license taxes upon the producers of and dealers in such foods be, and the same are hereby, repealed: Provided, That such wholesome foods shall be produced and distributed in compliance with the provisions of the Federal food and drugs act approved July 1, 1906, and the Federal meat-inspection act approved July 1, 1906, and the food-control act approved August 10, 1917, and the regulations made pursuant to said acts.

This bill or similar bills have been pending before the Committee on Ways and Means for years, and still the Committee on Ways and Means refuses to act. These wholesome and nutritious foods—oleomargine, filled cheese, and mixed flour—are by inexcusable taxes kept out of reach of the poor people of the country. Why does the Congress sit here inactive on this subject and permit millions of people literally to suffer for the want of food when these outrageous, obnoxious, inexcusable, and indefensible taxes can be and should be immediately repealed by this Congress? I for one am not willing for the blood of starving children to rest upon my hands. Gentlemen of the Committee on Ways and Means may refuse to report this or similar bills to the House and the House may refuse to act, under Republican control, but let the responsibility rest where it belongs and let the country know the facts.

The purpose of the bill to which I refer is to enlarge the production and distribution of wholesome foods.

The items particularly affected are:

First, oleomargarine; second, filled cheese; third, butter; fourth, mixed flour.

Oleomargarine is universally declared to be a wholesome and nutritious food.

The internal-revenue law does not concern itself in any way with the sanitary or wholesome qualities of this food. The taxes imposed on the product and the special license taxes imposed upon producers and dealers yield an insignificant net revenue to the Government. In fact, this law was not intended as a revenue producer, but was intended to prevent the production of this food altogether, or compel its production in unpopular forms.

How well these purposes are accomplished appears from a comparison with the annual per capita production in countries which import our oils and cattle feed, but which impose no taxes or licenses:

Holland produces 66 pounds, Denmark 44 pounds, Norway 35 pounds; America produces 3½ pounds per capita of this wholesome and nutritious food.

Our Government and foreigners may withdraw tax free either colored or uncolored as they may choose. They take all colored, while our own people, who are compelled to choose between a pleasing food and extraordinary taxes and licenses on the one hand and a less pleasing food and lower taxes and licenses on the other, take all uncolored.

It is impossible to understand any just reason why our own people should be practically forbidden the use of this wholesome food in the most desirable form which science and skill can produce it. It is confidently believed that if our own people had the same free access to this food which the Government and foreigners have, much larger quantities of it would be consumed, and much of the edible oils which now go into other uses and much of the skim milk which is now wasted would be conserved for its production. In many sections of the country small surpluses of milk are produced, but not sufficient to sustain creameries. If freed from the revenue burdens and dangers, these localities could establish oleomargarine plants, which would have sufficient volume to sustain overhead expenses, and furnish good market for the milk surplus and large quantities of edible oils.

Drs. Vernon Kellogg and Alonzo E. Taylor have probably given as wide and patriotic study to the question of human food as any other two living men. In their book, The Food Problem, published by the Macmillan Co., they point out:

An intensive development in dairying in the indirect sense has been evolved in Europe, but has received little attention in this country. This is the combining of the processes of making butter and margarine. In this country butter is made from cream secured by the centrifugation of milk, and the skimmed milk is then either fed to swine or thrown away—thrown away, unfortunately, to a very considerable extent. In Europe this skimmed milk is used for the further manufacture of margarine. Vegetable and animal fats in proper proportion, largely vegetable fats, are mixed with the skimmed milk and churned out just as butter would be. In this way a very good product is obtained, which has flavors derived from the milk. * * *

(Page 150.)

It is necessary in the United States to increase the consumption of vegetable oils. * * * They must be passed through some sort of a fabrication in order to give them physical qualities that are in themselves desirable. There is not enough butter to go around. * * *

(Page 151.)

Viewed properly, margarine and butter are not competitive; they are supplementary. * * * The dairyman and creamery should manufacture margarine, just as they manufacture butter, butter being the product of the primary churning, margarine the product of the later churning.

II.

Filled cheese is an excellent substitute for meat. It is made by coagulating a mixture of skimmed milk and edible oils in the usual manner of making cheese.

The act of June 6, 1896, utterly destroyed this industry. Here is a so-called revenue law from which the Government collects not a cent of revenue and a needed wholesome food is outrageously outlawed.

More than 15,000,000,000 pounds of skimmed milk is practically wasted every year. Half the food value of the milk is thus lost. Large quantities could be profitably conserved by combining it with the edible oils. Filled cheese will remain fresh and palatable for long periods of time and may be easily transported long distances. There can be no patriotic or economic reason for prohibiting the production and distribution of this wholesome food. There should be a filled-cheese factory in connection with or in the vicinity of every creamery.

III.

Butter is defined by the act of May 9, 1902, as the food product made exclusively from milk or cream, or both, with or without common salt, and with or without additional coloring matter.

The pure-food law declares that a food is adulterated: If any substance has been mixed with it so as to reduce or lower its quality; or if it consists in whole or in part of a filthy, decomposed, or putrid animal substance; or if it is the product of a diseased animal.

So far as the provisions of the revenue law relating to butter are concerned, it does not matter how filthy, decomposed, or diseased butter is, nor how variegated the color and shape of different lots. It may be bought and sold in such forms free from tax and license; and an examination of the market reports will convince that low grades constitute a large percentage of the available supply.

But if one melts or clarifies this butter, so as to put it into uniform packages, and so forth, then he must pay licenses, give bonds, and subject himself to extraordinary penalties, and pay a tax of one-fourth cent per pound and call his product "renovated butter." Curious inducement for improving food.

If, furthermore, one mixes, reworks, rechurns in milk or cream, refines, or in any way produces a uniform, purified, or improved product from different lots or parcels of butter or butter fat in which any substance is used with the effect of deodorizing or removing rancidity, then he must call this purified and improved product "adulterated butter." He must pay annual license, as manufacturer, $600; wholesaler, $480; and retailer, $48, and give heavy bonds. This phase of the revenue law is such an assault upon the common sense that, I understand, it is practically ignored by both the Departments of the Treasury and of Agriculture and the public. So that practically all the great cream centralizers constantly use both substances and methods for deodorizing and neutralizing the different lots or parcels of butter fat which they buy and mix and refine so as to produce a uniform purified product.

If such uniform, purified, or improved product is still unclean, unwholesome, or unnutritious, then its production and distribution ought to be and is prohibited by the pure-food law.

If it is a safe and beneficial food, then no burdens should be laid upon it.

I understand from the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that no one voluntarily takes out a license to manufacture or distribute "adulterated butter." On the contrary, this license is used as a sort of refuge for those who, without moral turpitude, are discovered to have incorporated excessive moisture in otherwise good butter.

The dual responsibilities imposed by law upon the Departments of the Treasury and Agriculture respecting butter have produced much confusion in the industry. I believe the provisions of the pure-food law will give reasonable protection to consumers against excessive moisture, filth, and disease, and that the Bureau of Internal Revenue should not be troubled with a law not intended to produce revenue, but intended, and having the effect, to restrain the increased production of improved food.

IV.

Mixed flour is not permitted, under the pure-food law, to contain any impure, unnutritious, unclean, or unwholesome product. The highly nutritious corn, cottonseed, peanut, and other flours are more pleasing and better preserved when backed with a considerable percentage of wheat flour.

The tax burdens imposed upon mixed flour yield but little revenue and greatly restrict the enlarged use of this improved food.

GENERAL OBSERVATIONS.

If any of these foods are unclean or unwholesome or fraudulent, their production and distribution is prohibited by the pure-food law. The Department of Agriculture, in conjunction with the Department of Justice, is authorized and equipped to enforce this law. An excellent system of cooperative inspection of foods is being rapidly developed between the Department of Agriculture and the several State and municipal bureaus of inspection.

If these foods are clean and wholesome, the Government should lay no restraining hand upon their production and distribution in the most scientific and economical methods and in the most palatable forms.

They are all specially adapted to the needs of the toiling masses, who not only need good, cheap foods, but who have the least time and facilities for the proper preparation of food.

Taxes upon food must be borne not according to ability to bear but according to necessity to eat, which is an inhumane basis of taxation.

The pure-food law prohibits false or misleading labels and brands.

The revenue provisions add nothing to the protection of the consumer; they add nothing substantial to the revenues; their enactment was procured by selfish interests before the value of these foods was understood by the public and before the development of the more scientific and practical methods of the pure-food law.

They therefore ought to be repealed, and repealed now. Let the country know the man who opposes such repeal and thus withholds food from hungry children!

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, the Civil War lasted four years, and the Federal Government during that time had approximately 3,000,000 men in the field. Yet the cost of the Civil War was not quite $5,000,000,000. In the present war we have spent approximately $19,000,000,000. I have never made the calculation myself, but I have been informed that not more than a billion minutes of time have elapsed since the birth of Christ. The Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Glass, last week issued a statement in which he said that our public debt is approximately $30,000,000,000; that is, our debt is $30 for every minute of time that has passed since Jesus walked upon the blue waters of deep Galilee. That is a vast sum, an appalling sum, but it has to be paid or repudiated, and the United States will not repudiate any debt. In order that this principal sum may be reduced and the interest paid, it is necessary that we raise taxes. In order to raise taxes for that purpose, almost, if not quite, every article which is used and consumed by the American public must pay a tax. The proposition here is to repeal the tax upon soda water and ice cream. I believe that if a man deliberately fills his stomach full of such stuff he should pay a tax on it, in order to help pay the debt that we have incurred during this war, and the man who sells it should also pay a tax.

If Members of Congress could investigate the filthy, insanitary condition of many soda fountains and ice-cream receptacles, particularly in cities and summer resorts, and then take into consideration the enormous profit made on the sale of these products, I do not believe this tax would be repealed.

A soda fountain is primarily an apparatus for storing, cooling, and drawing carbonated water and for storing flavoring material for such water and for keeping what is called ice cream. There are also receptacles for washing glasses, spoons, and other utensils used in operating a soda fountain.

The whole is usually surrounded by attractive bars of mirrors and marble to give a fetching setting to the entire thing. There is a base, called a refrigerator base, in which is stored ice to cool the extras, usually beverages that are sold in bottle form and called soft drinks. These fountains vary in length from 6 to over 100 feet and will average about 20 feet in length. The price of soda fountains varies from $500 up, and some manufacturers claim to have received as much as $25,000 for a single apparatus.

Soda water is purely an American drink and has never become popular in foreign countries, although much money has been spent in attempting to introduce it in other lands.

My information is that the first soda fountain was made by John Matthews in New York in 1860, and ice cream soda was first introduced to the public by Robert M. Green at the Philadelphia Exposition in 1876.

The basis of soda water is carbonated water, a mixture of carbonic acid gas and water. This is mixed in an apparatus which usually is placed in the cellar of the store where soda water is sold. The carbonic acid is contained in a steel tube and placed under a pressure of about 1,200 pounds, and this tube is attached to a carbonator, which is a steel tank, either lined or washed with block tin. Attached to this tank is an automatic pump usually operated by electricity. The water is pumped into the steel tank into which the carbonic acid gas has previously been allowed to enter. Only a small amount of this gas is allowed to enter at a time, until the pressure gauge shows a pressure usually from 100 to 225 pounds, according to the will of the operator. After the water has become impregnated with the gas it passes through a block tin pipe to the coolers in the soda fountain, and these coolers are made of brass tubing, lined on the inside with block tin and washed on the outside with tin. The water stays in these coolers until—sometimes—it is cooled, and then passes into a block tin pipe which connects with the draft arm, from which it is drawn into the glass for the drinker.

The flavors are usually kept in porcelain jars and the sirup is forced out of the jars by a metal pump consisting of a spout and plunger rod and a sirup cup. The ice cream (so called) is kept in a cabinet insulated with cork, lined usually with tinned copper, with a galvanized-iron jacket to hold the ice cream can, which is usually made of steel and washed with tin. Tin is used wherever carbonated water comes into contact with metal so as to prevent forming of verdigris. Such is my information as to soda fountains from a reliable source.

My information is also to the effect that the insanitary condition of soda fountains is appalling. They can be kept clean, and generally are on the outside, but if one will examine the inside of them, especially in cities, most of them will be found to contain slime, especially around the sirup jars and wherever ice is, and especially around the ice cream the dirt that generally accumulates around the storing of ice will be found, and if the fountain be opened up a dirty, sour odor can be detected. If soda fountains are not given the proper attention the tin wears off, the water comes in contact with the other metal and forms verdigris, a deadly poison. It is rare that a sufficient amount of verdigris gets into the system to cause death, but numerous cases of ptomaine poisoning have been traced to soda fountains. Just imagine a steel tank tested to 500 pounds steam pressure being allowed to rust away—the shell becomes thin and then the explosion. Numerous persons have been killed or injured by these explosions. Soda water is often dispensed by an incompetent class, who think of profits only and are not particular about their own cleanliness, and the drink is usually dispensed in glasses not always well washed and seldom washed in hot water, only dipped in cold water, which often becomes dirty and greasy from repeated using.

Most any competent physician will state that milk is one of the greatest producers of germs, and epidemics of typhoid fever have been traced to the improper keeping of ice cream.

Some persons claim that the business can not stand taxation. That seems to be what every business claims.

The present system of taxing soda water and ice cream is a poor system, and the matter of how much tax a dealer shall collect is left to his honesty or dishonesty, as the case may be.

It is preposterous to talk about repealing this tax, but I presume it will be done. The sale of ice cream and soda water and soft drinks generally will greatly increase when the prohibition law becomes effective, and if the tax is properly laid and collected it will eventually yield nearly or quite as large a revenue as was collected from the taxes on liquor. Various estimates have been made as to the amount of money spent in this country for ice cream and soda water, and it has been placed as high as $500,000,000 annually. I have been informed that one concern which makes a sirup to be used at soda fountains claims to sell $6,000,000 worth of this sirup annually. This drink is retailed at 5 cents and costs 2 cents a glass, so about $15,000,000 annually must have passed over the counters for this one drink alone.

In the cities especially, the soda-fountain proprietors are among the worst and most conscienceless profiteers.

Prior to 1914 numerous places in this and other cities sold ice-cream sodas at 5 cents a glass, and now they have a minimum price of 15 cents a glass, and at some places it is 20 and 25 cents a glass.

The average price of a gallon of ice cream is from $1 to $1.25, and a quart of ice cream usually makes 12 glasses and sometimes 20 glasses of soda water. An average of 2 cents for the ice cream will cover that cost, and add to this 1 cent for flavor and a quarter of 1 cent for carbonated water, and the cost of the material contained in a glass of soda water is 3¼ cents, and it is sold for from 15 to 25 cents a glass, and the dispensers of soda water have the unlimited nerve to ask for the repeal of the tax.

Maybe some of you gentlemen think the soda-fountain proprietors are poor and should not be taxed. There are many such places where $100 per day is counted a poor day's receipts. In New York, in the Wall Street section, there is a man who makes a business of opening soda-fountain places in office buildings. Fifteen years ago the proprietor was a poor man, but now he and his son own apartment houses in New York and Brooklyn, bought with profits from the business.

The receipts of the soda fountain in Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, are estimated to be from $150 to $250 a day. Go down town in Washington and look at the people that daily and nightly, and more especially at night, crowd these places, and then say if you think a tax should not be levied on soda water and ice cream. The soda-fountain proprietors are the people most benefited by closing the saloons, and they, as well as the consumer, should be made to pay a tax. The consumer is lining the pockets of the soda-fountain profiteers with gold in this and other large cities. The soda-fountain proprietors should pay a tax, and the public should be safeguarded so that the price can not be raised. Soda fountains should be inspected by the Federal Government and not by local boards of health, because too often boards of health have friends in the business and permit dirty soda fountains to do business for years.

Many soda fountains are so old and out of date that they should have been discarded years ago. My information is that at a public park or summer resort near this city there is a type of fountain that the manufacturer discarded 25 years ago.

There is another branch of this business that should bear a part of the burden of taxation, and that is the dispenser of soft drinks in bottles. His goods are, to a great extent, taking the place of bottled beer, and he should pay a license and be compelled to bottle his goods in sanitary places instead of cellars and stables, as is often the case.

The manufacturers of ice cream and soda fountains and fountain sirups and other supplies and the manufacturers of carbonic acid gas should all be made to pay a tax, and the public should not be compelled to pay one penny more for ice cream and drinks.

The profits of the business will bear heavy taxation. The proposition in this bill is to repeal the tax on soda water and ice cream and retain the tax on bottled soft drinks. That is a rank discrimination against country people and people distant from soda fountains. Bottled soft drinks are largely sold in small villages and at country stores, and the farmer boy, who labors hard all the week and goes to the country store on Saturday afternoon and buys a bottle of soft drink, is compelled to pay a tax on it, while his city brother, who usually dresses in fine linen and works but little, if at all, may buy his soda water and ice cream, if this bill is passed, free of tax.

Any night in the cities one can see vast crowds of beautiful girls clad in silks and lingerie, whose hues outshine the rainbow or a Roman trireme decorated in fadeless Tyrian dyes, wending their ways to divers soda fountains and ice cream parlors, to the evident delight and large gains of the profiteering proprietors, who ply their business tax free.

And then there are the "Chollies," who are constant patrons of these places. It is delightful to see them gliding along the streets clad in the latest style corset-cut hand-me-down suits on their way to eat ice cream and drink soda water with Geraldine and Phyllis. They spend their substance in riotous ice cream and moving-picture living and other useless diversions, and if they work for the Government expect to be cared for when they become aged through such legislation as a retirement bill at Government expense, which, in my opinion, will discourage thrift and economy and place a premium on shiftlessness and extravagance. If they would dress like human beings they would look better.

In my opinion, no man in this House has in Washington City or any other city ever tasted any pure ice cream at a soda fountain, but merely a frozen mixture of thin milk and cornstarch bearing the misnomer "ice cream." We are told we must have untaxed soda water and ice cream on account of the babies. I believe soda fountains, as usually conducted, are disease breeders among children, and they are better off and healthier without patronizing such places.

I believe that in the large cities many a mother has looked for the last time at the face of her dead baby as it lay in its casket with its little hands folded in snowy grace across its breast because of disease contracted at insanitary soda fountains.

I am proud to say that no druggist or soda-fountain proprietor in my district has ever requested me to vote to repeal this tax. They are patriotic men and willing to do their part to support the Government, and willing to go to the small trouble necessary to collect this tax. In addition to that, they keep sanitary fountains and sell "sure enough" ice cream and soda water at reasonable and not profiteering prices.

A necessity is a thing indispensable to some purpose and a luxury is that, among other things, which is delightful to the taste or senses, as a delicious drink. Clothing, sugar, shoes, and other such articles are necessities and, if possible, should not be taxed at all, while ice cream and soda water are luxuries and should be taxed to help pay the burden of debt under which this Republic is now staggering.

The distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee [Mr. FORDNEY] admits that if the tax on soda water and ice cream is repealed the Government will lose on that account $21,000,000 per annum in revenue, but he and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], and all other Republicans, are eloquently silent as to what articles will be taxed to supply this deficiency. Will they put more tax on shoes, on sugar, on clothing, and other necessities? They do not say. They do not know, and are stumbling about in taxation darkness or are afraid to say. Taxed sugar, taxed clothing, taxed food, taxed shoes, taxed necessities generally, and free soda water and ice cream will, I presume, be the shibboleth and rallying battle cry of the Republican Party, and at the end they will find themselves where Moses was when the light went out—left and in the dark.

Our Republican friends are inclined to mix soda water and ice cream and politics all in one hotchpotch and seem to want to fling the soldiers in for good count. They arrogate to themselves a corner on all the wisdom and patriotism of this Republic.

One Republican Member on the floor of this House, as a sop to the soldiers, "ariz" from his seat and with the apparent wisdom of a tree full of owls solemnly proclaimed in a hark-from-the-tomb tone of voice that the soldiers are the greatest patronizers of soda fountains and, of course, he is for the repeal of the tax for that alleged reason.

The soldiers of this Republic are brave men. Their courage has been fully tested on bloody battle fields. They are willing to perform to the utmost their civil as well as military obligations. Our soldiers are not infants in swaddling clothes crying for the Republican Party as a wet nurse to feed them untaxed ice cream and soda water out of its political spoon. Such claptrap will not catch the soldier vote and is a reflection on their intelligence.

Other Members have bewailed alleged Democratic extravagance and have joyfully boasted how a Republican senatorial filibuster saved the Government a million and a half dollars that had been appropriated by the last Democratic House, when they know full well that filibuster had no such purpose in view, but its purpose was, if possible, to embarrass the President. The Republicans have made much noise over this matter, but verbal gymnastics and bodily contortions do not produce evidence, and loquacious vehemence is not argument. Nearly or quite every mothers' son of them in the House at that time, and most of them are here now, voted for this same appropriation of a million and a half dollars, which they claim was saved to the Government by the patriotism of a Republican senatorial filibuster, and therefore it logically follows as the night follows the day, according to their contention, that they rejoice and are exceeding glad that a Republican senatorial filibuster saved them from the consequences of their own folly in voting for these appropriations.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that our Government is $30,000,000,000 in debt and it will require more than a billion of dollars annually to pay even the interest on this vast sum, and in view of the further fact that $21,000,000 in revenue per annum will be lost by the repeal of the tax on ice cream and soda water without any known articles other than necessaries to tax to supply the deficit, I do not believe this tax should be repealed, but, on the other hand, should be increased. I believe that necessaries as far as possible should not be taxed, and that luxuries should be taxed to bear the expenses of the Government.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of repealing this section 630 of the revenue law. I would further vote to repeal these taxes they put on patent medicines and drugs. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] stated that we had spent a great deal of money. We spent more than he said. The facts are that, not including the loans of $10,000,000,000 to our Allies abroad, this Government spent $22,000,000,000 as war expenditures, and the Secretary of the Treasury has notified the American Government that three and a half billion dollars more is to come in the way of loan certificates. Of course, there will be heavy expenses in the future if a halt is not called. I contend that Congress can adopt some economic methods without taxing poor little children that go to the soda fountains to get 5 cents' worth of ice cream or chocolate. You have put a war tax on every town and hamlet in the United States in the hot summer days when these little fellows want to get a refreshing drink of soda water. The Federal Government reaches out its strong arm into the little fellow's pocket and not only takes the tax from him but it may make him go home without his soda water or ice cream, because daddy did not give him more than 5 cents.

I am going to vote to repeal this obnoxious taxation. The idea of continuing a tax, after the war is over, to take from every woman and child in the United States who wants a little refreshing drink or cone of ice cream in hot weather 1 cent or 2 cents as a tax is to me very obnoxious.

I would vote to take off the tax on bottled soft drinks. You put a tax on Coca-Cola and various kinds of bottled goods. Why do you not propose to repeal that tax? This taxing of the soda fountain when you can sit in a hotel or restaurant and eat your fill of ice cream with no tax on it is wrong. If a person goes to the soda fountain or in a drug store to get a refreshing drink or a little ice cream, the Government taxes the person that does it, and I am going to vote for the repeal. The trouble and expense in collecting this form of tax is too heavy for the revenue received thereby. It is a direct tax on the poor people of this country after the war has ended.

The Government should not tax the medicines that the poor and helpless must have. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from North Carolina use some more of his time?

Mr. KITCHIN. We have used on this side about 15 minutes in three speeches.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has used 13 minutes, and we have used 15.

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY].

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I am simply addressing the House for the purpose of congratulating the Republican Party. This extra session has lasted now through two months of time. It commenced with a tremendous flourish. For the first time in eight years the majority sits on the Republican side of the aisle. Reconstruction questions of tremendous importance present themselves. The question which presents itself as most important of all these questions is the question of reducing the high cost of living. It devolved upon the majority of this House to devise some method to meet that question. In eight weeks of time you have splendidly succeeded in passing those bills which you yourselves killed in a filibuster in the other House—those bills and nothing else. Framed originally by the Democratic departments of this Government, whipped into shape by Democratic committees, they were defeated in the Senate by a Republican filibuster.

You have followed Democratic leadership in passing these bills again, but it has taken you eight weeks to do it. We have just been told that the country can hope for nothing in the matter of a repeal of the tax on mixed flour. That would make cheaper bread, and the Republican Party can not rise to any emergency like that. You propose now triumphantly to repeal the tax on ice cream, and you can go back to the country and say, "We have labored strenuously for eight weeks, and we have this to our credit—we have repealed the tax on ice cream." [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Of course, it is an unscientific method of repealing a tax, but it is the best you can do. You pay no attention, in repealing the soda-water tax, to the tax you put on bottled waters; you offer no substitute, because the only substitute you could offer is a substitute which will tax the rich, and you are not going to do that any more than you can help.

You propose to repeal the Canadian reciprocity act in your efforts to reduce the cost of living. Potatoes, wheat, and vegetables are selling higher than they ever were before, and yet you are proposing that they shall have no competition in our markets. You propose to repeal the Canadian reciprocity act and charge up against Canada the same tariffs that you charge against any other nation.

The time of Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY having expired, he was given two minutes more.

As a matter of fact, the country knows what is the matter. The leadership on that side has failed, absolutely failed. You can not agree with each other on any proposition. But you sent out to Illinois and brought back my distinguished friend and colleague, the former leader of the Republican Party in this House, Mr. MANN, and he suggested to you something that you could all agree on. He is reported to have said that you have been in session long enough and you had better adjourn. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] That is the only advice any leader has submitted on that side that has been accepted on that side, and you have been able, all of you, to agree on that proposition, and you have just voted to take a recess until the 8th of September. That is the best thing you can do for the country and the most statesmanlike thing you have done up to the present time.

The time will come, and it will come in the near future, when the country will understand that the President was right when he said that he wanted a Democratic Congress. He wanted a Congress that would be able to do something in this period of reconstruction. We will get that kind of a Congress in the election of next year, and the more you recess and the oftener you adjourn, with your divided leadership and your inability to accomplish anything that will reduce the high cost of living, the better for the country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I feel that I will have to ask the indulgence of Members on this side and ask them kindly to excuse our friends who have just been talking in opposition to this bill with so much rancor and ill feeling, on account of the general situation. After all, we could not expect the Democratic Members to come here good-humored. They lost the election last fall. They lost a number of old war horses. They came pretty near losing our beloved former Speaker, and I would have been loath myself to have lost him. And, as things went on, it looked as if we had lost the President over abroad, and, indeed, the lost battalion at that time, I think, had nothing on the President, surrounded as he was by the 14 points directed at him from every direction by some German, and I wondered how he could ever be rescued. Why, they lost everything they had to lose and we could not expect them to come in here good-natured. But I hardly expected they would go to the extent of telling us what we ought to do and telling us they did not like what we had done. Why, bless your souls, gentlemen, we never expected what we were doing or what we were going to do would be satisfactory to you. That is not what concerned us, but whether what we are doing is satisfactory to the American people, that is what we want to hear at the present time, and what we are doing in reference to this bill will be satisfactory to the American people. Gentlemen talk about the failure of the Republican Party to reduce the high cost of living. Why, their party ever since it went into power has been engaged in raising the cost of living, and do they expect us in a few short months to undo all that they have done in the last six years? That is a good deal too much to ask from us at this time. We can hardly be expected to do that, although we are making a start in that direction and expect to continue further.

One of the best things we have done in that way and one thing they attempted to head off was the reduction of the burdens which were upon the people by the taxation of the last Congress. That was one of the results the so-called filibuster succeeded in doing. It reduced the amount of taxes, it reduced the burden upon the American people, and this particular bill will reduce them also.

Now, with reference to this bill we have here, in the first place this ice-cream and soda-water tax is a consumption tax. It is one of the few consumption taxes that we lay. The Committee on Ways and Means in the past had a very difficult problem in levying the taxes which are necessary to carry on the Government through the war. The expenses which were incurred at that time seemed to me in many respects to have been very much higher than they ought to be—money spent, squandered, and wasted.

We wanted, if possible, to better the scheme of taxation which somewhat in haste and yet somewhat with deliberation was prepared at the last Congress, and the law which we seek to repeal, as I have said, provides for a consumption tax. It is one of the few of all our revenue measures that provide for a tax of that kind. It is the only tax that is imposed upon the poor. Of all the taxes that we impose this is the most obnoxious, the most exasperating, and the one that costs the most to collect in proportion to the amount which is received, and these are the reasons why it should be repealed.

There probably ought to be a tax in some direction levied in connection with the ice-cream and soda-water business, but it ought not to be in this form. This tax levies a cent upon the 3-cent ice-cream cone which is bought by the small children in the city, a tax of some 33⅓ per cent. It levies only the same tax upon the 10-cent sundae that is sold over the counter as a luxury perhaps, and yet, in a measure, as a food. It is unequal in its distribution of the tax. It is unjust and unfair in the way it is imposed, and it takes a great deal of trouble and pains necessary to keep track of each little penny item that is disposed of over the counter in this kind of a way, and it has added hundreds of inspectors and hundreds of agents who are the collection force. Now, if there is any tax that ought to be reviewed, that ought to be remodeled, it appears to me it is this one.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman want more time?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; I would like to have a minute more.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield the gentleman a minute more.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We have selected this particular tax to repeal for the reason that it is a tax on the children in a petty way, because it is exasperating and provoking to the parents, and because it does not amount to any great sum in its aggregate returns, because it is expensive to collect, and because it is unfair in its terms.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. DEWALT. Has your committee estimated as to what the expense is of collecting this $21,000,000?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We inquired of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and, as I understand it, he reported that it was almost impossible to separate it, because the agents who were engaged at times in the collection of this tax also were engaged at other times in the collection of other taxes.

Mr. DEWALT. Was there any truth in the estimate which I saw at one time that it is less than one-tenth of 1 per cent for the collection?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That statement can not be correct, in my judgment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Give me one more minute.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We had one of our Democratic friends, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], coming in here and wanting to know why we did not repeal this particular tax and criticizing us because we had not done something in this direction. Now our friend from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] comes in and objects because we are repealing it, and said to us, when we objected to the enormous burdens that have been laid upon the people and the unnecessary waste and extravagance that was going on in the past, we are simply raising a growl. What is this that we have heard to-day from the other side but a growl?

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, how much time did the gentleman from Iowa consume?

The CHAIRMAN. Seven minutes.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, we are asked in this resolution to repeal the tax upon soda water. I think before we repeal the tax upon soda water we might repeal the tax upon some of the necessities of life; we might repeal the tax of a cent a pound upon sugar, upon vegetables, and other necessities of life; and I think you will find when you go back home that you will be asked some questions on this subject.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EMERSON. I can not yield.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is making statements that are not correct at all.

Mr. EMERSON. I can not yield, Mr. Chairman. I do not know why the gentleman wants to butt in on my speech. I could not get time from the Republican side of the House and had to ask it from the Democratic side.

I do not think this resolution should have come in here at this time. It is inopportune. We should have repealed the tax upon freight rates, upon the necessities of life. I want to say that the most burning question before this House to-day is the question of the high cost of living, and if this House adjourns without passing some legislation upon that subject we will have some new questions to answer when we go back home.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EMERSON. I can not yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What legislation have you in mind?

Mr. EMERSON. I can not yield in three minutes, I regret to say. But, as I said before, that is the most burning question before the people of this country. More important than the peace treaty itself is the question of the high cost of living, and you will find when you go back to your homes on this vacation that they will want to know why you have not done something upon that subject. And before we repeal this tax upon soda water, which I expect we will have to do, we had better repeal taxes upon those commodities that will lessen the cost of living.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I object to the gentleman's extending his remarks in the RECORD, or I reserve the right to object, and in reserving the right to object I desire to say that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON] does so much lecturing of this House in his extended remarks that, for one, I am tired of giving him permission to continue the practice. He endeavors to lecture this body, and does more of it and less acting than any other man in the House. I want it understood that this kind of buncombe does not go with all of us.

Mr. EMERSON. I want to say if I had followed some of the so-called leaders on the Republican side of the House I would not be here now.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And I want to say that this country gets many false impressions with regard to Members of Congress. Much of this is due to the fact that some gentlemen, seeking notoriety, are constantly introducing resolutions which they never follow up. Thus the people get a false impression as to what we do here. It is the easiest thing in the world for a man who wants to bluff the public and his own constituents to come here and talk a minute and then run away when the vote is taken. I want to say that I am prepared, for one, to object to this kind of bunk whenever I see it, whether it is undertaken by a Member of the House or is put over by somebody outside. [Applause.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON] one minute.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say this: If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] will watch my vote, he will find that I generally vote about right. During the war session of Congress I voted 100 per cent correct.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. He told the public that.

Mr. EMERSON. I was nominated without any opposition at the Republican primaries in 1916, and there was no Democrat or Socialist candidate against me, and there was not a single vote cast against me in the twenty-second district of the State of Ohio; and as a Member of this House I propose to do and think and act as I believe is right. I am a Republican in principle, but when the question comes between my country and the party I am an American first. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself two minutes additional. It is to say that if the Democrats would like to have join them the gentleman who has just spoken, they are perfectly welcome to him, so far as I am concerned. They can take him to their bosom. We might be very glad to exchange him for some gentleman on the other side who has given trouble there. So far as the intense and burning patriotism of the gentleman who has just spoken is concerned, I would say that under "leave to print" he probably gets more stuff of this kind into the RECORD than any other man on this floor. He probably gets more buncombe in the RECORD on which he never votes or expects to vote than any other man on either side. If he has a constituent who wants to get a poem into the RECORD or a song which he desires to sell, the gentleman from Ohio is amenable and solicitous to get it in the RECORD and boost it. I ask Members of the House who have looked over the RECORD and the patriotic resolutions put in here by the gentleman from Ohio whether he has brought any of them up for consideration? I ask that question of the gentleman from Ohio—whether, after having from time to time introduced patriotic resolutions here, to prove his intense Americanism, he has ever gone to a committee to get action upon a single one of them?

Mr. THOMAS. We will trade Mr. BLANTON for him. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman from North Carolina desire to use some more of his time?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman care to use more time?

Mr. KITCHIN. How much time have I, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina has 16 minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has 15 minutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. When I have spoken 10 minutes, let me know, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, you have no idea how much I regret that in this debate the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has injected political and parliamentary personalities. I saw no harm in the world in what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON] said, except from the Republican standpoint. He only said that he thought this Republican House, before relieving the luxury drinkers, the soda-fountain drinkers, from any tax, ought to relieve the people of the taxes on necessities. The minute the gentleman from Ohio announced that view the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], the distinguished member of the Republican steering committee, the gentleman who carries in his vest pocket 25 votes on all questions in the Republican committee on committees, with his big influence in the House, with his high standing on the steering committee, and on the committee on committees, and on the Ways and Means Committee, at once denounces him and denies him the right to have any opinion contrary to the opinion of the House machine. He lets every Republican here who has a thought of his own, who has a conviction, who does his own thinking, know that the very minute that he crosses a decision of this Republican steering committee, the very minute that he questions the infallibility of the Republican membership of the Ways and Means Committee, the very minute he hesitates to obey the order of the Republican ring or bosses of the House, that minute some of the bosses, like Mr. MOORE, is going to condemn and denounce him on the floor and point to what MOORE did to EMERSON. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is the motive and object of the gentleman's attack. Everybody knows that EMERSON was right. Many of us take the position—and there are scores of Republicans over there in their hearts who take the position—that if, in the face of the Treasury necessity, we propose to reduce taxes, before we reduce any taxes on luxuries we had better reduce some of the taxes on the necessities which the plain millions of people must pay.

Everybody in this House knows that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] did not have anything personal against the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON]. Everybody knows that Mr. EMERSON made a patriotic speech expressing his sincere conviction, and that what he said was right and proper. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania, speaking for the Republican bosses of the House, made the vicious attack on the gentleman from Ohio as a warning to every other Republican that when he dares to express an opinion or raise his voice contrary to the opinion or orders of the bosses he is going to catch what EMERSON caught. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I regret exceedingly that the gentleman from Pennsylvania should see fit to make that speech. But, gentlemen, I am glad that there is one Republican—and I know there are more—who has got the coufage to make a statement like that made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON] on this floor. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, do not take up my time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Did the gentleman from North Carolina read the speech of the gentleman from Ohio before he gave him permission to make it?

Mr. KITCHIN. I did not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Was it satisfactory to the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. KITCHIN. I did not know what was in his speech or what he was going to say.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman know why the gentleman from Ohio went to the Democratic side to get time to make his speech?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; I understood he came to the Democratic side because the Republican side—his own side—did not have the common fairness to let him—one of their own members—have even a minute's time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. He wanted one minute in which to extend his remarks.

Mr. KITCHIN. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me any more.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will not interrupt the Member having the floor without his consent.

Mr. KITCHIN. Now, about the bill. I want every Republican and every Democrat to know that this bill is nonpartisan; that is, Democrats can vote for it, if they wish, and violate no Democratic principle, and Republicans can vote for it, if they want to, but if they vote against it they will know what will come to them from Mr. MOORE and the other bosses. [Laughter.]

The real purpose of this bill reported out by the Republican members of the Committee on Ways and Means is not economic; it is not to reduce revenue, though the reduction will be $21,000,000. It is political. It is to get the votes of the fountain soft-drink dispensers. If anybody on this side thinks that the Republicans should not have a monopoly in playing politics with a few druggists and other soft-drink venders, he, of course, has the right to play politics, too; that if he wishes to support a Republican political measure whose result will be to further increase the deficit, which will necessarily be very large, between expenditures under the appropriations passed in this Congress and receipts during the fiscal year, by at least $21,000,000, he can do so. But some of us do not favor this bill just as it is. Some of us know that the condition of the Treasury does not justify reduction of taxes at this time. Some of us believe, just like the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON], that if you are determined to reduce taxes now; that if you are determined to further increase the deficit, instead of reducing or repealing the taxes on luxuries, you should reduce or repeal the taxes on the necessities. Why not first take the tax off of freight bills? The freight tax is a tax upon the necessities of life. Every man, woman, or child that consumes or wears an article of any kind has to pay that tax. It is charged to him in the price of the article purchased. Whether it is meat, or bread, or hats, or shoes, or any other article, he pays that tax. The freight tax is a direct tax upon the commerce of the people. Why not repeal the tax on passenger fares? This, in most cases, is a tax on a necessity. The poorest widow in this country may be forced to take a train to visit some sick person in her family—a daughter or a son or other member of her family—and yet she has got to pay 8 per cent tax on the price of her railroad ticket, regardless of how far she is going or the price of the ticket.

Why not take the tax off toilet soap, which the people must use as a necessity, and which the Republicans ought to use more than others? [Laughter.] Why do you Republicans want to put an obstacle in the way of a man or woman washing himself or herself? [Laughter.]

If you are bent on reducing the taxes and making wider the deficit between collections and expenditures, why not take off the tax from medicines, which the people, especially the poor people, use? To many of the poor these taxable medicines are necessities. Whenever the necessities of the revenues and the condition of the Treasury will justify a reduction of taxes, these taxes which I have mentioned should be first repealed, and certainly before we repeal the tax on pure luxuries, such as this bill does. The whole propaganda for this bill was sent out from Chicago. They sent out printed petitions for such a bill to all druggists and soft-drink fountain proprietors, with request that they get the signatures of their customers. These were signed on request by people who never thought about the condition of the Treasury or how badly the tax was needed by the Government. All know that one can get up a petition for anything—that everyone almost without exception will sign any petition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used 10 minutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. These printed petitions were sent to these soda-fountain people and druggists, and every fellow who came in to buy a drink was asked to sign this petition, but the fellow who signed the petition never thought one moment what it meant, or of the Government's revenue necessities, or the increase of deficit the repeal would make.

Otherwise I do not believe the druggists and soda-fountain proprietors in my State or in any other State and I do not believe the people who pay this little 1 or 2 cent tax would have signed the petitions. They did not know that the Treasury Department says that to meet the necessary expenditures of the Government this year it needs all the taxes that can be collected under existing law and strongly advises Congress not to repeal any tax unless it can supply the amount to be lost by such repeal from some other source. It knows and every intelligent man in this House knows that if the Government expends the amount appropriated by this Congress for this year there is going to be a deficit of more than $1,000,000,000 between the receipts from all taxation under existing law and from all other sources and such expenditures. How can we, as honest, patriotic legislators, justify a reduction of taxes, especially on luxuries, in the face of this deplorable fact?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I can not yield now. This tax which you propose to repeal for political purposes, like other taxes, goes into the common fund not only to support the Government in maintaining its necessary functions, but to pay war debts, interest on war debts, to relieve the widows and orphans of the boys who fell in France, to help out the boys who returned home maimed and crippled for life—the boys who had their legs and arms shot off and their eyes shot out on the fields of Europe, while those who are protesting against the tax remained home, out of danger, making money.

Some druggists came to my office the other day, one of whom I happened to know, to protest against this tax. They said they came as the representatives of their association. I said, "Do your customers, the people who buy the drinks, protest against it?" They said, "No; not that." I asked if their trade was falling off by reason of the tax. They said "no." I said, "Then what is the matter with it?" They said, "Oh it is so much trouble to collect and separate the tax money—to make out the report to the Government and send in the money." I then explained the amount of our estimated expenditures for the year, the amount of receipts we will have from all sources, and the amount of the big deficit we will have.

I then said, "Did it ever occur to you that this money which you collect from your customers, who do not object, goes into the general fund to help pay the expenses of the Government, to help pay the huge war debt we incurred for supporting the Army in France and the interest on it, that it goes into the common fund to help support the widows and orphans of the brave boys that lost their lives in France, to help support and make life tolerable for the boys who return home maimed and crippled for life?

"As you say, the tax is simply a question of trouble with you. Did you ever think of the trouble these boys went to for our country in leaving their homes and families and friends, going

2,000 miles across the sea to face German guns, who went to the trouble of having their legs and arms shot off, who went to the trouble of having their eyes shot out and their bodies blown to pieces for you and me, who remained at home? Do not you believe that it is only fair that you should go to a little trouble for these heroic boys by collecting this small tax from the people who are willing to pay and sending it to the Treasury in Washington?"

One of them said, "Mr. KITCHIN, we never looked at it this way. We did not know the facts. We are going back and tell our people that it ought not to be repealed, that the Government needs every cent of the tax, that 'the boys' need it, and that we ought to be glad to take the trouble of its collection." Not a druggist in my district, not a man in my district who indulges in soft drinks, has urged the repeal of this tax.

It would be a reflection on the druggists in my district and the men and women and children in my district who drink at the fountains, after they know the facts, to say that they oppose this little tax. When they know the facts the druggists will be proud to collect the tax. The purchaser of soft drinks will be proud to pay the tax. The people in my district know what these boys did. They know the glory with which these boys covered the Nation. They know the trouble that these boys went to, 2,000,000 of them, across the sea. They know what their country did in this tremendous war. Our druggists and soft-drink dispensers are willing to go to the trouble of collecting the tax and sending it to the Treasury, and our people are willing to pay the little 1 or 2 cents tax.

Mr. Chairman, how can any man in this House justify taking this tax off the city fellow who goes to the fountain to get his drink there while leaving the tax on the bottled drinks that the country grocery man keeps to sell to those who are not accessible to the city fountains? How can one justify his vote in keeping the tax on the bottlers—on the soft drinks put up in bottles—and exempting from the tax their competitors, the fountain-drink vendors? The argument for exemption of the bottlers is stronger, if anything, than that of the fountain-drink makers.

Mr. Chairman, let me say that no one appeared before our committee to give us any reason why this tax should be repealed. This is legislation by petition. When it is learned by voters throughout the country whose product bears an excise tax that the Republican Ways and Means Committee and the Republican House can be persuaded for political purposes or be intimidated by stereotyped petitions to repeal a tax for the special benefit of a few protesters, the offices of Members, and especially the rooms of the Ways and Means Committee, will be filled with petitions secured by all the producers and manufacturers and dealers to repeal the tax on their products. The candy, the bottled drinks, the chewing gum, the sporting goods, the musical instrument, the automobile, the toilet soap, the cosmetics, and proprietary medicines, producers and manufacturers and dealers will be here with their protests and petitions. The jewelers will be here. The moving-picture proprietors will be here. They all can show the Republicans the good politics in the repeal of their tax. If not, they can do as much intimidation as the soft-drink fellows did. Every reason and argument that can sustain or justify a vote for the repeal of the tax on soft drinks proposed in this bill can be made with equal force and justice for the repeal of every one of these luxury or semiluxury taxes. I can not see how any fair-minded Member can vote for the repeal of the one and not of the other. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I sincerely regret that any ill-nature should have developed during the course of the debate on a bill like this. Why, gentlemen, this is a bill designed to bring sunshine into the home. It is a bill to dispel the dark clouds hovering over these poor little children who want to get a small ice-cream cone or perchance a glass of soda water on hot days and have to pay the Government a tax of 10 per cent on it. I am sure this ill-nature which has developed upon my side is only preliminary to a shaking of hands and a restoration of the complete Republican harmony that always prevails between Ohio and Pennsylvania. [Applause.] I also greatly regret that anyone should have taken occasion to inject any politics whatever into this debate. I have been in this House 16 years, and never have I consciously injected politics into the debate on any great question [laughter on the Democratic side], unless possibly somebody started something.

Mr. LANKFORD. Or thought they would. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] said that the Republican Party in this Congress had found it impossible to get together on any matter. I might call his attention to the fact that every Republican Member of this Congress was united on saving one billion and a half dollars to the American people in the first two months of the session. [Applause on the Republican side.] I could further call his attention to the fact that the Republicans on this side of the House will shortly show that they are united in the abolition of this most obnoxious of all consumption taxes placed in the last revenue bill when our friends were in the majority.

But I am not discussing this matter from a partisan standpoint. I agree with the gentleman from North Carolina that in the repeal of any of these taxes we must have serious thought ahead of how we propose to pay the Government's bills. I think the gentleman from North Carolina and I are almost in accord on the proposition that the actual expenses of the fiscal year 1920, the year upon which we have embarked, will be greater than the total amount of revenue that will be raised by the law under which we are now operating, much less the law which for the coming year reduces automatically the income on profit taxes and others of the largest revenue-producing taxes by one-third.

I think the gentleman from North Carolina and I agree that there will be a deficit in the fiscal year of 1920 of over one billion dollars. In my judgment it will be nearer two billion, and perhaps more than two billions. I do not myself look forward with any degree of pleasure to going out six months from now and making Liberty-loan speeches. The public is not going to take very kindly to Liberty-loan speeches so long after peace is concluded.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. What is the gentleman's remedy for the situation? You are proposing to repeal certain taxes and in justice to the country you and your associates should give us some idea of how you are going to run the Government for the fiscal year.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is a legitimate question which the gentleman asks. That is why I said we must go slowly and carefully in the repeal of any tax. I know that the gentleman from North Carolina is not in favor of the repeal of freight and passenger taxes. He was induced by a distinguished member of my delegation, who gave him the inspiration to make the speech he did, of repealing the freight and passenger tax, but the gentleman knows it would cost hundreds of millions of dollars, and he is not able to offer any substitute for it.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am prepared to vote for the repeal of the freight tax before voting for the repeal of this.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I did not say that. The gentleman said he was in favor of repealing that tax. The gentleman, who is one of the great authorities in this country on matters of revenue, can not offer a substitute.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman from Ohio recollect what particular substitute the gentleman from North Carolina offered for the loss of the hundred million dollars due to the repeal of the luxury tax put through the last Congress?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not recollect that the gentleman offered any substitute. I think that we ought to repeal some of these very onerous consumption taxes. I am not prepared to offer an alternative, but I can offer an alternative which will raise about half of what we will lose by this law, and that is the bill the committee is now considering on the question of dyestuffs. The higher protective revenue features of that bill united with the license system will bring in, in my judgment, a revenue of seven or eight million dollars, and it might be more.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a practical question aside from politics?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman realize that in the repeal of this law it is going to create in the country an idea that you can get consumption taxes repealed and every Member of Congress is going to be deluged with petitions and letters asking that taxes be taken off baseball bats, baseballs, automobiles, candy, patent medicines, and so forth, and is it desirable to have Congress flooded with these requests by virtue of the repeal of a little tax of $21,000,000 because it is a hardship on the soda-fountain people to make the reports?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The precedent to be set by the repeal of this tax does not warrant anyone to request the repeal of the tax on jewelry, automobiles, or any of the other things the gentleman mentions, or any tax on manufacturers' sales. This is purely a consumption tax. It is not paid by the soda-water-fountain proprietors, as the gentleman from North Carolina would have you believe; it is paid by the little girl who goes and buys a glass of soda. The manufacturer does not pay it, the soda water proprietor does not pay it; it is paid by the people that can least afford it.

You may say that an ice-cream cone and a soda water are not absolute necessities of life, but on a hot day like this to the girls who have been working in the factory or in some of the hot office buildings a glass of soda water or a cone of ice cream comes precious near to being an absolute necessity.

Mr. BAER. And the gentleman might add that the soldiers, for whom the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] is pleading, are the greatest patronizers of these soda fountains.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I have not the least doubt of that, and they have to pay anywhere from 20 to 100 per cent extra on every purchase they make.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, is it not a fact that the gentleman from North Carolina favored the repeal of the tax on a $100 trunk before he favored a repeal on articles like this?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I was with the gentleman upon the repeal of that law, not because I desire to relieve anyone in this country from the payment of the luxury tax but because that law was not founded on a peace-time basis. It was on a war-time basis, and the intention was to discourage the sale and production of such things.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I think that side of the House and this side of the House ought to understand once and for all what a luxury tax is. The repeal of the revenue tax was brought about by virtue of the conditions that existed in the country, and the Republicans and the Democrats here are both responsible for it. An agreement was made by the conferees that they would repeal that, and that is the reason the committee reported that, and everyone ought to understand why it was.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then why chide us for trying to keep faith?

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania was one of the conferees. I did not believe in the repeal of that tax, and a great many Republicans did not, but in honor bound we were compelled to stand by our agreement.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Why chide us when we are trying to keep faith?

Mr. GARNER. But not on this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This is practically the same proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Does the gentleman know how much of the tax that is collected from the consumer upon the ice-cream cone and the soda water actually gets to the Government? In other words, what method does the Government have in collecting the tax to keep a check on the storekeeper, so that the Government knows it gets every penny collected from the consumer?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman's question is illustrative of the exact situation that faces us. This is the most difficult tax on earth to collect. It is a tax that can not be collected, as a matter of fact. You have to depend upon the honesty of each particular man, and it is virtually impossible to say how much escapes and how much does not. I could not guess the actual cost of the collection, and I do not think the Secretary of the Treasury could.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is the very best reason for the elimination of such a tax as this in time of peace. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. CRISP. Is it not exactly the same method by which the taxes on admissions to picture shows and theaters and a number of other taxes are collected, which you do not propose to repeal? They have to be collected under exactly the same method.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I can not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. CRISP. Is it not just as easy to keep a check on taxes from this source as from picture shows and automobiles and numerous other taxes which you are not proposing to repeal?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, no. One of the easiest taxes to collect in the world is the tax on automobiles. Any manufacturer's tax is a cinch. It is the easiest thing in the world to collect. A consumption tax is difficult.

Mr. CRISP. How about picture shows?

Mr. LONGWORTH. A picture-show tax gives some difficulty, but at any rate they can keep tab on the number of tickets sold, the number of people in the show, and they have a very good way of checking that up. It is not an annoying tax either. If the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] wants to go to a moving-picture show which costs 10 cents, I am sure he is perfectly willing to pay 11 cents.

Mr. CRISP. Are not the taxes collected in exactly the same way?

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is a very different situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, the range of this debate seems to be one of the best arguments that could be brought forth for the recess which we have agreed to take. This is a hot weather afternoon debate, unproductive of anything of any particular value, but productive of a lot of partisan feeling and spirit in the House which would simmer out very quickly if the thermometer were not soaring up in the neighborhood of the 100 mark. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], one of the ablest members of our committee, has criticized the repeal of this law as directly affecting the soda-water-fountain manufacturers. It seems to me that is an erroneous attitude to take. The person who goes to the fountain to get refreshment and nourishment in this hot weather is the one who pays the tax, and not the owner of the store nor the manufacturer of the fountain. So far as the resemblance between this and other forms of taxes, the repeal of which has been under consideration, is concerned, the amount of money that might have been secured or is being now secured through the luxury tax, which, as was said, we were in honor bound to make the effort to repeal, is far more than is involved in this little matter of the soda-fountain tax to-day. There will be practically no deficiency perceptible in the amount that this decreases our revenues.

This will be a mere bagatelle if there is a deficiency that will run into the figures to which the gentleman from North Carolina has referred. It is absolutely an inconvenience and a very great deprivation to the younger element of our land as well as the toilers and workers. Rather than agree to the suggestion of the gentleman from North Carolina that we repeal the luxury tax, let us reach the very bottom of the ladder rather than the top. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 630 of the Revenue Act of 1918, approved February 24, 1919, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia, a member of the committee, offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRISP: Page 1, line 3, strike out the word "section" and insert "section 628 and."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment as violating paragraph 3 of Rule XXI. I would be very glad to reserve the point of order.

Mr. CRISP. I do not care for the gentleman to reserve it, although I appreciate his willingness to do so. I have no desire unnecessarily to ask for time, and if the amendment can not be voted on I do not care to consume time upon it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I should be opposed to permitting the amendment to pass.

Mr. CRISP. Will the Chair hear me on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, to be frank with the Chair, I have in mind a decision that where a bill was reported amending one section of a revenue act it was not in order to offer an amendment dealing with some other section of the revenue act. That statement was based on the idea that you were dealing with an item in that section and you can not take up anything else in the revenue bill. Now, I presume that is the decision my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], had in mind when he makes the point of order, and I recognize that decision. But it seems to me there is this difference in this case. In that decision you were amending the provision by changing the law relating to the duties on certain articles enumerated in that section. Now, this bill does not propose to change and deal with different items in that section, but it proposes to strike out entirely from the revenue act section 630. Now, the amendment I have offered proposes also to strike out another section—628—which taxes the bottlers of soft drinks; and as this bill before the House proposes to strike out one section of a revenue act, an amendment to strike out another section which is related to revenue items, dealing with the same class of matter as drinks, it seems to me ought to be in order and not subject to the point of order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, any Member of this House will always proceed with some hesitation to argue a point of order in contest with the distinguished gentleman from Georgia, perhaps one of the very best parliamentarians that has been in this House for many years.

Mr. CRISP. My friend is so complimentary I suppose I will have to forgive the gentleman for making the point of order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But, Mr. Chairman, this rule is very clear. It provides that not only can no amendment be made which is not germane to a revenue bill but also that no amendment can be offered that is not germane to the particular paragraph to which it is offered.

The CHAIRMAN. May the Chair ask the gentleman from Ohio, who is familiar with both of these sections, what relation section 630 has to section 628?

Mr. LONGWORTH. It bears no sort of relation in my judgment. Section 630 is a consumption tax payable at the time of retail sale by the consumer, while section 628 is a manufacturers' tax. It is a tax paid on the value for which the manufacturer sells it. It provides for a number of different things besides soda water and ice cream. Now, I did not think I would even have to quote in this case the leading decision on the subject referred to by the gentleman from Georgia, which was the case where an additional subject was added to the number contained in the bill. The Chair will recall, I think, that that was a bill to put certain specified items on the free list. As I recall it, it was wool, cotton, and a number of other things, and an amendment was offered adding a provision to put glass on the free list. The Chair held that that was out of order as not being germane to the paragraph, because it introduced a new subject. Now, in this case the gentleman from Georgia undertakes to add to the repeal of this law the repeal of a law which puts a tax on certain articles entirely apart from the articles referred to in section 630 in this bill, the only item of the bill, and undertakes a different sort of policy and an entirely different sort of taxing system. I submit to the Chair that it is contrary not only to the spirit but the letter of paragraph 3 of Rule XXI.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Paragraph 3 of Rule XXI reads:

> No amendment shall be in order to any bill affecting revenue which is not germane to the subject matter in the bill; nor shall any amendment to any item of such bill be in order which does not directly relate to the item to which the amendment is proposed.

The item in the bill to which the amendment is offered proposes to repeal section 630, which relates to a consumption tax, the sale of soft drinks at retail, and so forth. The section that it is proposed to amend, section 628, relates to a tax upon manufactured products, as the Chair is informed. The Chair thinks that the amendment is not germane and sustains the point of order.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, to-day we have heard some very familiar expressions in this House. The high cost of living has recently assumed a serious place in the minds of Members on that side of the House.

I heard that expression this morning, and I think I have heard it somewhere before. So after a careful research in some volumes preserved here in the library I find it is not entirely new. The Democratic platform, adopted in 1912, at Baltimore, Md., treated of that subject, and said that the high cost of living was the most serious problem in every American home. If I——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What is that the gentleman is reading from?

Mr. TINCHER. From the platforms of the two great political parties.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Was that a plank of the Democratic platform of 1912 on which Woodrow Wilson ran for President and which promised to bring the high cost of living down?

Mr. TINCHER. Absolutely.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has it come down?

Mr. TINCHER. I was going to give my view of it. I do not understand exactly that we should be criticized now for voting for adjournment when you have had all the time from 1912 to the 4th of March this year to reduce the high cost of living. As a matter of fact, that is a joke. As a matter of fact, no one voted against the motion to adjourn. One gentleman on that side asked another gentleman how we would stop the expense. Do not forget, my friends, that while this Congress, a Republican Congress, has the power to appropriate money to carry on the expenses of this Government, that your departments, Democratic departments, are still spending the money. And I would suggest, if you want a really serious suggestion of how to stop this expense, that you elect a Republican President and fill every one of the departments with good, competent, Republican officers. And we might start by sending a few trainloads of useless employees from Washington to their homes now.

Some of you are opposing the taking off of this little tax. It would be just the same with any other tax. You are not going to be satisfied with a tax that is repealed first.

I have heard a good deal this session about the filibuster that was conducted by three or four Senators at the other end of this Capitol. If they feel like I do, they will feel proud that when this session has adjourned we will have saved a billion and a half by that filibuster. You are disgusted with the fact that your old Congress would not let you have a billion and a half of dollars to spend which this Congress has proved to you it was unnecessary to have. And if you keep talking about that filibuster you will get the people of the United States to believe that it was a billion and a half filibuster for the benefit of the taxpayers of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have been greatly surprised at the speech made by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN]. A few weeks ago when I was, if anything, a little more green as a Member of this House than I am now, I heard him make a most appealing and eloquent speech in favor of taking the tax off trunks that cost over $50 and off of women's waists that cost over $15, women's hats that cost over $15, and suit cases and traveling bags that cost over $25, pocketbooks that cost over $7.50, and articles of that kind that only the very rich buy and which it was acknowledged would take out of the Treasury of the United States $100,000,000 which is now collected and placed there by the tax on those 20 articles. He made such an appealing address that I became very much afraid that this House would pass that bill. I knew that the people out in Kansas were not worried about the tax on trunks that cost over $50, and silk stockings that cost over $2, or about the tax on shoes that cost over $10, and silk neckties that cost over $2, but they were tired of the penny tax at the soda fountains. And I went around among the Members of the House to get somebody to oppose the splendid speech of the gentleman from North Carolina, and finally went down to the dining room and got "Uncle Joe" CANNON to come up and make the speech in opposition which killed the bill. And now I find after some weeks have gone by, the same gentleman from North Carolina, with the same eloquence and the same appeal, comes before us and tries to retain the tax on the soda-fountain drinks, on ice cream, and ice-cream cones the children buy. He tells us that it takes $20,000,000 out of the Treasury, and that he is opposed to it for that reason. I do not understand the logic of gentlemen who will insist upon taking the tax off of trunks that cost over $50, and so forth, and off of all those articles that only the very rich use, when it will deprive the Government of a revenue of $100,000,000, and then stand up and fight against taking the tax off of soda water and ice cream, when it will deprive the Government of an income of only $20,000,000. [Applause on the Republican side.] And I can not understand why, in order to make his appeal the more eloquent, he should say we need this $20,000,000 for the purpose of taking care of the soldiers. Why, bless your soul, gentlemen, the Republican Party has always taken care of the old soldier that fought for this flag, and will also take care of the new soldier that fought for the same flag. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The people of my district and State, and, I believe, all over the Nation, want the penny tax taken off of soda water and ice cream, because it produces $10 worth of annoyance to every $1 of revenue it produces; because it is a tax on the children and on that which is dear to their hearts and happiness.

We in Congress know that this tax is a very expensive one to collect; in fact, it is more bother than it is worth, and we Republicans can run this Government and raise sufficient revenues without taxing the children and the poor to whom ice cream and the soda fountain is a blessing during the hot summer days. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and make a favorable report——

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] has an amendment he desires to offer to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] withhold his motion?

Mr. FORDNEY. I withhold it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES of Texas: Page 1, line 3, after the figures "630" in line 3, insert "and that part of section 628 which levies a tax equivalent to 10 per cent of the sale price of all unfermented grape juice, ginger ale, root beer, sarsaparilla, pop, artificial mineral waters (carbonated or not carbonated), other carbonated waters or beverages, and other soft drinks sold by the manufacturers, producer, or importer in bottles or other closed containers."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order for the same reason as I did before.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman withhold it?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman reserve it for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] makes the point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back with favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it be passed. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2837) to repeal section 630 of the revenue act of 1918, approved February 24, 1919, had directed him to report the same back to the House without amendment, with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. FORDNEY. On that, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. A division is called for.

Mr. LONGWORTH. No, Mr. Speaker; I withdraw that request.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. FORDNEY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE—TELEGRAMS FROM THE SPANISH AND BRAZILIAN CONGRESSES (H. DOC. NO. 166).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of State enclosing a copy of a telegram sent by the Spanish Congress of Deputies through the Spanish Embassy at Washington to the House of Representatives, and a telegram sent by the President of the National Brazilian Congress to the President of the North American Congress, intended evidently for the House of Representatives.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
28 July, 1919.

REPORTS FROM WAR EXPENDITURES COMMITTEE.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am filing to-day a report from the Select Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, which will be printed under the rules. In order that the Members may have the opportunity to get at it when it comes up to-morrow, as I understand it, under a special rule, I ask unanimous consent that the report may also be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I am informed by the minority Members that they have not yet prepared their minority report, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that the minority may have until midnight to-night in which to file their report, and that it be printed together with the majority report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the report from the Select Committee on Expenditures in the War Department may be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and that the minority report from the same committee may be printed accompanying it if it be filed with the Printing Office before midnight to-night. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The reports are as follows:

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, from the Select Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, submitted the following report:

The select committee of 15, appointed under the resolution of the House of the 4th day of June, 1919, for the purpose of investigating the contracts and expenditures of the War Department and for certain other purposes expressly stated in said resolution, have had under consideration certain of the matters committed to it by said resolution and now present the following partial report.

The committee is continuing its investigations of the matters and things submitted to it by said resolution and will make further reports from time to time hereafter until it shall have completed its labors:

The present high prices of food products and the need of the Government for money suggests to your committee the necessity of a preliminary report relating to the War Department's nonactivities in the sale of the very large quantities of food supplies now held in storage in the United States.

At the time of the signing of the armistice the Army was composed of approximately 3,700,000 men, 2,000,000 of whom were in France and about 1,700,000 in continental America. An increase of this force to 5,000,000 men had been agreed upon by the War Department and food for this enlarged army for eight months in advance was being contracted for and accumulated at the time active hostilities suddenly ceased.

The demobilization of the Army began immediately upon the signing of the armistice and 800,000 soldiers were discharged by January 11, 1919. This demobilization continued at the approximate rate of 80,000 per week, so that on the 24th of May, 1919, 2,252,000 of the soldiers had been discharged and were definitely out of the service.

In view of the tremendous quantities of food the Government had on hand on November 11, 1918, and the demobilization of the armed forces, it at once became apparent that the War Department possessed an immense quantity of food beyond the needs of the Army.

Actuated by this condition, Gen. Peyton C. March, Chief of Staff, on November 30, 1918 (19 days after the armistice), issued an order authorizing the declaration of a surplus on all perishable food products.

The next step was the declaration of surplus by the Quartermaster General; and the last step was the sale of the surplus supplies by the Director of Sales. Notwithstanding the authorization of surplus by the Chief of Staff on the 30th of November, no action was taken with reference to declaring a surplus, until the month of May, 1919, or six months after the declaration was authorized. In the meantime, the food was deteriorating and becoming of less value to the Government, and the high cost of living for the American people continued. This inexcusable delay resulted in the spoiling of millions of pounds of ham and bacon to the great loss of the Government and the people, who were in need of the meat food products. The inactivity of the Government in the disposition of these food supplies was, and is, the result of a well-defined policy of the Secretary of War to withhold them from the domestic market and to protect the interests from which these products had been purchased with the ultimate intention of disposing of them abroad so far as circumstances would permit.

This policy finds expression not only in the testimony given to the committee by the officers of the War Department, but in documentary evidence as well. As an instance of such intention to prevent the American people from purchasing these products, the Quartermaster General's Department, through Gen. R. E. Wood, Quartermaster General, entered into an agreement with the canners' association that some 200,000,000 cans of canned vegetables would be kept off the domestic market during this season; this agreement was subsequently extended by an order of the Quartermaster General adding these canned vegetables to the soldiers' ration in the expressed hope that they would be entirely consumed and that none would be left for sale. This order would have resulted in a loss to the Government of millions of dollars to be derived from the sale of this surplus, as well as depriving the American people of a large quantity of food.

The purpose, as shown by the testimony, was to protect the canners who had sold the produce from competition with the governmental surplus.

On July 8, 1919, the surplus of food stored in the United States over and above the needs of the Army was as follows:

Corn beef	$24,000,000
Bacon	23,000,000
Hash corn beef	10,000,000
Roast beef	20,500,000
Fresh frozen meats and poultry	20,000,000
Canned vegetables	23,000,000

This surplus is constantly growing larger, because of the continued demobilization of the Army. In addition to these items there is a surplus of millions of cans of fish and milk, and tons of sugar, coffee, and tea. It is utterly impossible to estimate the exact amount of the tremendous quantity of food supplies in the hands of the department, a large portion of which is deteriorating and becoming less valuable.

During the eight months which has elapsed since the signing of the armistice only $12,000,000 of food supplies has been sold by the War Department in the United States, and a very large quantity of that sold was spoiled and unfit for the general market; otherwise, it would not have been placed on sale.

On July 11 of the present year, and after the War Expenditures Committee was appointed, the Director of Sales issued to the press a publicity statement with reference to the sale of meats and vegetables. This statement provides that meat and vegetables shall be purchased only by municipalities, and municipalities to pay the freight from the nearest warehouse, and to have 10 days in which to make payment to the Government. This plan adopted by the Government will not result in the sale of these products to any great extent, for the reason that most municipalities under their charter have no legal authority to purchase food products for sale. Many municipalities which have indicated a desire to purchase this food for the benefit of their people have been met with the threat of injunction on the part of local dealers, which threat has been sufficient to prevent a purchase of the goods.

This committee makes recommendation that these food supplies be sold without delay on the domestic market to the American people, who, at great sacrifice, bought and paid for them, and the committee looks with disfavor on the policy of exporting them from America to foreign nations for sale and consumption. The committee further recommends that plans be devised by the Secretary of War, through the War Department, for the early disposition of all surplus food products on the domestic market under a system which will grant to the American people the opportunity to secure the same for food purposes.

The committee therefore recommends the adoption of the following resolution:

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States of America, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, requested to place on sale, without delay, the surplus food products in the hands or under the control of the War Department now stored in the United States, under such plan as will safeguard the interest of the Government and insure an opportunity to the people of the United States to purchase the same directly from the Government.

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

The undersigned members of the Select Committee to Investigate Expenditures in the War Department respectfully submit that the resolution proffered by the majority, if it is to be in any degree helpful, must have certain amendments modifying to a certain extent what we understand to be its meaning, and giving the assurance which should be given, if the House deems it proper to make such a request as is therein embodied, of a readiness to cooperate in all things essential to enable compliance with it.

The majority have not favored us in their report accompanying the resolution with any interpretation of its terms or explanation of its purport.

Indeed, were its sponsors other than they are, it would be difficult to repress the suspicion that the resolution was offered, not so much in an effort to aid in the solution of one of the complex and involved problems following in the wake of the tremendous war brought to successful and sudden end by the force of our Nation's arms and aid the people in securing food, as it is to furnish an opportunity for a sinister criticism in an official report, primarily, of him who bore the stupendous burdens of Secretary of War during all the time from its beginning to its unstained, unsullied, and glorious end; and, secondarily, of such of his advisers as fall within the scope of their dislike.

Without having an expression from them, we must, as we should have to do in any event, look closely to the instrument itself for its interpretation.

The resolution reads:

"Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States of America, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, requested to place on sale, without delay, the surplus food products in the hands, or under the control, of the War Department now stored in the United States, under such plan as will safeguard the interests of the Government and insure an opportunity to the people of the United States to purchase the same direct from the Government."

We take this to mean that the request is that plan, or plans, be immediately developed whereby the remainder of these surplus food products shall be sold directly to the consumers without any intervening agency, or agencies, save those of the Federal Government; otherwise we are unable to give intelligent construction to the words "direct from the Government," and the resolution requests the doing of nothing other than that which the department is now and has for some time been doing.

Undoubtedly, there are portions of these foods that may be so sold and distributed if the proper organization be established and proper agencies created. It has been suggested that the parcel post could be utilized, and agents of the Government could be distributed throughout the country for the handling and disposition of these goods.

All will agree, we take it without hesitation, that if the Government itself attempts the disposition in this manner it should be general, and whatever of benefit may accrue should inure, so far as is humanly possible, to all persons and sections.

It will, as of course, require for such a plan a large organization and will involve an expense impossible now to determine, and some delay in the distribution under such plan will be inevitable.

We realize very acutely the conditions which exist to-day with reference to the high cost of food products. In whatever may be done intelligently and justly to alleviate, even in slight degree, this condition we are anxious to cooperate, as we feeel sure are the Secretary of War, his advisers and subordinates.

All recognize that under the law itself, and in morals if there were no law, the interests of the Government must be safeguarded, and that it is the duty of the Secretary to see that this is done so far as lies within his power.

We feel, therefore, that if the House of Representatives is to request by resolution that present plans be changed and that sales be made only to consumers direct from the Government rather than through municipalities or individuals or associations to whom they are now being sold in quantities for resale to consumers that the House should also by resolution indicate its willingness to do what it would have to do were it expressing itself in legislation and say that it is ready to appropriate the funds essential to the organization and development of those plans. We therefore respectfully recommend that at the end of the resolution the proper punctuation be inserted and that there be added the words "and the Committee on Appropriations of the House is requested to ascertain without delay and report to the House the sum necessary for the development and execution of such plan."

Unless the House shows a willingness to cooperate in this way the country will undoubtedly conclude that we are merely trifling with serious conditions and expressing a request in the hope that it may not be complied with rather than in the hope that it will. Because all understand that the Secretary of War has no funds available for carrying out such a policy, and only the Congress can provide these funds.

We beg also to call attention to another phase which assuredly must challenge the attention of all reasonable men familiar with conditions.

If this resolution of request were made law and the Secretary were without power to sell other than to consumers, undoubtedly great embarrassment would ensue, because there are large quantities of these surplus food products so packed and arranged as that few consumers would desire to purchase a full package, and when opened the contents would deteriorate and it would eventuate in very heavy losses. We think it should be made clear, therefore, that in making the request the House does not desire to go on record as wishing to interfere with the discretion of the Secretary to dispose of such products in some other intelligent and just manner.

We, therefore, suggest as a further amendment that after the word "delay," in line —, all the remainder of the resolution be stricken out and the following inserted, to wit:

"Under such plan as will safeguard the interests of the Government and insure an opportunity to the people of the United States to purchase the same direct from the Government such part of the surplus food products in the hands or under the control of the War Department now stored in the United States as is reasonably capable of being so distributed and sold."

The resolution in full, if the amendments we suggest shall be adopted, will then read as follows:

"Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States of America, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, requested to place on sale, without delay, under such plan as will safeguard the interests of the Government and insure an opportunity to the people of the United States to purchase the same direct from the Government, such part of the surplus food products in the hands or under the control of the War Department now stored in the United States, as is reasonably capable of being so distributed and sold, and the Committee on Appropriations of the House is requested to ascertain, without delay, and report to the House the sum necessary for the development of such plan."

So much for the resolution.

We turn now to a discussion of the majority report, and at the outset feel compelled to call attention to the precipitant haste with which the majority report was railroaded into the House.

The hearings before House Subcommittee No. 4, on the subject of surplus food supplies of the Army, were concluded at 4.45 o'clock p. m. of July 22. On the 24th of July, one day having intervened, the chairman of the subcommittee submitted his report to the general committee. Only the members of the subcommittee had heard the testimony. The other 12 members of the committee have not even had an opportunity to read the testimony, because a large portion of it had not been printed. We are advised that it has not been printed yet.

At the session of July 24, notwithstanding the minority members protested they had had no opportunity to read the testimony, the majority report was adopted and the minority reserved the right to file a minority report.

On the following day, July 25, Mr. FLOOD, acting for the minority, presented the following letter to Mr. GRAHAM:

JULY 25, 1919.

Hon. W. J. GRAHAM,
Chairman Select Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: You will recall that when the question of reporting the resolution requesting the Secretary of War to place on sale without delay the surplus food products in the hands or under the control of the War Department with the report accompanying it was up for discussion in the committee yesterday the minority challenged the accuracy of many of the statements in the report.

Since the adjournment of the committee yesterday I have conferred with several War Department officials in connection with this matter and have become satisfied that the statements in the report can not be sustained. The committee itself took no evidence on these questions, all the evidence having been taken by subcommittee No. 4, and I feel that there are a number of witnesses who have had control of the sale of these surplus food products who should be heard by the committee. I here point out some of the erroneous statements in the report which I believe an examination of witnesses will show to have no foundation in fact:

1. On page 2 of the report this statement is made: "Notwithstanding the authorization of surplus by the Chief of Staff on the 30th of November, no action was taken with reference to declaring a surplus until the month of May, 1919, or six months after the declaration was authorized."

My information is that this statement is incorrect, and that foods were declared surplus as rapidly as the taking of inventories would permit in small quantities during months preceding the month of May, 1919, and certain quantities of surplus foods were sold prior to this time.

2. The report further states that in the meantime food was deteriorating and becoming of less value to the Government.

I am informed that very little food was permitted to deteriorate, namely, 1,500,000 pounds of ham at Norfolk, which was awaiting shipment to France on requisition, and which was promptly sold when released from shipment. Any other items of deteriorated food are very minor and inconsequential in comparison with the large quantity of food available.

It is my information that the Government has suffered no financial loss through the holding of these surplus foods, for the reason that markets have been stabilized to the extent that the Government is receiving better returns from the sale of these foods than could possibly have been received in the earlier months of this year.

3. The report further states that "the inactivity of the Government in the disposition of these food supplies was and is the result of a well-defined policy of the Secretary of War to withhold them from the domestic market and to protect the interests from which these products had been purchased, with the ultimate intention of disposing of them abroad so far as circumstances would permit."

I had a conversation with the Secretary of War this morning, and he informed me that he had no such policy as indicated in this statement.

4. With regard to the paragraph beginning, "This policy finds expression not only in the testimony," etc., may I call your attention to the fact that this paragraph is in conflict with the preceding paragraph, which states that the surplus stocks are to be held for export. This particular paragraph to which I call your attention states that Gen. Wood entered into an agreement with the canners whereby the canned vegetables will be kept off the domestic market and will be used as soldiers' rations. This paragraph goes on to state that in feeding these surplus vegetables to the Army the Government would lose millions of dollars derived from the sale of such vegetables. Obviously, if these vegetables are required by the Army as rations, the use of the vegetables in such a manner would not result in a loss to the Government, since the soldiers must be fed.

I do not think the statement in the next paragraph, that this action of the War Department was for the purpose of protecting the canners who sold their products from competition with the governmental surplus, is a fair statement of the case.

6. I note the report says there are millions of cans of surplus fish. My information is there is no surplus of fish. All canned salmon has been turned back to the canners at cost to the Government. The reason for this was the fact that this salmon did not come up to Government specifications, and consequently the War Department compelled the canners to take it back at the price the Government paid for it.

7. I had taken up the question of sugar, which is greatly needed by the farmers now for their canning and preserving, and am informed that there was a surplus of sugar. I also ascertained that there was no surplus of coffee and tea, as stated in the report.

With regard to the latter part of this paragraph, I am informed that the War Department does know pretty definitely the total value of the surplus materials on hand, while there is very little, if any, food permitted to deteriorate, and that food is more valuable to-day than it would have been in the early spring had it been dumped on the market.

8. With regard to the statement made that only $12,000,000 worth of food supplies have been sold, I am informed that this figure is incorrect, as large quantities of food have actually been sold, but reports of sale have not been made to the War Department for the reason that considerable time must intervene between the date of making the sale and the time that the report passes through channels to the central record bureau. I am informed that the actual reports of sales are largely in excess of $12,000,000.

9. The committee report states that on July 11 a publicity statement was issued by the director of sales providing that meats and vegetables could only be purchased by municipalities. I am informed that, as a matter of fact, this publicity statement did not state that meats and vegetables could be sold only to municipalities, but was intended and did convey information having to do with the details whereby municipalities could obtain surplus meats and vegetables for sale; that it was not the purpose of this article, nor has it been the practice of the director of sales, I am informed, to confine sales of meats and vegetables to municipalities. I am informed that a number of sales have actually been made to wholesale grocers and other concerns and to individuals which represents a distribution of surplus foods through normal channels.

In view of the many errors in this report, some of which I have pointed out above, I respectfully request that this report be withdrawn from the House and your committee take evidence on the questions dealt with by this report, so that the facts in connection with the sale of these surplus food products can be ascertained and the proper report made to this House.

And in this connection I would suggest that you summon the following witnesses: Secretary of War Baker; Col. C. G. Harvey, General Staff, Chief of the Requirements and Statistics Branch, Purchase, Storage and Traffic Division; Col. Clyde B. Crusan, assistant to Gen. Rogers; Col. Morris Stayton, Assistant Director of Storage; Col. Clarence R. Day, Assistant Director of Storage; Col. Julian R. Schley, Director of Purchase; Mr. E. C. Morse, First Assistant Director of Sales; Maj. E. E. Squier, chief, quartermaster stores section, Office Director of Sales; Capt. Clement, Chief Subsistence Branch, Surplus Property Division, Office of Director of Purchase and Storage; Maj. A. L. Mercer, Assistant Director of Sales.

With much respect, I am,

Very truly, yours,

H. D. FLOOD.

Upon the presentation of this letter to the chairman he called a meeting of the committee for 4 o'clock p. m. on July 25 and laid before it the letter from Mr. FLOOD. The committee, by a strict party vote, refused to comply with what the minority believed to be a reasonable request and rejected the motion to reopen the hearings and subpœna the witnesses named in the letter. Because of the distribution of the work of the general committee among five subcommittees, upon each of which there are two majority members and one minority member, four of the minority members could not hear the testimony taken by subcommittee No. 4, and were denied the privilege of reading it before action was taken. With unseemly haste the majority report was forced through the committee, the protest of the minority was disregarded and their plain rights were ignored.

In view of these facts the minority felt not only justified but compelled in the interest of justice and fairness and for the information of the House the ex parte statement of those whom we had requested should be called and placed upon oath. These have been obtained and are filed as an appendix hereto, and we feel that every statement of fact presented by us is substantiated by the testimony taken by the subcommittee and the documents so filed.

In our judgment the majority report is so inaccurate in its statement of facts and so unjust in its inferences we feel a fair consideration of the subject matter can not be had without specific consideration of a number of the statements made in said report.

DELAY IN DECLARING SURPLUSES.

The report states:

"Notwithstanding the authorization of surpluses by the Chief of Staff on the 30th of November, no action was taken with reference to declaring a surplus until the month of May, 1919, or six months after the declaration was authorized."

On the 1st of December, 1918, the day following the order that the surplus be determined, 178 officers were called to Washington and the special organization necessary to carry on this work was created. On the 17th of December these officers were sent to the various zone supply offices and camps throughout the country and assumed charge of the work in the various supply offices.

On December 31 the taking of the inventory began throughout the United States. A physical count was completed in 10 days. The inventories covered 16 zone supply depots, 3 Army reserve depots, 4 large terminals, and over 200 posts. One hundred and eighty thousand different items were reported. Ten thousand people were engaged in the work. The inventory and lists for use in declaring surpluses were completed on the 30th of April.

When the armistice was signed supplies for the Army were being gathered from all the productive sources of the country. Warehouses were filled, countless thousands of cars were on the way to the ports, property was accumulated at the wharves. The Quartermaster's Department had over 15,000 contracts outstanding, involving a money value of $1,800,000,000. The amount of supplies eventually received under these incomplete contracts required months for determination, because it involved the determination of the amount of property, including where percentages of the products of factories were commandeered, the cancellation and partial cancellation of a vast number of contracts, the final validation of informal contracts, and also the rejection of supplies not conforming to specifications.

Accurate inventories had to await the determination of these uncertain quantities. The uncertainty as to the amount of surplus of various materials was further intensified by the possibility that military operations might be resumed and that the total amount of men to be rationed has several times been materially reduced since last November, due to the fact that demobilization proceeded more rapidly than anticipated, and also that the size of the permanent Army fixed by the department last January was in June reduced materially by Congress.

In many instances accurate inventories required repiling of supplies. In others the inventories sufficient for Army purposes lacked details necessary to be supplied in order to declare surpluses and inform the trade of what was offered.

The food supplies, vast as they were, were in the aggregate only a small proportion of the materials to be inventoried. Surpluses were declared and sales made of some food supplies as early as February 12, 1919 (hearings, p. 94), but a surplus in meats, the principal food product, was not declared until the 26th of March, and, as finally revised, not until the 1st of May. Instead of consuming six months, as stated in the report, the actual time was five months and one day.

It must be borne in mind that it was about February 1 before Gen. Pershing advised that it was unnecessary for the forwarding of additional meats to the American Expeditionary Force, and that shipments had been constantly made up to that time (p. 94).

These facts are a sufficient refutation of the statements of the majority report that "no action was taken."

ALLEGED DETERIORATION BY DELAY.

The report further asserts:

"This inexcusable delay resulted in the spoiling of millions of pounds of ham and bacon to the great loss of the Government and the people."

The evidence does not sustain this charge.

The effective general answer to this charge is that out of the first $12,000,000 worth of food supplies sold, including the supplies to which the criticism is directed, the Government received over 85 per cent of the cost to the Government. There was evidence (p. 9) that 2,000,000 pounds of bacon sold at Baltimore was deteriorating, but the Government sold it for 28½ cents a pound. This price was larger than the Government had been offered at an earlier date for bacon (p. 20).

The only other instance of deterioration in meats shown by any substantial evidence was 1,487,905 pounds of sugar-cured hams at Norfolk, Va. This meat was ordered to Norfolk for overseas shipment, where it arrived in January, February, and March. The inspector's report made a few days prior to the sale states that the hams are "sweet and sound, but surfaces are affected by mold, and that if reconditioned at once there would be no loss from trimming, as mold in its present condition can be removed by thoroughly washing and cleaning same" (p. 29).

This ham was sold for 20 cents a pound (p. 61).

The evidence as to meat shows "the meat is sound to-day and very palatable" (p. 26).

Mr. Hare, the director of sales, says:

"I do not want to get the impression out that we are trying to sell canned stuff that is not good, because I think they are" (p. 26).

Also:

"My belief is that the vast majority of all our canned stuff is in excellent condition and we will find a market for it" (p. 35).

In this connection we protest against the injury to the finances of the Government that is now being suffered because of the unwarranted charges that these food products are not in good condition. Such reports have a strong tendency to hamper the Government in the sale of these goods to the best advantage.

There is no evidence of "millions of pounds" of bacon or ham having been spoiled, and obviously it must have been in condition to meet the requirements of the pure-food law.

POLICY OF GOVERNMENT IN SALE OF FOOD SUPPLIES.

The report states that:

"The inactivity of the Government in the disposition of these food supplies was and is the result of a well-defined policy of the Secretary of War to withhold them from the domestic market to protect the interests from which these products had been purchased, with the ultimate intention of disposing of them abroad so far as circumstances would permit."

The policy of the War Department in the disposal of surplus supplies has changed with changing conditions, but there has never been any secrecy about it and it has constantly been well known to the public. Mr. Hare was appointed director of sales in January, 1919, and on the 27th of that month he gave out a statement (p. 50) in which, in substance, the policy to be pursued was defined as follows:

1. So as to disturb the industrial conditions of the country as little as possible and to obtain the best returns for the Government.

2. Surplus property is to be transferred to another War Department bureau, if it can use the same.

3. To sell surplus property to another Government department if needed before the same is put on the market.

4. In general, where there is any considerable surplus property it is desired, where practical, that an attempt be made to dispose of this material to the original manufacturer or vendor in order that he may distribute the same to the trade.

5. The last-mentioned method failing, it will be advisable where practicable to approach the local board of trade or chamber of commerce or similar organizations to see if it will not be possible to dispose of this surplus property to the dealers in that class of material in that particular locality where the surplus is located.

6. If a deal is not consummated by either of the above methods the Government will then be at liberty to dispose of it to the public at large.

Dealers having had goods commandeered protested that a distinction should be made in their case and that they should have the opportunity of taking the goods back at the price paid by the Government if they so desired. The director of sales disapproved this policy (p. 51). The director declared the goods were commandeered at a fair profit to the producer, and that under the plan they suggested the party from whom they were commandeered would take them back only if the present market price was higher than the commandeered price; that as the Government could not compel the dealer to take them back if the commandeered price was higher than the market price it would obviously be "a one-sided arrangement" to permit such a course.

The packers offered the use of their distributing facilities and to act for the Government in selling canned meats at prices dictated by the Government, they to be paid the expense involved. This offer was rejected (p. 22).

Mr. Hare testified that when it was found the packers would not pay a decent price "we said we are through with you" (p. 27).

Throughout the war it was the announced policy of the Government to confer with the trade in the line of industry affecting the war to secure its cooperation and support in the production and delivery of supplies required for the prosecution of the war. Most war industries were worked to their capacity. The same policy was pursued in reference to the producers of food materials. In the main the efforts of the industries were commendable, patriotic, and effective. At the beginning of the war the canners were called into conference. Representatives of the War and Navy Departments attended each annual convention of the National Canners' Association and urged a maximum production of canned vegetables. The association itself engaged in a publicity campaign to that end. Enormous production was obtained for the season of 1918. The seasonal pack for 1918 was complete at the signing of the armistice. Large amounts had been delivered or were in course of delivery to the Government on contracts. Government orders, of course, have been for Army consumption. As usual, the local trade had been provided for by advance orders.

There was a comparatively large pack of canned corn and canned peas and especially of tomatoes for the season of 1919. Less than one-fourth of the canned tomatoes, for instance, remained in the hands of the canners on the 1st day of January, 1919, the great bulk of the pack having gone into the hands of the wholesalers, jobbers, and retailers, with a view of supplying the domestic market. The prices of these goods had been fixed by the Government. The wholesale dealers had been restricted in their profits on a percentage basis of the turnover. With these conditions confronting the canned-vegetable trade, the Government was forced to determine its course in disposing of its surplus vegetables, having in mind the best return to the Government and the effect of the Government's policy upon the general industry of the country. While fundamentally the duty of the responsible officials of the Government was to sell at the prices and at the times that would bring the best returns to the Government, the responsible officials justly took into consideration the situation of the industries and labor of the country. On the 4th of June, 1919, Mr. Hare, the director of sales, appeared before the Military Affairs Committee of the House and gave a statement of "everything that we have done to date." He further said:

"I shall appreciate it very much, if it is agreeable to the chairman, to get any advice from the committee that they may care to offer."

In response, the chairman of the committee stated:

"I have seen accounts in newspapers suggesting that this stuff ought to be put upon the market and be sold for what it will bring. That would probably result in selling it for a very low figure. What effect would it have upon those thousands of small tradesmen throughout the country who carry on their shelves the commercial canned stuff, and what would be the result to business in general if you were to carry out such a policy?"

After some discussion, the chairman further stated:

"Answering your question, and speaking for myself alone, I think the people of this country will expect you to get the most money you can for the commodity." (Hearings, Army appropriation bill, pp. 469, 471.)

Unquestionably an immediate sale to the highest bidder of all the supplies would have meant a sacrifice of the Government's interest, as the returns would have been nominal. It seems apparent that from the standpoint of Government revenues a plan permitting a gradual absorption of the Government's supplies was the preferable course.

We also believe that the trade of the country had a legitimate interest in the situation that to a large degree was not inconsistent with the duty of the officials to secure the most favorable returns to the Government.

In this connection it should be borne in mind that the Government had surplus properties following the war aggregating nearly $2,000,000,000. The mere statement of the fact makes it apparent to anyone having only a meager idea of business conditions following the war that justice to the Government and the trade alike requires that these goods be disposed of on a plan of gradual absorption instead of forced sales. The Government that had encouraged and secured the cooperation of the industries in the production of its war necessities could not in common fairness immediately turn around at the conclusion of the war and demoralize prices and market conditions which the Government's own activities had created and drive the price of stocks in the hands of merchants below the price the Government had fixed.

The policy of the Secretary of War is clearly stated by himself in his letter addressed to Hon. H. D. FLOOD, published in the appendix to this report.

WITHHOLDING OF CANNED VEGETABLES.

In this connection the report refers to "an agreement with the canners' association that some 200,000,000 cans of canned vegetables would be kept from the domestic market during this season."

On the 6th of last December Gen. Wood, Acting Quartermaster General, wrote a letter to a representative of the National Canners' Association, which was given publicity at the time, declaring, in substance, that the surplus of canned vegetables would not be placed on the market during "this season." However, the fact is that canned vegetables were sold beginning in February, and the Wood policy was wholly abrogated on the 23d day of May, 1918 (p. 310, 55), and offers of sales and sales of canned vegetables have proceeded since that date.

In so far as the majority report intimates that the public has been deprived of the opportunity to buy canned vegetables of the Government since that date it is erroneous. A reference to the record will show that the chairman of the subcommittee making this report elicited evidence showing that on the 20th of June competitive bids were opened on a portion of these canned vegetables. Bids calling for the sale of these vegetable supplies as well as canned meats were issued beginning in May. Over 1,500 bids were opened on the 20th of June.

ORDER MAKING ADDITIONAL VEGETABLES RATIONS.

The report criticizes an order of the Quartermaster General adding canned vegetables to the soldiers' ration. It is asserted "This order would have resulted in a loss to the Government of millions of dollars to be derived from the sale of this surplus, as well as depriving the American people of a large quantity of food."

No such results followed the making of said order. On the 17th of March Col. Davis, of the Quartermaster Corps, wrote a letter to the president of the canners' association stating that, acting in line with his suggestion, canned peas, corn, squash, and string beans would be added to the ration list, which has always contained canned tomatoes.

The effect of this order was not to add to the rations or to waste any food product; it simply furnished our soldiers a greater variety of vegetables without adding to the total quantity they received. It provided for the consumption of the vegetables the Government had, and to that extent relieved the Government of the necessity of replacing that quantity of foodstuffs by purchases in the market. It did not diminish the food supply of the country one pound. It was an advantage to the Government and an advantage to the soldier, as it gave him a more varied ration which he could not have obtained except at the expense of his mess fund. The declaration that it resulted in a loss to the Government of millions of dollars is without the slightest foundation in fact. The statement that it deprived the American people of a large quantity of food is equally groundless.

The report further states that the purpose of the above order "was to protect the canners who had sold the produce from competition with the governmental surplus." As a matter of fact, the 1918 pack had practically passed from the hands of the canners before the order was made. The order had the effect of contributing to the stabilization of the market and relieving the Government of the necessity of a forced sale.

OTHER SURPLUSES.

The report states "there is a surplus of millions of cans of fish and milk and tons of sugar, coffee, and tea."

We are reliably informed that the fact is there is no surplus of fish and that the quantities of fish which would have constituted a surplus were rejected and returned to the packers, because it did not conform to Government requirements. There is a small surplus of milk, only 680,000 cans, and to date there has been declared a surplus of 52,000,000 pounds of sugar, all of which has been turned over to the United States Sugar Equalization Board and is being distributed to meet the needs of the American people. There is no surplus whatever of coffee or tea, nor is any anticipated. (See letter of A. L. Mercer, assistant director of sales, in appendix to this report.)

SALES TO MUNICIPALITIES.

The report charges that the Director of Sales has issued a publicity statement "that meat and vegetables shall be purchased only by municipalities," they to pay the freight and have a 10 days' credit. There is no evidence whatever that the department has in any way limited the sale of food products to municipalities, and the fact is that it has not. This method of sale was simply adopted as a means of giving to the consumers of the country an additional opportunity, with the help of municipal officers, to take advantage of the Government's offerings in small quantities which on account of the lack of a retail distributing system the Government has been unable to furnish directly to the small purchaser.

Evidence taken before the subcommittee and in the record shows that for many weeks past and at the present time the Government has been pursuing independent methods of sale, both by bids and direct sales, to purchasers other than municipalities. This fact is established by the records of sales, advertisements in hundreds of newspapers, and circulars distributed throughout the country by thousands.

In this connection, the report further states:

"Many municipalities which have indicated a desire to purchase this food for the benefit of their people, have been met with the threat of injunction on the part of local dealers, which threat has been sufficient to prevent a purchase of the goods."

The plan of the department permits the consummation of the sale to the consumer without the necessity of municipal funds being used. The 10-day credit was extended to permit the municipalities to reimburse themselves from the retail sales before being required to transmit the cost to the Government.

Any threats of injunction that may have been made against municipalities have undoubtedly been inspired by profiteers, who would like to handicap the Government in making an advantageous sale of these goods as well as deny the consuming public the benefit of the Government's plan.

APPENDIX TO MINORITY REPORT.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, July 26, 1919.

Hon. H. D. FLOOD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: My attention has been called to the statement contained in a report of the Select Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, with reference to the disposition of the surplus food supplies held by the War Department. I have also your request that I advise you what my policy in this matter has been and is.

On the 11th of November, 1918, when the armistice was signed, a suspension of hostilities took place. Under the terms of the armistice, a resumption of hostilities was made possible and a more or less prolonged period followed during which there was from time to time suggested the possibility of the armistice being denounced. Nevertheless the War Department discontinued the transportation of foods to Europe, discontinued the mobilization of further forces in this country, and began at once a progressive demobilization of men. It suspended existing contracts for the procurement of supplies and took all possible steps to bring about a reduction of war expenditures. In the meantime, vast quantities of supplies already manufactured were in hand and a continued stream of deliveries from manufacturers and producers daily increased the stock of the department.

These supplies were of practically every nature, foodstuffs, clothing, implements, machinery, vehicles, thousands of items, some having little usefulness in civil life by reason of their special adaption to Army use, many of them being equally valuable for peace-time and war-time usefulness. The data in the hands of the department with reference to the speed with which demobilization could be effected were necessarily speculative. How large an army should be retained, and for how long, required to be carefully determined. The situation in Europe, the rapidity with which transportation home could be supplied, industrial conditions in the United States were all elements to be considered. As a result it was not possible instantly to place upon the market for sale to the general public the supplies held in storage by the department. It was necessary first to make an accurate forecast of the Army's needs; second, by proper inventory and examination to determine quantities on hand; and, third, to devise methods of disposing of these commodities which would take into consideration the perishable nature of some of them and the effect of their sale upon producers of raw material and labor conditions in the country. It will be recalled that the country was at the moment called upon to readjust itself industrially and commercially. The major part of the industrial force of the Nation had been summoned to the making of war supplies. Its resumption of peace-time occupations required markets for the products of labor. The commerce of the country was under a system of war conditions involving price fixing and centralized distribution, so that if at such a period the War Department had inconsiderately tendered its vast accumulations of supplies to the public consumption while it was demobilizing its industrial and military forces there would inevitably have resulted perhaps a momentary cheapening of the market price of certain commodities, but a concurrent and complete paralysis of industry, whereby the producers of raw material would have been discouraged and the manufacturers of finished products unable to resume peace-time occupations.

In December I directed that three principles be followed in the disposal of the Army surplus—

1. The disposal of supplies, as far as possible, through other Government agencies and relief commissions.

2. To take up with the original producer who furnished the article to the Government the question of repurchase, in order that materials might be distributed through their original and customary channels.

3. To offer the remaining surplus in the best market, or to the public at large, with full publicity.

This policy I stated in a letter to the Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH, of the United States Senate, in a letter, December, 1918, a copy of which letter I herewith inclose.

From that time until now I have conferred frequently with those immediately in charge of the sales of these products. Careful surveys and resurveys of the Army's probable needs have been made, surplus was declared, and efforts made to devise effective ways of placing our surplus on the market, avoiding, wherever possible, their disposition to speculators. The War Department did not have and has not the means of building a widespread retail system of sale and distribution for these products. It would require an elaborate and costly organization, reaching over the entire country. Much progress has been made in effecting sales. Of that, however, the acting director of sales has informed you in detail. With the considerations above stated in view, I can only summarize by saying that it has been and is the policy of the department to sell its surplus in the best markets, and as speedily as possible, relieving the burden upon the Public Treasury by securing as adequate a price as we can and avoiding the incidental disturbances which unconsidered action would cause. So far as foodstuffs are concerned, I have given my personal attention to the devising of ways to place the Army's surplus of foods in the hands of consumers at the lowest possible price, in order to relieve, even if but temporarily, the high cost of living, an object with which I have the deepest sympathy.

Respectfully, yours, NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
PURCHASE, STORAGE AND TRAFFIC DIVISION,
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF SALES,
Washington, July 26, 1919.

Hon. H. D. FLOOD,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. FLOOD: At the request of the Secretary of War, I have collected certain data with reference to the subsistence situation in the Army since the signing of the armistice.

This report covers the following principal points: The attitude taken by the director of purchase at the time of the signing of the armistice, the reasons for any delay in declaring food surplus, as well as evidence bearing out the fact that there has been no financial loss to the Government because of the apparent delay.

I believe you will find this report complete, but will be glad to furnish you with any further information which you may desire.

By authority of the director of sales.

Sincerely, E. C. MORSE,
First Assistant Director of Sales.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
PURCHASE, STORAGE AND TRAFFIC DIVISION,
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF SALES,
Washington, July 26, 1919.

Memorandum for Mr. E. C. Morse, first assistant director of sales.

1. As you requested, I am submitting a complete report on the canned meat and vegetable situation. You asked me to determine the status of contracts, the reason for delay in reporting surplus, and whether the Government lost in dollars and cents return because of the apparent delay.

2. Attached marked "Exhibit A" is a statement from Col. Julian L. Schley, director of purchase, which explains the contract situation. Attached marked "Exhibit B" is a statement from Col. Norris Stayten, assistant director of storage, which explains some of the difficulties in obtaining inventories and consequent reports of surplus.

3. Having by way of these memoranda explained the problem confronting the War Department in obtaining complete inventories and of knowing accurately what the requirements would be, your attention is invited to the fact that surplus canned meats were declared beginning in January and running through to March 26, when the surplus meat figures were given us in reasonably correct form. On May 5 a conference was held, at which time the surplus figures were corrected, as follows. The present figures are also given.

Commodity.	May 5.	Present.
	Pounds.	Pounds.
Bacon	47,000,000	91,178,671
Roast beef	38,000,000	49,323,768
Corned beef	36,000,000	53,231,216
Corned-beef hash	20,000,000	37,314,995
Total	141,000,000	231,048,650

These meats cost the Government average prices as follows:

Bacon issue, ser. 8, crates	per pound	$0.40
Bacon issue, ser. 10, 12-pound cans	do	.46
Beef, roast, 6-pound cans	per can	2.70
Beef, roast, 2-pound cans	do	.82
Beef, roast, 1-pound cans	do	.51
Beef, roast, 12-ounce cans	do	.35
Beef, corned, 6-pound cans	do	2.09
Beef, corned, 24-ounce cans	do	.70
Beef, corned, 1-pound cans	do	.45
Beef, corned, 12-ounce cans	do	.38
Hash, corned beef, 2-pound cans	do	.48
Hash, corned beef, 1-pound cans	do	.28

4. It is next advisable to present to you the efforts made to sell as having particularly to do with the statement that it was our desire to export all our foodstuffs rather than to place them on the American market. To discuss nothing but canned vegetables for the moment, your attention is called to a letter written on December 6 to the American Canners' Association by Gen. Wood, then director of purchase and storage. This letter stated that canned vegetables would not be placed on the American market during the canning season. This letter was written upon the urgent request of the American Canners' Association, claiming that if the Government's surplus canned vegetables were immediately placed on the market it would stop jobbers of canned vegetables from placing orders with the canners, which in turn would react upon the farmers, who would not plant vegetables, and thus workmen be thrown out of work. Orders are placed by jobbers in January, February, and March for the coming crop. These orders are used as a basis of credit with banks by canners. Crops planted are predicated upon these orders placed with canners by jobbers. At this time it was anticipated—in any event, it was generally thought by canners and farmers—that we had a considerably greater surplus than it later developed we actually had. This was having a rather demoralizing effect upon the market.

5. It was assumed by Gen. Wood's organization, in view of the fact that it was proposed not to place surplus stocks of vegetables on the American market so quickly, that it might be best for the Government to develop foreign markets, particularly in view of the food requirements of European nations. The purchase and storage organization thought that, in view of the need for food, it would have to be supplied either by American jobbers or from Army reserve stocks. In any event, it was thought this demand, however met, would have the same influence upon price, and that the Government's problem was to move the surplus in accordance with existing economic conditions, to realize the best return for the Treasury.

6. In endeavoring to develop a foreign market purchase and storage was unable to secure from the sale of this surplus the price it was thought these foods should bring. This was largely due to the fact that in the early months of the year no credit arrangements could be made by foreign governments which would satisfy the American bankers. Attention is also called to the fact that purchase and storage endeavored to interest representatives of foreign governments in the purchase of certain surplus canned vegetables, but was unsuccessful, largely because of the matter of credit.

7. When we began to get reasonably correct inventories of surplus it was realized that our surplus was not as great as was anticipated. It was further realized that jobbers had already placed their orders; that the canning season was approaching; and that, in view of the world-wide demand for food, the time had come when the Government's surplus could be placed on the market without interfering with market conditions to the extent of reducing the year's pack and to bring the dollars and cents return. Therefore Gen. Wood's letter of December 6 to the canners, and which was written before the director of sales was appointed, was abrogated on May 23. On June 3, as indicated above, a reasonably complete and accurate report of surplus vegetables was received by the sales organization.

8. In the next place the statement is made that large quantities of these vegetables deteriorated because of delay. Your attention is invited to the fact that canned goods are supposed to keep for a considerable period. Any swells or deterioration in canned vegetables should become evident in 90 days, and the manufacturers agree to replace defective goods if the defects present themselves within a period of approximately nine months, or before June 30, for the previous year's pack. As a matter of fact, no canned vegetables deteriorated, or, at least, have been sold on a deteriorated basis of price. Newspaper articles to the effect that our vegetables are deteriorated have interfered more than any other one thing with the sale of vegetables at a good price.

9. Had the War Department placed its surplus vegetables on the market in the early spring we would have suffered a sacrifice in price, because of the fact that speculators expected to buy Government surplus at a greatly reduced figure. The people certainly could not have benefited had a speculator been able to get hold of this surplus, and otherwise should this surplus have been placed on the market at this time the canners and the producers would not have proceeded with normal plans for the 1919 crop. As a result of this fact, there would have been a great shortage in canned vegetables, which would have forced the price considerably higher than it is at the present time.

10. It has never been the intention of the Secretary of War to export these canned vegetables as against placing them on the American market. It is our policy to sell our surplus in the best market that we may place in the Government Treasury the maximum dollars and cents return with the idea of lessening taxes that much. It naturally follows that where there is a good American market we would most certainly sell in that market rather than export.

11. With regard to canned meats, certain small quantities were reported surplus up to March 26 and until May 5, when a very complete and comprehensive report was submitted as to that date. Obviously this report was not absolutely accurate in view of the difficulty in obtaining inventories and in view of the rapidly demobilizing army in France and in this country.

12. On May 5 a meeting was held with the meat packers, as similar meetings have been held with the producers of various commodities, with the idea of receiving benefit from their knowledge and experience in the industry. If you will refer to the minutes of this meeting, you will observe that the meat packers suggested that our meats were not standard commercial goods in the standard commercial package altogether suitable for resale. You will further find in the minutes a statement to the effect that these meats might be exported to good advantage. Attention was called to the fact that the bacon is of a special Army cure. Therefore this particular bacon was represented as being not altogether suitable to meet domestic demands and difficulties might present themselves in attempting to export this particular commodity. You will further observe that the meat packers offered to dispose of this surplus on behalf of the Government, returning to the Government the full dollars and cents return from the sale of this surplus less whatever their operating expenses might be.

13. After considerable discussion it was determined best to attempt to dispose of these meats in this country by sealed bid, thereby permitting all possible purchasers to obtain these commodities. In formulating this policy we had in mind the thought that the American public, having virtually paid for these canned meats, were entitled to benefit were there any benefits to be received by the sale of these meats in this country. It was not deemed expedient to export until domestic markets were exhausted, neither was it deemed expedient to sell through the packers, owing to the fact that the packers are being criticized by the general public.

14. There was never any agreement with them to withhold canned meats from the market. Any seeming delay in placing meats for sale is the result of the difficulty in obtaining accurate inventories and reports of surplus, our desire to aid in stabilizing industry with good wages to workmen, together with our keen desire to obtain the maximum dollars and cents return from the sale of canned meats by placing on the best markets at the most opportune time.

15. As in the case of vegetables, there were rumors current in the early months of this year to the effect that our surplus was considerably greater than it later proved to be. Consequently stock growers were in communication with us, as was the Farmers' Grange, requesting that we dispose of our surplus meats in such a way as to affect stock growing as little as possible. Attached, marked "Exhibit C," are copies of certain telegrams received by this office. The economic solution of the problem is to be found in the fact that there is a certain amount of surplus which the market must absorb. In view of the tremendous demand for foodstuffs from abroad there is obviously a market for this surplus. It then becomes a question of placing the surplus on the market in quantities over a period of time so as to disturb economic conditions as little as possible and avoid a panicy condition. The foregoing thoughts explain the reasons why we have been in no haste to indiscriminately dump surplus meats on the market regardless of consequences.

16. Again, statements have been made in publicity articles to the effect that millions of dollars worth of surplus meats have been allowed to deteriorate. The only case of this kind which has come to our attention is 1,500,000 pounds of ham which was delivered to Norfolk upon requisition from the American Expeditionary Forces in October. Of the 12,000,000 pounds of ham requisitioned, the Army was only able to secure 6,000,000 pounds, of which the 1,500,000 pounds at Norfolk was a part. Shipments were made from Chicago during the months of January, February, and March. This ham remained in Norfolk until the requisition from the American Expeditionary Forces was canceled, at which time the Surplus Property Division of the office of the Director of Purchase and Storage was advised of the cancellation. Consequently, on May 18, each surplus property of each zone office was telegraphed to offer this meat for sale. Sales on the whole lot were consummated on June 2 at a price of 20 cents per pound and sold by sealed bid to Harris Bros., of Chicago.

17. In stating that this meat was deteriorated attention should be called to the fact that it was slightly moldy and required reconditioning to put it into first-class salable condition. Obviously this meat could not have been in poor condition or the pure-food law would have prevented its resale. There is no question but what we sacrificed somewhat because of the unpresentable condition of this meat. We paid 40 cents per pound for it, and the market price at the time of sale was 35 cents per pound. Your attention is further called to the fact that this market price as quoted represents the price at which the packers sell to the dealers under guaranty. We can not hope to sell our surplus at the full market price for the reason that we expect cash and do not extend any guaranty. So far as we know, no other meats have deteriorated or have been sold in a deteriorated condition.

18. Your attention is invited to the fact that we have a surplus of 680,000 cans of milk. As you appreciate this but represents a drop in the bucket in so far as the daily production of milk is concerned. This commodity does not deteriorate rapidly.

19. In so far as surplus fish is concerned, your attention is invited to the fact that approximately 32,000,000 cans of salmon was turned back to salmon canners at cost, the reason being that the salmon did not come up to Government specifications, and we required them, therefore, to take back these goods.

20. To date there has been declared surplus a total of approximately 52,000,000 pounds of sugar, all of which the Army has turned over to the United States sugar equalization board, branch of the Food Administration, for distribution throughout the United States. In this connection you are advised that offers have been made for this surplus sugar by exporters at prices in excess of 2 cents per pound above that at which the sugar was being allocated by the sugar equalization board in this country. The sugar has been handled in this manner owing to a sugar shortage in certain sections of the United States. This sugar is being sold by the equalization board for the account of the Government at 0.0879 cents per pound, which represents the actual cost to the Army. In view of the fact that America imports considerable sugar, we considered it advisable to take care of the American markets before exporting.

21. Your attention is called to the number of publicity articles which have appeared to the effect that we have millions of pounds of tea and coffee. This information is absolutely contrary to fact, for we have absolutely no surplus tea or coffee, nor do we anticipate having any.

22. Sales of flour total approximately 70,000,000 pounds, on practically all of which cost to the Army has been recovered. Most of the flour sales above referred to have been made to the United States Food Administration Grain Corporation and to the Navy and Marine Corps at cost. At the time of the lifting of the regulation requiring the use of certain percentage of flour substitutes in the manufacture of bread the Army had left on hand a considerable amount of flour substitutes. Owing to the fact that everyone in the trade, from the miller down to the retailer, and even the householder, were stocked up with flour substitutes, there was absolutely no demand for these substitutes for human consumption, and it has been necessary to develop a market among the feed manufacturers in the country. Naturally some of these substitutes have deteriorated on account of hot weather and storage conditions, but this deterioration has not affected the price obtainable for these for the manufacture of cattle and chicken feed.

23. In disposing of these surplus foods in this country, we were face to face with the practical question of distribution. We have neither the personnel nor the time necessary to sell these foods direct to the consumer on a retail basis. Our limited personnel and our desire to expedite the sale as promptly as possible to take advantage of the present market conditions necessitated that these foods be sold in reasonably large quantities. As a result of the foregoing thought, we decided that it was advisable to give municipalities an opportunity to purchase surplus meats at approximately 20 per cent below cost and vegetables at cost, the idea being that municipalities could in turn sell these foods at cost to the people, thereby helping out somewhat with the high cost of living.

24. It is our thought that considerable quantities of canned foods can be sold to advantage through municipalities, as we are receiving a number of inquiries from them, as covered by exhibit D attached, possibly through large department stores, who are willing to dispose of Government surplus at the same price which they pay for these stocks and the balance to be sold on the American market at a fixed price set, or at this same price for export.

25. For your information we are attaching a tabulated report of sales of surplus subsistence or food, marked "Exhibit E," as our records indicate to date. Your attention is invited to the fact that reports of sales do not come to rest in the office of the Director of Sales until possibly two or three weeks after the sales are made. Consequently this report is not absolutely complete to date, but it will give you a complete and comprehensive idea of the classes of commodities being sold and the period over which these sales have been made. Below is a digest taken from the weekly report of sales made by the Surplus Property Division as follows:

Week ending—	Sales per week.	Sales to date.	Percentage recovery.
			Per cent.
Apr. 19	$197,926	[1] $1,257,849	102.09
Apr. 26	991,296	2,249,145	100.84
May 3	924,165	3,173,310	100.58
May 10	1,472	3,174,782	100.48
May 17	1,301,560	4,476,342	100.4

[1] All sales made to Apr. 19 included.

The following sales have been or are being made, but reports of sales have not reached this office: Sugar, $4,570,000; bacon, $2,242,900; corned beef, $1,668,750; canned vegetables, $2,600,000; canned tomatoes, $3,000,000. Total, $14,061,650. Therefore, the grand total sales of subsistence to date amounts to $26,679,712. This very clearly establishes the fact in our minds that sales are being made just as rapidly as possible and as conditions warrant. The grand total surplus subsistence in possession of the War Department as of July 12, amounts to $123,703,504, a part of which has been recently declared surplus. For your information we have received not less than 85.7 cents on the cost dollar on all surplus foodstuffs sold to date.

26. On July 9 a publicity article was issued to the effect that the War Department would sell surplus food to municipalities. On July 11 a second statement was issued amplifying the first to the extent that this article explained the method whereby municipalities could obtain surplus food. This article went on to state that municipalities might have 10 days' credit, thereby permitting cities to obtain surplus foods, sell them, and return the proceeds to the Government in those instances where the city charter would not permit an outright purchase. This publicity statement did not state as issued from this office nor was it intended to imply that food would be disposed of entirely through municipalities.

27. As an illustration of the truth of this statement we want to call to your attention the fact that in May it was decided to offer for sale in the United States by advertisement and sealed bids all surplus canned meats. About 20,000 circular letters, giving information regarding this sale, were sent to all State, municipal, and charitable institutions, as well as dealers, jobbers, and exporters. In addition to this newspaper advertising was used. Bids were received and opened June 20. Abstracts thereof were made and submitted to the Secretary of War, with recommendations that all be rejected due to the fact that they did not show an adequate recovery. The Secretary approved these recommendations, and authorized sale of bacon and canned meats at not less than certain minimum prices, also to municipalities in not less than carload lots at prices approximating 80 per cent of the original cost.

28. Likewise, of our total quantity of canned meats we have sold approximately 5,000,000 pounds of bacon at a price above the minimum price set by the Secretary of War at which bacon and other meats on which a minimum price was set could be sold to purchasers such as Louis Leavitt, of New York; Kurtz-Wilson, commission merchants, of Baltimore; and W. S. Sawrie & Son, meat dealers, of Nashville, Tenn. These parties have purchased the total of 5,000,000 pounds of bacon having been sold out of our entire surplus.

29. Likewise, final determination of surplus canned vegetables was arrived at June 3, and instructions were immediately given to offer same for sale in the United States by advertisement and sealed bids to be opened June 30. Due notice of this was given not only by newspaper advertising but by circular letters to all State, municipal, and charitable institutions and dealers, jobbers, and exporters, as a result of which 1,572 different bids were received from all zones throughout the country.

30. These bids were forwarded to Washington by each zone, where a master abstract was made and recommendations of awards prepared, which was submitted to the Secretary of War and approved by him. The bids on canned vegetables were received as a whole from the leading wholesale grocers throughout the United States, as well as department stores and retailers. As a whole, the bids received were not of a speculative character, and no speculative bids were accepted.

31. The following table shows the quantities of vegetables disposed of by sealed bids recently opened and the balance remaining for sale:

Recommended sales.	Left from offering.	To be declared surplus.	Total available surplus.
Corn, cans, 17,442,890	1,611,951	12,749,803	14,361,754

WAR DEPARTMENT,
PURCHASE, STORAGE AND TRAFFIC DIVISION,
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PURCHASE AND STORAGE,
Washington, July 26, 1919.

From: Director of Purchase.
To: A. L. Mercer, assistant director of sales.

1. Probably never in the history of the world has a production approached that which was obtained in this country and which was at its height in November of 1918. Based on requirements furnished by the General Staff, purchases of foodstuffs were in progress for 5,000,000 men for the coming year. Many manufacturers of commercial articles had been persuaded to transform their plants into production of war materials, and their commercial production of commodities not needed for war had been reduced to an absolute minimum.

2. Relative to canned vegetables and fruits, attention is invited to the fact that these are seasonal products and that allotments of the possible output of the country for the use of the military forces was made by the Food Administration a year in advance and covering the requirements for a year. Of the 1918 pack, this resulted in reservations for the Army of 45 per cent of the tomato pack, 25 per cent each of the peas and corn packs, and 15 per cent of string beans pack. It so happens that, in the early part of November, the canning season had just closed, and therefore the canning of the allotment for the coming year was practically completed and the delivery of these goods to the Army was at its height.

3. On November 7, immediately upon the receipt of the rumor in this country that an armistice had been signed, telegrams were sent from the office of the director of purchase to suspend all purchases except food, forage, and other necessary articles until further orders. On the same date telegrams were sent from the subsistence division to stop all purchasing of canned vegetables and canned and dried fruits allotted by the Food Administration. The object of this immediate action was to stop promptly the tremendous production of war material which had been developed during the war.

4. An order was issued by the director of purchase on November 9 directing that all purchases for immediate needs be first referred to his office for approval, and that all orders and contracts which had not yet been placed be submitted to his office for action. The purpose of this order was to place in the hands of the director of purchase himself complete control of further production in order to be certain that it would not exceed the needs of the Army under the changed conditions.

5. The purchase service then proceeded to inspect the outstanding contracts in order to determine which should be canceled immediately and which should be permitted to continue. In the case of foodstuffs and forage it must be remembered that the Army was still in existence in spite of the armistice, and that the men and horses had to be fed. The purchase of perishable foodstuffs, therefore, which were being bought from time to time and not stored for future consumption, as in the case of canned goods, was continued and was tapered off as demobilization reduced the requirements.

6. The outstanding contracts might be divided generally into two classes: First, those for articles not needed because of the cessation of hostilities; and second, those which would be needed. Contracts for articles not needed may again be divided into two classes: First, those which could be terminated immediately; and second, those which could not be terminated immediately. This second class includes contracts, the immediate cancellation of which would have disrupted the industry, doing material damage to the contractor, to the farmer, and to labor. The tremendous production of war materials which the country had entered into had acquired a momentum which could not, in the case of some classes of supplies, be stopped at once without doing irreparable damage to the industries of the country. Production was stopped as quickly as it was possible to do so, in the opinion of those in charge at the time, without seriously damaging the industries of the country.

7. Every effort has been exercised since the armistice to prevent purchase of articles already in the possession of the Army, and such purchases have been made only in case of great emergency or where shipment of articles already in stock would have involved a greater expense than the additional procurement, and in such cases the purchase was confined to immediate needs.

8. The outstanding contracts of the Quartermaster Department at the time of the armistice numbered approximately 16,000, involving a total money value of $1,800,000,000.

9. Machinery was immediately set up for negotiating termination proceedings and for the consideration of the claims which naturally arose out of the cancellation of these outstanding contracts. This work is progressing satisfactorily.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
PURCHASE, STORAGE AND TRAFFIC DIVISION,
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PURCHASE AND STORAGE,
Washington, July 25, 1919.

Memorandum for Mr. A. L. Mercer, assistant director of sales.

In compliance with your request for information as to the delay in declaring food surpluses, the following is submitted:

The first point to be considered is that on November 11 the entire production of munitions and food supplies of this country can be likened to an enormous engine, that was built to go in one direction only, with no brakes or reverse for stopping.

On November 11, when the hostilities ceased, due to the signing of the armistice, the first task that confronted the authorities charged with the supply of the Army was to bring this enormous engine to a stop the best way they could. The enormous production built up was caused by the fact that those in authority had to go on the assumption that the war would last for years, and in no way could slacken up until the armistice was signed. It was impossible to stop at once the forward tendency of this engine. As it was gradually brought to a standstill, the problem became one of rebuilding, so as to reverse the process and dispose of the vast amount of stores that had accumulated.

Due to the speed of production and inherent confusion accurate record of the amount and location of this vast quantity of stores was not possible. It was, therefore, necessary before any attempt could be made to dispose of surplus stocks that a complete inventory had to be taken in order to determine our stocks. For this purpose it was decided that rather than trust to the usual inventory required by Army Regulations, due to the greatness of the problem involved, that a special organization be set up for the purpose of taking this inventory as of December 31.

For this purpose 178 officers were called to Washington on December 1, and received instructions in the methods to be used in taking this inventory. On December 17 this body of officers was sent to the various zone supply offices and camps. An officer was designated by the commanding officer of each post and military station for the purpose of taking the inventory at his station. These officers were assembled in the zone supply office of their zone for the purpose of receiving the instructions from the officers sent from Washington, mentioned above.

On December 31 this inventory started throughout the United States. The physical count was completed in 10 days at all posts, stations, and depots. These reports were then brought to Washington and consolidated. When it is considered that this vast quantity of P. & S. supplies was scattered throughout the country in 16 zone supply depots, 3 Army reserve depots, 4 large port terminals, and from 200 to 300 posts, it is obvious that the task of determining the amount and location of these supplies was a problem in itself. To illustrate, there were some 180,000 different items to be counted, reported, and consolidated. To do this it took approximately 10,000 people to complete this work. Inventory was completed on April 30, and a list prepared for the use of declaring surpluses.

Naturally the time involved changed the condition of some of the stocks, principally subsistence items. A system of monthly stock reports continuing from December 31 on enabled this list to be made of value. The above involves only the articles handled by the Purchase and Storage Service, and was exclusive of our property in France.

Instructions of Gen. March, issued on November 30, to dispose of surplus perishable foods in the possession of the War Department were obeyed as rapidly as information could be obtained as to their location. For your information, it has never been considered that canned vegetables and meats were of a perishable nature. In fact, they have always been considered articles to be kept for from one to two years. Any deterioration taking place in these articles usually takes place within 90 days.

Aside from the article of smoked ham, which somewhat deteriorated in storage at Norfolk, there has been practically no deterioration of food supplies in the Army. It is safe to say that the total loss from all causes which includes spoilage of individual cans of canned goods, the loss through leakage and breakage throughout all the commissaries in the country, averages approximately $13,000 per month. This is a remarkably good showing when it is considered that the average amount of subsistence stores handled during a month runs considerably into millions of dollars.

Your attention is also invited to the fact that the Army program as announced, giving the rate of demobilization, was considerably greater in actual practice. This continued to increase the amount of surplus stocks of these food supplies and made it difficult to obtain accurate data upon which to declare surpluses. One point to be considered in the time elapsing between the signing of the armistice and the actual declaration of surplus food supplies is the fact that an armistice did not necessarily mean a cessation of hostilities. In fact, on several occasions between the signing of the armistice and the actual signing of the peace treaty by the German nation it looked as if hostilities might be resumed, and while this will probably be answered by the statement that we were demobilizing men, your attention is invited to the fact that to recall the men would be a comparatively easy task when compared with the task of obtaining food if we had gone blindly about selling what might be considered surplus. It was absolutely necessary that these surpluses be accurate when making this declaration, for it would have been fatal had hostilities been resumed and no food available for the Army necessary to continue overseas.

I believe the above explanation gives the reason for the apparent delay in the declaration of surplus food supplies on the part of the War Department.

From the above it can readily be deduced that there was no way in which this declaration could be hastened, except by blindly selling food that may have been needed by the Army had conditions changed.

There is one other point that occurs to me. That is that in order to enable articles of food to be placed upon the market there is certain commercial information that must be obtained before any selling organization can dispose of the same, and that this information was never made a matter of record by the War Department, as it was not a selling organization. For instance, a can of bacon was a can of bacon, irrespective of as to by whom it was packed or by what brand it was commercially known.

Having no reply to my letters 9th and 13th, am uncertain regarding recent developments in sales surplus canned vegetables. Understand canners conferring with you to-day. Wholesale grocers have stated to you in detail their opinion regarding the distribution of these goods. Can only add without question the sale of the surplus tomato stock at this time will have a disturbing effect upon the market, probably more so than the sale of other vegetables. Will appreciate information as the situation develops. Wholesale grocers of the United States are greatly interested in this matter, both financially and for economic reasons.

On March 17, this year, and under direction of Gen. Rogers, of the United States Army, a letter was written embodying in it that there would be no canned vegetables dumped on the market. Canners in the United States have relied absolutely upon this letter and have gone ahead with acreage for this year. It is very disastrous to canners now if you allow Army goods to go on the market at less than reproductive costs or until domestic market will consume them. We feel it imperative to ask that you withhold the tomatoes until they are needed for the domestic market.

We fail to see any equity, justice, or law by which a country, which went abroad to make the world safe for democracy, can autocratically commandeer for a specific purpose, in a great many instances at less than actual cost, and then use these commandeered goods to put these same industries out of business.

We think it distinctly unfair and grossest bad faith to sell these goods in any manner calculated to break this year's market and ruin packers' business probably for several years. Packers not only ones affected. All farmers and foremen in packing districts would be damaged. Government should market at this time only such quantity as can be absorbed without upsetting stability of market conditions. Every effort should be made to find export market and lay foundation for future export business. Balance should be reserved at least 12 months or until required to make up scarcity.

Hon. CHARLES CURTIS, Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER, Hon. D. R. ANTHONY, Jr., Hon. EDWARD C. LITTLE, Hon. PHILIP P. CAMPBELL, Hon. HOMER HOCH, Hon. JAMES G. STRONG, Hon. HAYS B. WHITE, Hon. J. N. TINCHER, Hon. W. A. AYRES, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIRS: I am writing you regarding the much-talked-of Government-owned meat. We have made some investigation regarding this matter and find there is quite a supply of frozen beef in storage in this country that was purchased by the Government during the war for shipment abroad. We also find there is a considerable quantity of canned meats owned by the Government. We have noticed through the press that the Government is offering quantities of this meat in this country for sale and that the bids for same aggregated from 25 to 50 per cent of the actual cost of the meat, and it appears that there have been a few sales made of this product at these reduced prices.

To our mind there are only two ways of disposing of this meat by the Government: First, if it is to be disposed of in the United States it should be handled through some Government distributing agent in the cities where the population is composed of employees of manufacturers, etc. In other words, we feel that if the Government is going to make a sacrifice of the prices of this Government-owned food that it should make the sacrifice direct to the consumer and thereby give the laboring people and poorer people an opportunity to buy this food at the reduced price.

It is evident that if this meat is sold to packers or to traders that it will not reach the consuming public at a price commensurate with what the Government received for same and, therefore, would be to no advantage to the consuming public, but a great disadvantage to the producers of meat products.

Second. If the Government can not arrange to distribute this meat in line as above indicated and will necessarily have to sustain a material reduction in the cost price, that they should make arrangements to export these products to feed the hungry people of foreign countries.

By shipping this product out of the country it will be surely to the advantage of the meat producers of the country.

The farmers and producers in the United States responded patriotically to the call of the Government for increased production, and the consumers of meat also responded to the demands of the Government for conservation in the eating of meats. This, of course, on account of the war. Now that the war is over the Government surely should lend every aid and assistance possible to the producer in protecting him against the slaughter of the prices of his product.

It is evident, however, by turning loose in the markets all the Government supplies they may have had in store when the armistice was signed would not be safeguarding the producers' interests.

Speaking for the members of the Kansas Live Stock Association and also as a member of the National Producers' Committee, I protest against the War Department selling to packers, traders, or distributors of meat of any kind the supply of meat owned by the Government at this time.

I earnestly urge you as the Representatives of Kansas in Congress to use your influence in this matter in safeguarding, as best as possible, the producers of beef and mutton of our State and, in fact, the producers of the entire country.

Yours, very truly,

J. H. MERCER, Commissioner.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF SALES,
Washington, July 25, 1919.

Memorandum for Mr. Mercer.

Subject: Sales of the canned meats and vegetables to municipalities and negotiations inaugurated by the cities for such supplies as reported by surplus property offices.

1. At the request of Mr. Morse, Col. Nixon sent telegrams on July 22 to the 18 surplus property officers detailed to the zone supply offices and depots at which supplies of canned meats and vegetables are available, asking a report on sales made to date to municipalities and an enumeration of the cities by which negotiations had been inaugurated.

2. Appended is a summarization of the reports received from the surplus property officers at the following posts:

3. Boston, July 23. No canned goods shipped to date to municipalities. Negotiations are under way with 14 New England cities. (Names not given.) Facts relative to these negotiations are embodied in letter en route to Washington.

4. Baltimore, July 23. Sales to municipalities to date are as follows:

Baltimore: One hundred and fifty cases roast beef, 175 cases corned beef, 200 cases corned beef hash, 100 cases pumpkin, 15,000 cans tomatoes, 15,000 cans peas, 13,600 cans corn, 11,300 cans pork and beans, 2,100 packages cornstarch, and 60 gallons sirup.

District of Columbia: Two hundred cans bacon, 4,000 cans baked beans, 2,000 cans corn, 2,000 cans peas, 6,000 cans tomatoes, 100 dozen cans corned beef, 100 dozen cans roast beef, and 100 dozen cans corned beef hash.

Cumberland, Md.: Eighty cases bacon, 300 cases tomatoes, 200 cases corn, 25 cases corned beef, 4,000 packages cornstarch, 50 cases peas, 50 cases pork and beans, 50 cases pumpkin.

Altoona, Pa.: Five tons bacon, 200 cases tomatoes, 200 cases corn, 200 cases peas, 100 cases pork and beans.

5. Negotiations are now being conducted by that office with the cities of Pittsburgh, Pa.; Reading, Pa.; Scranton, Pa.; Bradford, Pa.; Latrobe, Pa.; Butler, Pa.; Allentown, Pa.; Keyster, W. Va.; Suffolk, Va.; and Frederick, Md. The quantities embraced in these negotiations approximate 25 carloads.

6. The Baltimore office is also in communication with approximately 50 other cities by which definite negotiations have not yet been inaugurated.

7. Philadelphia, July 23. No canned goods stored in that zone. Inquiries from municipalities received at Philadelphia are referred to Washington.

8. Columbus, Ohio, July 23. No canned goods have been shipped to municipalities. No negotiations are in progress.

9. Atlanta, Ga., July 23. The following goods have been sold to municipalities:

Three thousand pounds bacon, 706 1-pound cans roast beef, 2,200 2-pound cans roast beef, 2,000 2-pound cans corned-beef hash, 1,600 No. 2 cans corn, 3,000 cans hominy, 2,200 No. 2 cans peas, 3,600 No. 3 cans sweet potatoes, 75,000 No. 2 cans tomatoes, 11,000 No. 3 cans tomatoes.

Negotiations are being conducted with the mayors of Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mobile, Ala.; Florence, S. C.; Greenville, S. C.; Daytona, Fla.; and Gainesville, Ga. No definite quantities have yet been specified for by these cities.

10. Omaha, Nebr., July 23. No canned goods have been sold to municipalities. No bids have been received from municipalities.

11. San Francisco, Calif., July 23. No sales of canned goods have been made to municipalities. No negotiations are reported.

12. New Orleans, July 23. No goods have been shipped to municipalities. None are being negotiated for. Inquiries have been received from Birmingham, Ala., and Houston, Tex.

13. Jeffersonville, Ind., July 23. No negotiations with municipalities have been inaugurated. No canned goods in storage at this depot.

14. Newport News, Va., July 24. The following sale has been made to the city of Newport News: Thirty-two cases corned beef.

15. St. Louis, Mo., July 24. No goods have been sold to municipalities. No negotiations are now being conducted with cities. Several inquiries from cities have been received.

16. New Cumberland, Pa., July 23. No canned goods have been shipped to municipalities. Negotiations for approximately 10 carloads are now being carried on with the cities of Wilkes-Barre, Scranton, Harrisburg, York, Pittsburgh, Johnstown, and Warren, Pa.

17. According to the incomplete report received by the Surplus Property Division from zone supply offices and depots, sales to 6 municipalities have been consummated; negotiations are being carried on with 37 other cities; and inquiries as to the commodities offered, the quantities available, and the prices asked have been received from 52 additional communities. Six of the zone supply offices and depots to which Col. Nixon addressed his telegram of inquiry have not yet responded. Included in this number is the Chicago zone supply office. I am unofficially advised that Chicago has received numerous inquiries from central western cities.

B. A. MATTINGLY,
Acting Chief, Sales Promotion Section.

P. S.—Baltimore reported to-day (Saturday, July 26) by telephone that, in addition to the sales reported in the telegram of July 23, it has consummated sales with the cities of Wilmington, Del.; Pittsburgh, Pa.; and Allentown, Pa., and is now negotiating with 30 or 40 other cities.

The surplus property officer at New York reported to-day that he has begun negotiations with 10 cities, the names of which were not given.

TAX ON PURE FRUIT-JUICE BEVERAGES.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House bill 7840, a bill to reduce the tax upon fruit juices.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of House bill 7840.

Mr. KITCHIN. Pending that, how about the time?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7840) providing for a tax on pure fruit-juice beverages.

Mr. FORDNEY. We take up this bill, Mr. Speaker, with the understanding between the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] and this side of the House that at the conclusion of the consideration of this bill we shall adjourn for the day.

Mr. KITCHIN. In other words, this is the last bill that will be taken up to-day?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman anticipate that we will pass this bill to-day?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes. It is a small bill.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; but sometimes a small baby has trouble in teething. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7840. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7840, with Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7840, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all nonalcoholic fruit-juice beverages, whether carbonated or not, whether consisting of pure fruit juice or of pure fruit juice to which sugar or water or both have been added, when sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer, in bottles or other closed containers, a tax of 2 cents per gallon, and such beverages shall not be deemed soft drinks. All provisions of any act or acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act, or imposing any other or different tax on the articles taxed herein, are hereby repealed.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HAWLEY. The bill proposes a modification of existing revenue laws in so far as they affect nonalcoholic pure fruit-juice beverages, which so far as they were presented at the hearing include loganberry juice, grape juice, and apple juice. These are food products made from fruits grown on the farm by expressing the juice and putting it into closed containers in an unfermented state.

The manufacturers of these products showed that the present rate of tax is so great as to consume all the profit and threaten the extinction of the industry. The relief afforded by this bill will enable them to continue in business, preserve for domestic uses as excellent articles of food vast quantities of fruit that otherwise would be lost to consumption.

It is believed that this tax of 2 cents per gallon in addition to the income and profits taxes to be paid by the manufacturers will produce on the whole a larger amount of revenue than would be obtained by continuing the present rates and impairing or destroying the industry. The growers of fruit from thousands of acres of loganberry and grape vineyards and apple orchards will be afforded a steady and profitable market.

No other article in the nature of a sirup is taxed under the law.

The loganberry grows well on the Pacific coast of the United States. It does not thrive under climatic conditions of extreme heat or extreme cold. It is a cross between the western wild blackberry and the red raspberry, and because of its large juice content does not stand shipment, especially for long distances.

It must be used within a short time after picking. It is made into jams and jellies, or dried, but can not be canned because of the extreme acidity of the fruit. The principal method of preserving the product is in the form of juice, which is pressed out and bottled in an unfermented state. This is the backbone of the industry. Some years ago, when the berries were first grown, after a short term of experimentation, many growers dug up their vines because of insufficient means of marketing the product, but with the establishment of the juice business thousands of acres have been replanted and the acreage is continually growing.

Under the present revenue law the tax is levied upon the gross sales, which include the items shown in the table below.

The evidence before the committee showed that with the present tax imposed, the industry would be eliminated or seriously damaged, and that it could not survive.

SUMMARY OF LOSS IN SALES FOR FOUR MONTHS SINCE 10 PER CENT REVENUE TAX ON GROSS SELLING PRICE WENT INTO EFFECT.

This is the showing of the Pheasant Northwest Products Co., of Salem, Oreg., and Olympia, Wash. The sales in question are approximately two-thirds loganberry juice and one-third unfermented apple juice.

	1918	1919
March	$82,407.07	$32,237.97
April	163,130.21	39,515.89
May	145,109.54	60,650.00
June	182,772.22	90,250.00
Total	573,419.04	222,653.86
Loss		350,755.18
Tax payable		22,265.39

In the first few years they made no profit, but operated at a loss while establishing the business, building their plant, organizing their selling agencies, and advertising their products; 1918 was the first year they made any noticeable profit, which amounted to less than $70,000. The gross sales were approximately $1,387,000. Ten per cent tax on gross sales would produce a tax of $138,700, and had the tax been collected during 1918 it would have taken all their profits of $70,000 and $68,700 more to pay this tax. No business can exist on that basis.

The total sales for the months March, April, May, and June of 1918 were $573,419.04. The tax took effect March 1, 1919, and during the four months following the taking effect of the tax—March, April, May, and June, 1919—the sales decreased to $222,653.86, a decrease of $350,755.18 in the four months in gross sales, due to the imposition of the tax.

We believe that the condition of these industries necessitates the passing of this bill; and, as stated above, that by permitting the industries to continue the Government will receive, on the whole, more revenue from the 2 cents per gallon tax and the income and profits taxes than under existing law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let us have that clear, because a number of questions are being asked about it. This new tax of 2 cents a gallon does not apply to such compounds as Coca-Cola or any mineral water or any soft drinks chemically prepared, but applies only to fruit juices. Is that correct?

Mr. HAWLEY. I took the matter up with the Treasury Department, and they agree with the gentleman's construction, that it is confined to pure fruit juices.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is, the product of the farm exclusively, without any compound whatever?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; except that they may be carbonated and a little sugar may be put with it.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. But on the carbonated waters and other commodities of that sort, and ginger ale and all that, there is a tax of 10 or 15 per cent?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; on synthetic beverages.

Mr. MADDEN. That, of course, permits this commodity to go for a less tax than water, does it not?

Mr. HAWLEY. No.

Mr. MADDEN. Two cents a gallon is less than 15 per cent.

Mr. HAWLEY. On synthetic beverages the tax is as in section 628, but this proposes that on pure fruit beverages the tax shall be 2 cents a gallon.

Mr. MADDEN. That is less than 15 per cent, is it not?

Mr. HAWLEY. That I could not say offhand.

Mr. MADDEN. They are taxing water at 15 per cent.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This is simply to separate the fruit juices from the other compounds that go into what are denominated soft drinks. Is that correct?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is all the gentleman seems to want to do.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It does not pertain to products like Coca-Cola. It does not pertain to mineral waters. It does not pertain to any soft drinks except those which come exclusively from the berry, the grape, or the fruit.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is correct, and no other sirups are taxed.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman from Oregon yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Was it not shown by the testimony before the committee that if this tax was continued those engaged in the loganberry and grape juice business would be forced to go out of business and the Government would get no revenue whatever?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; and if the business is allowed to continue under the 2-cents-a-gallon tax, that, together with the income taxes that they will pay the Government, will earn more revenue in the long run than if the present tax is continued, to the injury of the industry.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. More revenue than it gets now.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; on the whole.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman is a member of the Ways and Means Committee. Does he not know that practically every interest that has been taxed has come before that committee and claimed that if the tax remained it would be driven out of business?

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to give just one practical illustration? One corporation that sold $1,387,000 worth would have to pay $138,000 under the 10 per cent tax. That corporation made about $70,000. If they had been taxed 10 per cent it would have taken all their profit and $68,000 beside. They are in a worse condition this year, because in the four months of March, April, May, and June of this year their sales decreased from $573.000 in the corresponding months of 1918 to $222,000. Their sales have fallen off $350,000 in four months on account of the imposition of the tax. If the tax is continued they must go out of business, and that is true of the whole industry.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I hope the gentleman may have further time. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have time to conclude his remarks.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Was any agreement made as to the time?

The CHAIRMAN. No agreement has been made as to the time. We are proceeding now under the five-minute rule.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How are we proceeding under the five-minute rule? Is not this general debate, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. CANNON. On second thought, I guess this is general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the reading of the bill was the first reading. The gentleman is recognized for one hour.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How did the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] get control of the hour?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As the representative of the committee, I assume.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Did the gentleman take the floor?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I take the floor now. I addressed the Chair, and the Chair recognized me and said I had an hour.

Mr. CANNON. But the gentleman from Oregon has talked for five minutes already.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that it is hoped that the debate will not continue very long.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY]. The gentleman from Michigan yielded five minutes to the gentleman from Oregon. The Chair assumes that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has been requested by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] to assign the time, and the Chair recognizes him to yield the time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY].

Mr. HAWLEY. I am ready to answer any questions that may be asked. If there are no questions, I will proceed with my statement.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. While the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] has mentioned three fruit juices, I think it might be made clear to the House that this would be a tax on all fruit juices when sold. Juices made at home and not sold would come under no tax whatever. The industry which the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] has spoken of, the loganberry industry, was growing by leaps and bounds, not only in Oregon but in the State of Washington, but as shown in the report here the business began to fail because of inability to pay the 10 per cent tax.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Oregon yield for a suggestion?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is very much interested in this bill, and I think if the gentleman would explain the effect of section 628 upon this industry, it would probably meet the expectations of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HAWLEY. I started out with the intention of doing that, but was interrupted by questions on other lines.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield before he proceeds?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is it not correct that as this section is now drawn it imposes a very high tax, in some instances more than 100 per cent, upon the original amount of loganberry juice or grape juice which may be in the bottle, by reason of the tax imposed upon the bottle and the case, so that it makes an extremely high rate?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes. If the gentleman will allow me to proceed for a minute, while I make an explanation, I will be glad to answer his question. The situation is this: A tax was imposed upon this commodity, which is put up in glass containers. In order to get the bottles West they have to be shipped from the East, and the freight paid on them, and a war tax paid on the freight. Then the juice is bottled and the bottles crated. On the value of these as well as on wages paid for labor employed, on the overhead, the insurance, the freight East, the advertising, and all the machinery of doing business, which amounts to nearly three-fourths of the selling price, they are to pay the 10 per cent tax, as well as on the juice, which is what they have to sell and constitutes only about one-fourth of the selling price. This table shows the items upon which they are to pay the tax:

	2½ gallons; 3 dozen, 8 ounces.	2½ gallons; 2 dozen, 12 ounces.	2½ gallons; 1 dozen, 24 ounces.	4½ gallons; 9 only, 64 ounces.

Selling price (list, less discounts)	6.88	6.66	6.24	10.205

This table was prepared some months ago, before the close of their fiscal year, and it was ascertained afterwards that the costs were materially higher. From this table it will be seen that the total cost of the product delivered by the manufacturers, for 3 dozen 8-ounce bottles, is $6.045, which are sold to the trade for $6.88, leaving an apparent profit of $0.835. But had the selling price of $6.88 been taxed at 10 per cent, producing a tax of $0.688, this taken from the $0.835 would have left an apparent selling profit of $0.147 for 3 dozen 8-ounce bottles. But, as stated above, the costs ascertained at the close of the fiscal year show that with the tax added the product would have been sold at a loss. No business can continue on that basis. Of this selling price of $6.88, the juice, which is the article the manufacturers are in the business of selling, costs $1.96, or about one-fourth of the whole selling price. It will be noted in the table above that there are 15 items other than the juice upon which the 10 per cent tax is to be paid. These items include bottles, freight charges, to which a war tax is added, warehousing, and other administrative items, so that nearly three-fourths of the tax is on items other than the product they have to sell. The present tax is 29 cents a gallon, and the business can not bear it and prosper. There are thousands of acres planted to loganberries. If this tax is permitted to take the backbone out of the juice business, the result will be the abandonment of a very great proportion of this acreage.

The time of Mr. HAWLEY having expired, he was given five minutes more.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does this only affect the loganberry-juice industry?

Mr. HAWLEY. All pure fruit beverages.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What consistency is there as a matter of principle in taking this tax off the products of loganberry and grape juice and leaving an apparent discrimination against other soft drinks?

Mr. HAWLEY. As the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] suggested, sirups are not taxed, and these are in the nature of sirups, and ought not to be taxed following that principle.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HAWLEY. Certainly.

Mr. BLACK. The language of the bill reads that there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all nonalcoholic fruit beverages, whether carbonated or not. Now, some of the carbonated bottling journals of the East advertise a preparation to make a loganberry carbonated beverage. It is advertised in the National Bottlers' Gazette, in the Southern Carbonator and Bottler, at Atlanta, and, I presume, several others. By the language of this bill you will have this situation: When your soda-water bottler makes a carbonated beverage which he calls loganberry drink, because it is made partly of loganberry juice, you will have him paying 2 cents a gallon on that, and on the rest of his carbonated drinks, like lemon soda pop, ginger ale, you will have him paying 10 per cent on the gross sale. I think the bill would be much better if it struck out the carbonate provision, because you are going to make a clear discrimination in favor of grape flavors and loganberry flavors when you pass a bill of this sort.

Mr. HAWLEY. Under the present bill pure juice pays 2 cents a gallon tax. That is all the industry can stand, and if they are taxed more they are going out of business. I stated a moment ago that a concern can not pay $138,000 tax on $70,000 profit. If this bill is passed, we will save to the farmer an opportunity to sell a great quantity of products otherwise unsalable and provide the people of the country with an agreeable, healthful commodity.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman know how much alcohol there is in loganberry juice?

Mr. HAWLEY. None at all; it is supposed to be nonalcoholic.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I must confess that I am not a revenue expert and I do not know just what this bill means. Speaking without full knowledge in the premises, I would like to ask a question or two. Section 628 reads as follows:

That there shall be levied, collected, and paid in lieu of taxes imposed by sections 313 and 315 of the revenue act of 1907 upon all beverages derived wholly or in part of materials or substitutes therefor and containing less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer in bottles or other closed containers a tax equal to 15 per cent of the price for which so sold—

Now, it is not proposed to repeal that, is it? Fifteen per cent tax of the price sold is a pretty comfortable tax I take it for the production of revenue.

Now, what is the next? I call attention again, "wholly or in part from materials or substitutes therefor." A very large part of these I take it are manufactured.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman asked a moment ago whether section 628 was repealed and correctly answered in a general way that it is not. At the same time this bill would have the effect to repeal such portion of section 628 as provides a pure fruit juice and grape juice.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; as it is now. But reading further—and upon all unfermented grape juice, ginger ale, root beer, sarsaparilla, pops, artificial mineral waters, carbonated or not carbonated, other carbonated waters or beverages, and other soft drinks sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer in bottles or other closed containers a tax equivalent to 10 per cent.

As I understand, this bill just strikes out unfermented grape juice and loganberry juice.

Mr. REED of New York. And blackberry juice.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes. First let me read the bill:

That there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all nonalcoholic fruit-juice beverages whether carbonated or not, whether consisting of pure fruit juice or of pure fruit juice to which sugar and water or both have been added—

And sugar and water will ferment—

when sold—

By whom?

by the manufacturer, producer, or importer in bottles or other closed containers a tax of 2 cents per gallon, and such beverages shall not be deemed soft drinks.

This singles out the manufacturer, and I would spell that word in large letters of living light, because it is not the grower of the grape or the loganberry, so far as I know, who has been asking day and night for this legislation.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. In answer to that suggestion it was testified before the committee that before the loganberry-juice industry started in the West the grower of the berry dug up his vineyard, and it was also testified before the committee by many producers of grapes that they had not made any profit out of their vineyards and were going to dig them up unless the grape-juice business succeeded.

Mr. CANNON. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Would he consent to strike out the words "manufacturer" and "or importer"? That would leave the word "producer" in the bill. Now, this tax is reduced from what? From 15 per cent or 10 per cent as now levied upon value. If you strike out those words, then the individual who owns the vineyard would know that it is 2 cents a gallon he has to pay and the loganberry man would have to pay only 2 cents a gallon. But I believe that this great industry of producing and putting upon the market by the manufacturer, if you choose, and the importer, if you choose, of these products that are found everywhere, that are sold everywhere, will find itself in the position where the manufacturer and the importer will be relieved of 10 per cent of the burden that they now bear and pay only 2 cents a gallon.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. If we strike out the word "manufacturer," which would include the corporation that assembled the capital and built a very extensive plant necessary to produce the juice, then that manufacturer or corporation would have to close the plant, and the man who raises the berry—and this is the backbone of the market for the fruit—would have no place to sell the berry, and it would affect him just as much as the manufacturer.

Mr. CANNON. Where are these manufacturers located? Who knows? I guess in New York, I guess in the West. I should not wonder if some of them are not in Cincinnati, or in Chicago, and I dare say that they have large amounts of capital invested in the business.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The situation is stated in the report as applying to these three marketable juices. They have built up a great trade, and there is a 10 per cent tax upon them, and they find themselves in the position where they are declining to the point where the Government will not get any revenues from them if it continues to charge 10 per cent, or will not get nearly so much as if they let the industry go on and charge only 2 cents per gallon, as the figures will show. In our country, where the loganberry is grown, the 10 per cent tax reaches the whole industry, and it can not pay that 10 per cent tax, but it can pay the tax of 2 cents.

Mr. CANNON. I know that when you take up the great newspapers or the magazines and look at the advertising sections you will find the most expensive advertising in the magazines to be for grape juice, and yet you say it is going to hurt the poor manufacturer.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; and that matter of advertising is just a matter of putting the juice upon the market. The loganberry was unknown until a few years ago.

Mr. CANNON. Well, strike out the grape juice and leave in loganberries—and God knows that I do not know what a loganberry is—and if it wants to run and glorify then strike out the grape juice. I never was much for grape-juice politics anyway.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the gentleman would permit, I would like to send him a case of loganberry juice.

Mr. CANNON. I think there is a concealed individual in this; I am inclined to think so.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will say that the committee did not understand, or at least I did not understand, when we passed section 628, that we were putting any tax on loganberry juice at all, but the Treasury Department thought in some way that the tax was imposed. I think that all this money that has been collected from the loganberry people will be recovered back, but, of course, there will be a tax imposed upon grape juice. The grape growers, however, depend upon the grape-juice factory for a market; they will get just whatever the factory will pay them, less the amount of this tax, and it brings it down to such an amount where, according to the testimony, they could not carry on their business.

Mr. CANNON. Who could not?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The grape growers, the farmers.

Mr. CANNON. Did any grape-growing farmer appear before the committee?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; the representative of the Grape Growers' Assocation of New York appeared before us.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, of New York. What is the name of that?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The name of what?

Mr. CANNON. Of the Grape Growers' Association of New York.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not remember the precise title, but that was substantially the title—the Grape Growers' Association.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I will answer that if the gentleman will permit. The gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] presented a number of grape growers, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHREVE] also appeared and addressed the committee, and the man who made the principal address was, I think, named Chamberlain. I have not his first name at hand, but he made an illuminative address, and it was followed by several others in the grape-growing business.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Some one spoke for the Welch legislative committee of Chicago & Lake Erie Fruit Growers' Association and also a member of the National Grange.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; any manufacturers before you?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Some one spoke for the Welch grape juice concern.

Mr. CANNON. Where is that located?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is a New York concern, and, I think, possibly Pennsylvania.

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask the gentleman, in his opinion, whether in the name of the man who grows the grapes, the man who plants the vines and gathers together the grapes and the loganberry, to relieve him, whether these great grape manufacturers that do this extensive advertising are not seeking to use them under false pretenses to avoid the 10 per cent tax and put it at 2 cents a gallon?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will read carefully section 628, which I had hoped the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] would explain, he will see that these grape raisers are up against a 15 per cent tax on one hand and a 10 per cent tax on another. It has been doubled up on things of that kind, and the matter was explained to the committee. It appeared to me from the facts that these grape growers would possibly not be able to continue their business if they are obliged to pay the burdensome tax that is imposed by section 628, and I think it was the disposition of the committee——

Mr. GARNER. My recollection of the testimony before the Ways and Means Committee, at least as far as it convinced me, was that the loganberry people made out a good case, and there the case stopped.

Mr. CANNON. And the grape-juice individuals——

Mr. GARNER. Did not.

Mr. CANNON. Did not make a case?

Mr. GARNER. In my judgment, did not.

Mr. CANNON. The loganberry is a struggling new industry?

Mr. GARNER. Out in California or somewhere—out in Oregon or some place like that.

Mr. FORDNEY. A Member of this House—I think the gentleman from Ohio—appeared before the committee and made it very clear to me that the industry was about to be destroyed unless we gave this relief.

Mr. CANNON. Which industry?

Mr. FORDNEY. The grape juice. He pointed out that the people in his district were pulling up the grapevines because there was no money in the business.

Mr. CANNON. Well, the grandfather of the gentleman from Ohio—NICHOLAS LONGWORTH—did make wine from grapes; but I do not understand that the grape industry runs and glorifies in the State of Ohio to any great extent, as compared with the grape industry in California and perhaps other parts of the country—I think in Missouri, and so on.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think my colleague from Michigan misspoke himself—that he meant a gentleman from New York. The great grape-growing region of the country is in New York, and more grapes are raised there than anywhere else. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, it is not the manufacturer of grape juice who appeared seeking to get away from this tax. He simply takes and adds the tax to what he has to pay for the grapes from the grape grower. The grape grower is the one who says he can not go on raising grapes unless this tax is taken off.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman permit me to read an extract from the testimony of Mr. Walter W. Chamberlain, chairman of the American Fruit Juice Producers and Manufacturers' Association? I have just found it.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly; I have an hour.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania (reading):

The business was originally started by the Welch Co. in about 1897. At that time grape growing had just become of some consequence in the grape belt, and grapes were selling at that time for $8 or $10 a ton, which was much less than the cost of raising them.

Now I will skip a little.

That business has gradually developed, but not very fast. It has been very hard to get the public to consume sufficient grape juice so as to make the business of either grape growing or grape manufacturing profitable.

He states that it has been very difficult to popularize grape juice. He confirms the political fears of the gentleman from Illinois with regard to grape juice.

I have for 15 years had 90 acres of vineyards and I have never yet had $1 dividend out of them, and I maintain them with the best judgment that I know how to use and with the advice of the State agricultural department, following the best-known methods that I could follow. And when I say I have never had $1 out of those 90 acres of vineyards I am stating a positive fact; that is, over the production cost and maintenance——

Mr. CANNON. Who is this man—a manufacturer or a grape grower?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. He is a producer.

Mr. CANNON. A manufacturer also?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. He goes on to say that he was obliged, in order to protect a bank, to become a manufacturer, because of the inability of the grape-juice borrowers to carry on their business.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I undertake to say you can go anywhere in this country, in a little village of 2,000, anywhere on the railway and off the railway, for all that, and you can get all the grape juice you want, and they never sell it in large quantities——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will say to the gentleman that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHREVE] will state when he gets an opportunity that the grape growers were actually beginning to pull up their vines, and will state that they can not go on with their business because of the burden of this tax.

Mr. CANNON. Grape growers where?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio—wherever the industry extends.

Mr. CANNON. Since this war commenced galore all over the country there has been $2.26 a bushel for wheat and $1.75 for corn, and $20 for pork. Who would not, in a great State like Pennsylvania, perhaps, while these prices last devote themselves to wheat and corn or the raising of hogs?

Why, bless my soul, out in the great State of Illinois, in the great State of Ohio, the great State of Iowa, according to my information, and according to my observation in Illinois, other crops have become negligible on account of the great demand for the food that supports life to feed our own people and to feed our allies, and, to some extent, the hungry people of the world.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. GREEN of Iowa asked Mr. Chamberlain:

How much will the reduction of this tax on the container amount to?

This is one of the things of which they complained.

Mr. Chamberlain answered:

It reduces it a very great deal; it reduces it more than 50 per cent. Less than 50 per cent of our tax is paid on the product. One grievance is especially the tax on the container. Now, on the apple juice, for instance, I think the discrepancy is very much greater, only about 20 or 25 per cent of the tax being on the juice itself. Our first tax was 1 cent a gallon. Now it has gone up on grape juice to 20 or 25 cents a gallon, because of the tax paid on the container; so the tax has been increased from a very small tax more than 2,500 per cent on grape juice.

Mr. CANNON. What is the container?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is the box in which the bottles are packed, or any other kind of container.

Mr. CANNON. Where do the bottles come from? Are they not made in this country?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The bottle is made by workingmen in the State of Illinois, the State of Indiana, the State of New Jersey, and in some other States, and it is a very large industry.

Mr. CANNON. And everything else is made by the workman who works with his hands or his brain, or both. I do not think you can make any case now.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And that labor gets caught in this tax.

Mr. CANNON. It is caught by every tax. You tax them on income, if they are single, of over $1,000.

Let me reply to a few other things that the tax is not relieved from in this very section. It says:

Upon all beverages derived wholly or in part—

From what? Cereals of all kinds or substitutes therefor.

Do they not have containers? Do they not have to have bottles and jugs?

And containing less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol, sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer, in bottles or other closed container, a tax equivalent to 15 per cent of the price for which so sold.

Now, then, right in there:

And upon all unfermented grape juice.

That is stricken out. What is left in?

Ginger ale, root beer, sarsaparilla, pop, artificial mineral waters (carbonated or not carbonated).

Do not they bottle mineral water which is sold all over the country? Do they not have to have bottles? Do they not have to pack them and put them in boxes and all that kind of thing? That is all the grape-juice men have to do.

And upon all unfermented grape juice.

Grape juice is stricken out. It is the only thing that is stricken out. And the loganberry juice, while it is not here by name, is, it is said, construed to be in; but concerning that I do not know. Not 10 per cent, not 15 per cent, but 2 cents a gallon.

I believe that the concealed individual is in this proposed amendment to this section 628, if that is the section, and so believing—how much revenue it produces I do not know—but so believing I will vote, so far as my vote is concerned, against the enactment of this amendment to this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman yield to me 10 minutes?

Mr. CANNON. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina. But before the gentleman commences I will say that I am not on this committee. My legislative function has been to spend money by appropriation for the public service. Therefore I am not an expert on revenue measures. And although I may be sometimes unadvised, I sometimes think I can discover perhaps from the surroundings and the company in the legislation—I do not mean personally the people that propose the legislation—that there is a concealed individual in it.

Mr. SHREVE. Will the gentleman yield to me five minutes after the gentleman from North Carolina has finished?

Mr. CANNON. With pleasure.

Mr. SHREVE. I live in the grape belt, and know all about this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] is recognized for 10 minutes, yielded to him by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], who has had the audacity to say he is not going to vote for the bill reported out by the Republican majority of the Ways and Means Committee, that he is the most fortunate individual in this House in that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] was not present when he made his speech. [Laughter.] If he had been present, I fear he would have given him as sound a lecture and criticized him as harshly as he did the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON] when he dared to differ with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. Where is the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and his committee?

Mr. LONGWORTH. He is just going out of the Chamber.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me—and I will extend additional time to him—this debate has been largely "leather and prunella," as to whether the Democrats did this or whether the Republicans did the other, and, whoop-la, what are you going to do about it? Possibly I am mistaken about the merits of this proposition.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman is right on the merits of the proposition. I am going to vote with him against the bill.

Mr. CANNON. That is all right.

Mr. KITCHIN. I see the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. I want to dare him to say now about the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] what he said about the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON]. Both committed the same offense. Both dared to express an opinion contrary to that of the Republican committee. He has not the nerve to do it; that is all. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from North Carolina can not draw me into a trap that way. [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Well, then, the gentleman can take his seat and let me proceed. [Laughter.]

This bill abounds in discriminations. I do not think that we are justified in voting for this bill in its present shape. Now, what the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] desired, what was first put before our committee with respect to the loganberry juice, was just, namely, that the loganberry-juice industry could not profitably exist with the tax of 10 per cent; that it was a sirup and not a finished drink; that it should not be taxed 10 per cent while other sirups for soft drinks were exempt. When we first began to meet in the committee room to consider internal taxes and the tariff these were the propositions of the loganberry-juice producers. They contended that the act, if rightly construed, did not apply to loganberry juice, as that was a sirup and not a soft drink, but the department had construed it to be a soft drink and that the soft-drink tax applied to it. There is merit in their contentions. The members of the Ways and Means Committee recognized this and that relief should be had.

But, finally, in some way or other, in order to strengthen, as they felt, their position, the loganberry-juice producers were persuaded to hook up with other juice-producing concerns, and all these various concerns are taken care of in the bill before you, whether entitled to relief or not. I want to say to you that it is one of the most discriminatory bills that I have ever been called upon to vote on. As I said, the loganberry-juice proposition has merit in it. The loganberry juice is made into a sirup—that is, into a sweetened juice, out of which is made the drink—and not into a drink, like grape juice or ginger ale or sarsaparilla, or any of these other light drinks, or like apple juice. When they put it up in bottles or other containers it is really a sirup, like Coca-Cola sirup or like lemon cola sirup or pepsin cola sirup and other sirups, on which no tax is imposed under the revenue act. We get the tax on the drinkable articles, not the sirup, whether sold at the soda-water fountain or sold in bottles under the existing law.

The loganberry sirup should be put on an equality with the Coca-Cola sirup or other sirups. If one pays a tax, the other should. If one is exempt, the other should be. How the department could rule that the loganberry sirup should be taxed while all these other sirups were not taxed I can not see.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. FORDNEY. If the grape juice and loganberry juice are identical with Coca-Cola, why is it that one is taxed and the other is not?

Mr. KITCHIN. I say I can not see how the department can construe loganberry juice, that, according to the hearings, is a sirup, as a soft drink and contend that Coca-Cola and other sirups are not soft drinks. Neither is a soft drink under the act. You take Coca-Cola sirup and put in three times as much water. It then becomes a drink—a soft drink—and such drink is taxed as a soft drink. You can have it made or compounded at the soda fountain or get it put up in bottles. Both pay a tax, that at the soda fountain and that in bottles. Both are taxable drinks. Now, you use this loganberry juice just exactly as you do the Coca-Cola or lemon sirup. You take sweetened juice and add water in the proportion of two or three to one. The better drink is two to one. Otherwise it is not drinkable.

Here is what the loganberry gentlemen ought to have insisted on, and then they would have been right, and would have had a unanimous vote in the committee and in this House. They should have insisted on amending section 628, providing that any sirup made from fruit juices not in a drinkable state, but to which at least an equal amount of water must be added to make it a drink, a soft drink, shall be considered as a sirup and not as a soft drink. Such an amendment would have exempted it from the tax as other sirups are exempted.

Grape juice does not stand on the same footing. Grape juice is made sometimes that way, and sometimes it is made to drink without adding anything to it. They have now begun to make grape juice to which a certain proportion of water must be added in order to make it drinkable—something like a sirup. But a great deal of the grape juice is made to be drunk in the manufactured state, without adding water or anything to it. That ought to be taxed, and it is now taxed under section 628. The bill before us would tax it only 2 cents per gallon. In some cases that would amount to 1 per cent, in none over 2 per cent, while ginger ale and sarsaparilla and other drinks, put up in identically the same way and carbonated in the same way and put in the same sized bottles, must pay 10 per cent. Why should this great discrimination be given in favor of grape juice?

Another trouble that the committee got into by going into "cahoots" with the loganberry-juice gentlemen, after they went into "cahoots" with the apple-juice men and nonintoxicating-wine men and all other fruit-juice producers, was that it included in the relief provisions of the bill so many other soft drinks that were never contemplated at first. Let me show how this reads:

There shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all nonalcoholic fruit-juice beverages, whether carbonated or not, whether consisting of pure fruit juice or of pure fruit juice to which sugar or water or both have been added.

And so forth.

This includes all the nonintoxicating wines that are now being made or will be made hereafter in great quantities. That is the way of drinks made from apples, and the same with respect to drinks made from lemons and limes and oranges, and scores of other drinks made from fruit juices, and all drinks put up in bottles or other containers made from any kind of fruit that you can think of.

The committee did not intend to go that far. Certainly the loganberry-juice men did not intend to go that far. But when they came to Washington somebody convinced them that it would be better for them to go into a combine with all those other producers of fruit drinks and pull together for relief from taxation of all of them.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. As a matter of fact, the testimony before our committee made a fairly good case for the loganberry but for no other juice.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; no other juice. I want to be candid. There is no politics in this juice business. [Laughter.] There must be something more substantial than nonalcoholic juices to have any politics in it. [Laughter.] We ought to face the facts just as they are. There is not a word of evidence before the committee that the nonintoxicating wines and the orange and lemon juice fruit drinks, and so forth, need a reduction of this tax at all in order to live profitably. The only evidence before the committee where the industry needed remission of the tax so that it could survive with reasonable profit is in the case of the loganberry-juice sirup, and what they require is relief from the discrimination to which I have referred.

Let us see about grape juice. Let me tell you what the evidence is from a man who represented the grape-juice industry. I questioned him myself. After paying the tax under existing law the retailers who buy from the producer of this grape juice make out of the consumer, you and me and other people who drink this liquid, 60 per cent profit; after paying the tax which is charged up to them by the producer they make 60 per cent profit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have such additional time as he may desire.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. I thank the gentleman. Think of an industry coming before a committee of this House——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from North Carolina indicate who made that statement?

Mr. KITCHIN. I can not recall the gentleman's name. I can not recall all the names of the gentlemen who come to get favoritism before our committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not recall that statement.

Mr. KITCHIN. I asked one in the business who appeared before the committee what the profit was.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It was the soda-water maker.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Chamberlain, was it not?

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not recall his name. But I know he was one of the producers or one of the producers' witnesses; but the gentlemen will remember what it was.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That was the man at the fountain, whom we have just relieved.

Mr. KITCHIN. No; he was a producer. I am not talking about the fountain man. I asked him how much he sold his grape juice for to the retailer with the 10 per cent tax added. He told me the figures. Then I asked him how much the retailer sold that same case of goods to the consumer for. He told me. I figured it up right before the committee, and it was 60 per cent profit that was made after paying this tax. Then they hold up their hands and say they can not exist unless this tax is reduced. Gentlemen, I never knew of any retailer who needed any help from us if he makes 60 per cent out of the consumer.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have found the "60 per cent" testimony, and I ask the gentleman to let me read it.

Mr. KITCHIN. Is that after it was revised? Go ahead, I know exactly what took place before the committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will read it:

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; I do not live out West. I live in Buffalo. I have just returned from a trip, and I have been all over the United States a number of times.

Mr. CRISP. I think I know more about Coca-Cola than you do.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Probably so; but grape juice and apple juice are natural products. The manufacturers are trying to get along, struggling to get along—and it is a struggle—and if they have got to pay a tax equal to 60 per cent of the product itself, in addition to the cases and all of the things that go into the manufacture, they are going to have a pretty hard time.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will ask the gentleman not to read any more of that, because that is not in the connection at all. I am talking about another matter entirely. He said he made 60 per cent profit.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is the testimony, and the 60 per cent is not a profit.

Mr. KITCHIN. That does not apply to what I am talking about. It was figured before the committee how much was paid, after paying the tax, when the producer sold to the jobber or retailer, per case of 36 bottles. We put that down. Then I asked, "Now, how much does the retailer sell to the consumer for?" He figured it out. Then we figured it out together, and it was 60 per cent. I asked him if it was not 60 per cent, and he said "Yes."

Mr. SIMS. The retailer or the jobber?

Mr. KITCHIN. The jobber made 60 per cent. He pays the tax and passes it on, and makes 60 per cent profit. That was the point I had in mind in examining him. We discussed it around the table and said, "That industry is not going to die if they make 60 per cent out of the consumer." If they made 30 per cent out of the consumer it would not die.

Now, take the wine manufacturers throughout the United States. I want you gentlemen to pay attention to this. I know something about wine manufacturing, because the biggest wine bottler in the United States is a man with whom I was born and raised in the same county. We played together when we were boys and worked together when we were young men. Now, these wine producers and wine manufacturers are going to make the same alcoholic wine which they have been making, and under the law that we passed here the other day and under the revenue law they have a right to do it, and it is right that they should do it. Then they are going to extract the alcohol from it. That will relieve this one man of $500,000 taxes. These gentlemen will be relieved of $1,000,000 or $2,000,000 taxes when they extract this alcohol from the wine. Then they will sell it as nonalcoholic wine. I have got some in my office, and it is just like the wine that they used to sell, except that as the colored man said it has not got the authority that the other wine had. It tastes exactly like the wine that you drank before the alcohol was extracted. Now, they hooked up with these loganberry-juice gentlemen. They have not kicked against it. I never heard of them kicking against it, but they knew how to get it out of this Republican committee. They knew how to get it from a Republican Ways and Means Committee and save $500,000 or $1,000,000 of taxes. So the grape-juice sirup fellows are hooked up with these wine makers. I never heard a protest against that 10 per cent tax. Now, if they can get it down to 2 cents a gallon instead of 10 per cent, these nonalcoholic-wine producers are going to get rid of paying it. And here is another thing. It is barely possible, reasonably probable, that all of the kinds of pop put in bottles, made of lemon extract that gives it a flavor or orange extract that gives it a flavor, will be taxed 2 cents a gallon, while pop made out of sarsaparilla, and ginger ale, and other flavors except fruit-juice flavors, will have to pay 10 per cent.

That is a discrimination that we ought not to tolerate. Now, gentlemen, what ought to be done—and I tried to get the committee to do it—is that we ought to have a proviso saying that loganberry sirup and grape juice sirup will not be construed as soft drinks, and whenever you make it potable or drinkable by adding 50 per cent of water they shall be considered as sirups and not drinks. That is a suggestion I made before our committee and that would be right.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. FORDNEY. Did the gentleman suggest to the committee any such change or substitute in this bill for sirup?

Mr. KITCHIN. I suggested it before the committee, and that is the reason I voted against it.

Mr. FORDNEY. That is the first time I have heard it mentioned.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman from Oregon will not say that; I talked with him about it. I said the only thing the bill ought to contain was this little proviso.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. KITCHIN. I think the bill could, if the committee desired, give relief to the loganberry juice and leave out other beverages.

Mr. FORDNEY. Why did not the gentleman suggest it in committee?

Mr. KITCHIN. I suggested it to the gentleman from Oregon, and when I voted against it I said it could be taken care of in that way.

Mr. GARNER. I will say that here is an amendment that I am going to offer: In line 4 strike out the words "fruit juice" and insert after the word "beverages" the words "made from loganberry juice." Strike out all of line 5 and all of line 6 down to and including the word "added."

Mr. KITCHIN. I made that proposition to the committee.

Mr. GARNER. I call the attention of the gentleman from North Carolina and the committee to this, so that you can take care of loganberry juice, which made out a good case before the committee.

Mr. KITCHIN. You ought to put on loganberry juice, from which the drink is made. That is all you want; and while that would cover a little more than was intended, that would be fairer than this bill. The fair thing to do would be to put at the end of section 628: "Provided, That any juice made from berries or fruit to which there must be added for a drink to make it potable at least 50 per cent of water shall be considered a sirup and not a soft drink."

Mr. TINCHER. If the gentleman's amendment is adopted, Coca-Cola would not be taxed and grape juice would be taxed.

Mr. KITCHIN. No; not under my proposition; neither one would be taxed. This proposition is to let Coca-Cola sirup—and you voted for a bill to untax it at the soda fountains, which would take the tax off all Coca-Cola——

Mr. TINCHER. Let me see if I understand. You are objecting to taking the tax off of grape juice and not proposing to put the same tax on Coca-Cola.

Mr. KITCHIN. No, no. Here is what my proposition is—and I think everybody else understands it except the gentleman from Kansas; if he had waked up while I was talking, he would have understood it. [Laughter.] Let me say my proposition is this: That loganberry juice really is sirup, because you add water to make it drinkable. There is no tax on Coca-Cola sirup, lemon sirup, or any other kind of sirup. Now, the department has ruled that they tax this sirup because it is a drink instead of a sirup. My proposition is to add to section 628 "any fruit juice to which at least 50 per cent of water must be added to make a drink must be considered a sirup and not a soft drink." That would put the loganberry and the grape-fruit sirup all on the same equality with Coca-Cola, pepsa-cola, lemon cola, and so forth. Does the gentleman from Kansas thoroughly understand the position of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. TINCHER. I can—the last statement that the gentleman makes, which I do not think at all agrees with the statement he formerly made.

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, the gentleman was not listening. Of course, it was not his fault, for I do not blame him for not listening to me.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does not the gentleman think that what he seeks to accomplish could be accomplished by striking out the words "whether carbonated or not"? I do not speak from knowledge, but it is possible that in order to preserve these sirups some sugar must be added.

Mr. KITCHIN. The sugar is all right. The gentleman's suggestion would not accomplish it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think the gentleman and I mean the same thing. All these drinks that come in the way of a sirup, which are practically not drinkable until you mix water or soda water with them——

Mr. KITCHIN. Or perhaps to add the words "to which sugar may be added and at least 50 per cent of water."

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think if you strike out the words "whether carbonated or not," you will accomplish the purpose.

Mr. KITCHIN. What I want to do is to accomplish what the committee started out to accomplish, and that is to put the loganberry people on an equality with all of the others, and the proposition that I suggest I think will do it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have found the testimony to which the gentleman refers, and I want to set the gentleman right. Mr. Chamberlain was being interrogated by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN]. I read from the testimony:

> Mr. KITCHIN. That is $8.85. The retailer sells this six dozen, or 72 bottles, at 20 cents each; the retailer here would get the case for $8.85, with the war tax paid, and he would sell it for $14.40.
> Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is true.

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, that is over 60 per cent. You do not need to go any further. That more than substantiates what I said.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let me finish:

> Mr. KITCHIN. So he makes a little over 60 per cent?
> Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Well, he has his fountain, and he has all his cost of disposing of this, a bottle at a time; and I think on the other manufactured soft drinks they make even more money than that, because I understand that they buy some of those as low as 1 or 2 cents.
> Mr. KITCHIN. I rather think you are right about that.

So the reference was entirely to the profits of the retailer.

Mr. KITCHIN. Just give me that, please. Did I say that this man, after paying his clerk hire, after paying the janitor for sweeping his floors, after paying the interest on borrowed money, and other overhead charges was going to make 60 per cent in clear net profits? If he did, he would make more than any retailer in the country ever made. I said that he made 60 per cent profit; that is a big commercial profit. When a merchant buys a pair of shoes for $5 and sells them for $8, we say, in the commercial world, he is making 60 per cent profit on his selling charge, but all of his expenses in the sale must, of course, be taken out of that before he finds his clear net profits. In speaking of profits on such sales we know the difference in the purchase and selling. The gentleman stated exactly what I said to the House. Any business which can after paying the tax so sell to a retailer that the retailer can so sell to the consumer at a 60 per cent profit can not be destroyed by such a tax or materially affected. It is passed on to the consumer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, how much more time have I reserved by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] out of the hour?

The CHAIRMAN. Forty-five minutes.

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHREVE].

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, this is one of the most important measures that has been before this Congress. We are going to determine this afternoon whether we will wipe out an important agricultural industry or to allow it to continue. I know nothing about this camouflage that has been thrown in our faces here this afternoon about the manufacture of grape juice, but having been a grape grower myself for more than 10 years, I think I know something about the business. I might add that my farmer friends think I am a better lawyer than I am a farmer, and that my lawyer friends think I am a better farmer than I am a lawyer, but the fact remains that I do know something from practical experience about the troubles of the grape grower. If this bill is not passed in the form in which it is offered this afternoon you will simply wipe out 35,000 acres of vineyards in the Chautauqua and Erie grape belts. We had 42,000 acres, but during the last few years we have pulled out about 7,000 acres, and why? Because the business is unprofitable, and those of you who were in the Sixty-third Congress will remember when I offered an amendment one day for the appointment of an entomologist at northeast Pennsylvania that the great chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. LEVER], recognizing the importance of this industry in New York State and Pennsylvania, rose on the floor and told the Members that he was in favor of the passage of that amendment giving us an entomologist in that section.

And so for years the United States Government has been assisting us in every possible way. In the early days we put the grapes in small baskets. We found that was not profitable, and since then we have been selling to the wine manufacturer. Well, you know what has happened to the wine maker; he has gone out of business. And the time has come when we have to shift and look for other markets. Fortunately there are a number of grape-juice manufacturers in New York State and Pennsylvania and I want to say that up to the present time there is not a single one of those great plants to my knowledge that has made a dollar. Right in my district, within a mile from my farm, there is one grape-juice plant where the manufacturer lost a half million dollars in trying to build up a business. It was afterwards taken over at a bankrupt sale by another concern from over the line in New York State and is now meeting with some success. But it is not the manufacturer that I am interested in. I am interested in those men there who for 25 or 30 long years have built up and established this business. The boys have grown up on the farm. It is a business all by itself. You can not go back over the hills and find a man to run a grape vineyard. He must be trained. He must be first trained to the preparation of the soil. He must be trained in the planting of the vineyards, the right time of putting up the wires, the right time to trim and how they should be trimmed, so that the crop of next year might not be ruined. It takes a scientist, it takes an expert to handle this grape situation, and the farms are owned in 4 acres, 5 acres, 6 acres to 10 acres and sometimes 20 acres or more. I presume the average of the grape belt would be possibly from 25 or 30 acres. The vineyardist in the Chautauqua-Erie grape belt for years have been going along quietly building up a business. And why did they build it up on the south shore of Lake Erie? I will tell you gentlemen why; because it seems that as the lake receded spots of sand and gravel were left and you will find that in terraces as you go back a couple of miles from the lake shore. These lands are specially adapted to raising the Concord grapes and there are probably about 45,000 or 50,000 acres of that land along the south shore of Lake Erie. At one time a few years ago there were 42,000 acres of grapes under cultivation, but we found that the business was not profitable and a large acreage has been taken out. Then as I said before the sons of the grape farmers found that the business was not profitable, that their fathers were not making money, and as a result they went to the city and so the help has left us and it is almost impossible now for us to continue the business. The report of the committee tells you that the passage of this bill will make a difference of $27 a ton in taxes that is proposed to be put upon these poor innocent agriculturalists.

I want to ask you gentlemen, do you think it is fair, do you think it is fair to the farmers who were there for 25 years building up a business and are just at the point where they are getting their enterprise fairly started, when along comes the Government with a tax to destroy that industry? It is not in the States of Pennsylvania and New York alone, but over in Michigan. Concord grapes are also grown in parts of that State. They are grown in another part of the State of New York up on the Lakes and up on Lake Keuka and in that vicinity. I will not undertake to state the number of millions of dollars invested in the business in my district, but when I say to you there are over 42,000 acres of land covered with vineyards and that those vineyards are worth from $300 to $500 and $600 and up to $1,000 an acre, in a few minutes you can by mathematical calculation figure out what you propose to do here this afternoon—whether you are going to render these farms valueless and these people homeless. I wish the testimony had been printed so that you could read it. The testimony before the committee the other day from a banker was that the grape growers were not able to pay their notes in bank from last year.

I imagine that about the same system obtains there that obtains in the cotton district. The storekeepers and merchants carry the grape grower until the fall, until he gets returns from the grapes, and then he settles up and soon borrows again from the banks until he gets returns along in the next November. The bankers told us here that these farmers have not paid their notes for last year. And yet you propose to destroy their business. That is the proposition we are up against, gentlemen, and I appeal to all the men in this Congress, all the men here who stand for fair play, all the men who want to be square to this great industry, to support this bill this afternoon. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, yesterday I sampled a bottle of loganberry juice that sells in the retail market of Washington for 35 cents a bottle. There were three glasses of the beverage. When you mix the juice in that bottle in the proportion of one part juice to two parts of water it makes three glasses for 35 cents. That is the price that loganberry juice must be sold at now to avoid greater loss than is being sustained by the people that make the juice.

They made a very good case before the committee to the effect that their industry is losing money and that the sales of loganberry juice have fallen off two-thirds or more from the sales of the year 1917. I want to say to my good friend from North Carolina that the Democrats are not playing fair here to-day. There was no proposition offered before the Committee on Ways and Means by the Democrats to class loganberry juice and grape juice and other fruit juices as sirups. There was no such motion made by them.

Mr. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FORDNEY. In just one minute.

Coca-Cola, however, escapes all tax because it has been classed as a sirup. It is not a product of the State of Washington or of Oregon, if you remember. And the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has ruled that those fruit juices are beverages and not sirups.

Now I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman says the Democrats are acting unfairly——

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman did reserve the right, let me say, to vote as he saw fit on this bill, and stated that he wanted to offer some amendment, but that is as far as he went, so far as sirups are concerned.

Mr. KITCHIN. Now, this question was not considered as a party question at all. Some Democrats voted for it and some against it in the committee. And while the gentleman has not a record, of course, of what I said when the vote was taken I did state that loganberry juice had a good, meritorious case, and ought to be considered as sirup.

Mr. FORDNEY. I think the gentleman did make that statement, but he did not offer it as an amendment to the bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman saw that we did not offer any amendments at all.

Mr. FORDNEY. No; you did not.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let me ask the gentleman from Michigan, since we are pretty nearly agreed to what I said a while ago was true. I am going to make him admit that what I said was true. We have not any record of what was said when the vote was taken. We have a record of the hearings, and you will find in the hearings that I did state the loganberry juice men, or one of the talkers, had a good case, and it ought to be put in the act that it should not be considered as a soft drink, but should be considered as a sirup. That is in the hearings. I was not speaking for the Democrats at all.

Mr. FORDNEY. There are two things to-day that I admit, namely, that he did talk about it and that he did not offer an amendment.

Mr. KITCHIN. I did not offer an amendment.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman has referred to the sirup out of which Coca-Cola is made. The gentleman will remember that Coca-Cola has been discussed a number of times, and we have all sought to reach it, I think the gentleman will agree, both Democrats and Republicans. I know that I have and I know that the gentleman has. I want to say now that I will join the gentleman as one member of the Ways and Means Committee on a proposition to tax to the limit the sirup out of which Coca-Cola is made.

Mr. FORDNEY. Thank you. I agree with you. I will help you on that.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will state to the gentleman that he will have an opportunity later on.

Mr. JEFFERIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. JEFFERIS. Does the passage of this bill in effect amend section 628 in so far as grape juice alone is concerned?

Mr. FORDNEY. No. It reduces the tax upon loganberry juice, grape juice, apple juice, and fruit juices.

Mr. JEFFERIS. The thing I had in mind was that in section 628 of the present law a tax is levied upon unfermented grape juice, sarsaparilla, ginger ale, and so forth. The passage of this act would simply lift out grape juice and leave the other items?

Mr. FORDNEY. It reduces the tax on fruit juices, and fruit juices are entirely different from mineral waters and the other beverages, Coca-Cola and sarsaparilla and so on. Fruit juice is a food article.

Gentlemen, I want to see this bill passed without amendment or I want to see it defeated. I move now that the committee do rise.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an amendment to the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill has not yet been read for amendment.

Mr. FORDNEY. I move that the committee rise and report the bill back with favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to that motion. If the gentleman can get unanimous consent from the committee to terminate general debate, the bill can be read for amendment. It has been moved that the committee do now rise. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, we do not have to get unanimous consent in order to close debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan ask unanimous consent to set aside the action of the committee in determining to rise?

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] has a bona fide amendment. Let us have it read under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair put the motion of the gentleman from Michigan. Does the gentleman ask to vacate or set aside or suspend the action of the committee in determining to rise?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes. I ask unanimous consent that the action be set aside.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the action of the committee in determining to rise be set aside. Does the gentleman ask that the general debate be terminated now?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all nonalcoholic fruit-juice beverages, whether carbonated or not, whether consisting of pure fruit juice or of pure fruit juice to which sugar or water or both have been added, when sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer, in bottles or other closed containers, a tax of 2 cents per gallon, and such beverages shall not be deemed soft drinks. All provisions of any act or acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act, or imposing any other or different tax on the articles taxed herein are hereby repealed.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARNER: Strike out, in line 4, the words "fruit juice" and all of line 5 and that part of line 6 including the word "added," and insert in line 4, after the word "beverages," the words "made from loganberry juice," so that as amended the lines will read "That there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all nonalcoholic beverages, whether carbonated or not, when sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer."

Mr. GARNER. If gentlemen have the bill before them they can get the language very easily as it would read if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all nonalcoholic beverages made from loganberry juice, whether carbonated or not, when sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer, in bottles or other closed containers, a tax of 2 cents per gallon, etc.

Mr. GARNER. That simply means that instead of including all fruit juices you include the loganberry juice alone. That is the only thing that in the committee made a showing that it needed protection. That is in keeping with the hearings had before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RANDALL of California. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized.

Mr. RANDALL of California. Mr. Chairman, I have not been in the habit of representing the California wine-grape growers on this floor, but for a moment I do. The State of California has 310,000 acres in grapes; 150,000 acres are devoted to table grapes and 160,000 acres are devoted to wine grapes. As you well know, grape juice so far in history has been made entirely from Concord grapes. The California wine-grape growers are about to discontinue business as a result of the action of Congress, and the California wine-grape growers are endeavoring to perfect a process of making grape juice from wine grapes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDALL of California. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Grape juice was sold here last year that was not made from Concord grapes, but from some light-colored grapes.

Mr. RANDALL of California. Practically all the grape juice so far has been made from Concord grapes. Now, the California wine-grape growers are endeavoring and probably will succeed in making grape juice from the wine grape, and I appeal to the Members of this House who have heretofore voted to protect the California wine-grape growers, as well as the others on the other side, to vote to protect and assist the California wine-grape growers who are now about to change their business.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that the action of Congress having virtually put out of business the grape growers of California, this is about the only way in which they may be able to continue to develop their industry?

Mr. RANDALL of California. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that this is one of the very few ways in which they can still make a profit out of their grapes. Another method is to make some other product from the wine grapes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What would become of their farms if the grapevines should have to be torn up?

Mr. RANDALL of California. They would be planted to some other product, but that would be an expensive process and would involve delay.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That would be confiscating all the capital which they now have invested.

Mr. RANDALL of California. I hope the amendment will be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES of Texas: Page 1, line 12, after the word "repealed," strike out the period, insert a semicolon and the following: "and that part of section 628 of the act entitled 'An act to provide revenue, and for other purposes,' which levies a tax equivalent to 10 per cent of the price for which sold upon all unfermented grape juice, ginger ale, root beer, sarsaparilla, pop, artificial mineral waters (carbonated or not carbonated), other carbonated waters or beverages, and other soft drinks sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer, in bottles or other closed containers, be, and the same is hereby, repealed."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is not in order. I make the point of order, but will reserve it for a moment if the gentleman wishes to explain his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. JONES of Texas. My amendment refers to the same section that this bill covers—section 628 of the same act.

The CHAIRMAN. This bill does not refer to section 628. This is an act to raise revenue.

Mr. JONES of Texas. But by its very terms it repeals part of section 628 and inserts instead a tax of 2 per cent on the very articles that are named in section 628, and then it says that all provisions of any act or acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act, or imposing any other or different tax on the articles taxed herein are hereby repealed. In other words, it repeals section 628 and inserts another tax; and I offer an amendment repealing other portions of section 628. I think my amendment is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks otherwise. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. JONES of Texas. All right.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BANKHEAD: Line 4, strike out the word "fruit juice," and strike out all of line 5 and all of line 6 to and including the word "added," and in lines 8 and 9 the words "and such beverages shall not be deemed soft drinks."

So that as amended it will read: "That there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all nonalcoholic beverages, whether carbonated or not, when sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer, in bottles or other closed containers, a tax of 2 cents per gallon. All provisions of any act or acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act, or imposing any other or different tax on the articles taxed herein, are hereby repealed."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, the proposition involved in the bill is for the purpose of removing the tax, or at least reducing the tax, on each article named in the report, the loganberry raised in the West, apple juice, and grape juice, from 28 cents down to 2 cents a gallon. I can not see any good reason why, if you are going to reduce the tax that is supposed to be levied on fruit-juice beverages, that you should discriminate in favor of those three particular items, one particular item which has been discussed being the loganberry, and leave the tax on all the other nonalcoholic beverages put up in bottles.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does not the gentleman think it possible that fruit juices intended for the table have an element of food value, whereas these waters do not?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I was discussing the question from the justness and justice of the proposition. You propose by the pending legislation to reduce the tax on certain favored articles. Here is the legitimate result of that: You give a distinct commercial advantage to certain people who are engaged in the production of certain commodities and levy a penalty on their competitors, who are producing other nonalcoholic beverages. It seems to me that there can be no justification for a discrimination of that character. As I see it—and I have tried to look at it fairly—the measure does make an unwarranted discrimination in favor of certain producers of these commodities.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think the gentleman wants to look at it fairly, but he has not considered this phase of the situation: The fruit juices grown to make sirup have to be grown with particular care, have to be manufactuured with great particularity, handled with a great deal of care, and are much more costly and difficult to produce than this mere sweetened wine that other manufacturers put out.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman know of any fruit which is made into a beverage that does not have to be produced with care and discrimination?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. But this applies to all fruit beverages.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; there are beverages that are manufactured from fruits that you are not reducing the tax on and which, if this bill is passed, will still be required to pay 28 cents a gallon. By this legislation you are seeking to reduce the tax on loganberry juice and on grape juice, and I can not see any justice in that proposition, because you certainly are showing favoritism in the legislation. If you are going to reduce it on one nonalcoholic beverage it ought to be reduced on all.

The amendment which I have offered to the bill would reduce the tax on all nonalcoholic bottled beverages to 2 cents a gallon. This would include Coca-Cola, Chero Cola, soda pop, and ginger ale. If you propose to reduce the tax on loganberry and grape juice sirups to a rate equal to 2 cents a gallon on such juices when bottled, in all fairness you should include all other juices and sirups out of which other sorts of bottled beverages are made to the same rate. As a matter of fact, the rate of tax levied on bottle beverages under the present revenue law, which is 10 per cent on gross sales, is too high. I protested against it when the bill was passed and I protest against it now. The cost of producing bottled soft drinks has increased enormously in the last two years. Every single element that goes into its production—sugar, sirups, bottles, caps, labor, trucks, express charges—has gone up from 25 to 50 per cent, if not more. Under the present tax plus the increased cost of production it is almost impossible for the owners of bottling plants to come out even, much less to earn an honest and legitimate profit. The loganberry raisers of the Northwest and the grape growers of New York were given a hearing before your Ways and Means Committee, now under Republican control, but I understand that no other class of people interested in the bottling business were invited to appear and present their case for a reduction of the existing tax. Is not that discrimination? Is not that favoritism of the grossest sort? That same Ways and Means Committee has reported and you have just passed a bill taking all the tax off soda water and ice cream sold at fountains not sold in bottles, and that was all right; but the matter as it is now left allows the men, women, and children who get soft drinks and ice cream at town soda fountains to do so tax free, and the operator of the soda fountain in town tax free, but the thousands of people who want to buy a pleasant drink of bottled Coca-Cola or pop out in the country at a store or soft-drink stand—at places where there is no soda fountain—you leave a 10 per cent tax on them by taxing the bottler that amount, and which the consumer must absorb. And remember many of the States also levy a tax on the business.

Gentlemen, that sort of discrimination can not be defended. It is incapable of defense.

My amendment reduces the tax on all bottled beverages to a reasonable basis. It would levy a fair and reasonable tax.

But I insist that if you are going to relieve one class of beverages from the existing tax you should relieve all. If you are going to tax one you should tax all on the same rate and basis. That would be fair; it would be just. Not to do so is scandalous.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama has introduced here a mighty interesting proposition, and one I think that ought to be explained to the committee. He proposes that all soft drinks, whether made of fruit juices or not, shall be included in this amendment intended to relieve the farmers' products purely from the operation of section 628, which, with the tax on containers and other things, makes the tax very high and burdensome.

He would not add to the word "beverages" the word "sirup" for the very good and sufficient reason that Coca-Cola, the greatest offender of them all, which every one of us ordinarily believed to have been taxed along with other soft drinks, is not taxed one single cent. Why? Because it has been held that it is not a beverage as it leaves the great Georgia manufacturing plant, but is a sirup, and therefore the biggest manufacturer of them all escapes upon a technicality of definition.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Do I understand the gentleman to assert that Coca-Cola in no form, either in its original sirup or its manufactured form when put into bottles, pays a tax to the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Coca-Cola pays nothing. It comes from the factory under section 628 and pays nothing. I leave it to the author of this magnificent, monumental revenue bill, the gentleman from North Carolina, to disprove my statement if it is incorrect.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If that is a correct assertion, I agree with the gentleman that it ought to be taxed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Alabama and I agree that the gentleman from North Carolina is eloquent in his silence. Coca-Cola, the great Georgia product, is not taxed at all, because it is not a beverage as defined here, and so it escapes taxation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman assert as a member of the Ways and Means Committee and one who speaks with authority that there is no tax levied or collected by the Government on bottled Coca-Cola as sold to the ordinary consumer?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is no tax on the manufacturer.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman answer the question "yes" or "no."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I said on the manufacturer.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But there is a tax levied and collected in its bottled form, is there not?

Mr. KITCHIN. Just like all others.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The law reads:

Upon all beverages derived wholly or in part from cereals or substitutes therefor, and containing less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol, sold by the manufacturer, producers, or importers, in bottles or other closed containers, a tax equivalent to 15 per cent of the price for which so sold.

And you get nothing out of it from the manufacturer down in Georgia, because he sells a sirup. He does not sell a beverage.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I do not represent anyone in Georgia.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Oh, I know that; and I was not accusing the gentleman from Alabama, but I said it was very interesting that he should offer this amendment at this time, because it would tend to relieve the manufacturer of Coca-Cola from the 2 cents that is levied in this amendment. The only tax the Coca-Cola business pays in any way is the 1 cent at the fountain, where the retailer made the profit to which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] referred awhile ago, and that 1 cent has now been taken off Coca-Cola by the passage of the repealer of section 630.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So Coca-Cola goes scot-free, and I am glad to hear the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] say that gentlemen on the other side who want to reach Coca-Cola will be given an opportunity very soon to make it pay its fair share of the burden of running this Government in war time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this bill and the amendments thereto——

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment and to speak on the amendment now before the committee.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I am going to ask that all debate upon all amendments and the bill itself close in 10 minutes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have a germane amendment which I desire to offer.

Mr. FORDNEY. I know, but gentlemen have been offering amendments and talking for some time. I will make it 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that all debate upon the amendments and the bill itself end in 15 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment here carrying out what I suggested and I will offer it, though I may withdraw it, for it seems it is impossible to get through any amendment this afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair without other arrangement will recognize members of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will ask that the reading of my amendment be withheld for the present. I want to speak especially to my good friend and colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. There is no gentleman that I am more fond of than I am of my old friend from Philadelphia, and I shall address him in the affectionate terms of J. HAMP. MOORE. When Mr. J. HAMP. MOORE makes a speech in which he talks about the Democratic Party, he becomes so partisan that he can not see the facts and the truth to save his life. If my good friend J. HAMP. could see the truth, if he was not so blinded with partisanship, he would be the last man in the world who would refuse to tell the truth.

He tells this House and tries to give the impression, because he refused to see the facts, that there is no tax on Coca-Cola, and that we Democrats over here did not want to tax Coca-Cola. I beg his especial attention so that he may see the truth, which is this: Coca-Cola sirup is taxed in the present act just like every other sirup made or produced in the United States that goes into a soft drink is taxed. It pays the same tax exactly, and in exactly the same manner.

There is no tax on any sirups, but the way we get the tax on Coca-Cola, on lemon sirup, on all other sirups made, is in the drink which the consumer uses. First, if it is put in bottles like ginger ale, pop, sarsaparilla, or Coca-Cola or lemon cola or pepso cola or anything else, because in making Coca-Cola you must make it out of the sirup, and if it sells in bottles made out of the sirup it has a tax of 10 per cent under the present law. That is true of Coca-Cola as of any other sirups. Again, if you compound Coca-Cola like any of the other sirups anywhere at a soda fountain and make a drink of Coca-Cola, that pays identically the same tax as a drink made of any other sirup made in the United States. Now, that is the fact, the truth, and the law. But my good friend J. HAMP. can not see it. Now that is the truth——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman say the manufacturer pays under section 628?

Mr. KITCHIN. The manufacturer pays just like any other manufacturer of sirup. When it is made into a drink on that drink is imposed a tax.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is what I said, that after it gets away from the factory——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will ask for one minute.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has a complicated case and I think he ought to have a minute.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will ask unanimous consent for one minute more time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina, notwithstanding the order already entered into, asks unanimous consent to speak for one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KITCHIN. Now, the only relief from taxation that Coca-Cola has when mixed into a drink was made by the House this afternoon when the House relieved Coca-Cola from it as a drink compounded at the fountain. That was relieved of all taxation this afternoon, and that is one of the reasons I opposed the relieving of soft drinks, because I believe that Coca-Cola ought to be taxed, sometimes I almost feel like saying it ought to be taxed out of existence, and I as a Democrat voted against relieving Coca-Cola as a drink of any tax, but you gentlemen voted to relieve it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the only one practical way of equalizing this tax is in the form of the bill which we have before us. The suggestions made by the gentleman from North Carolina are utterly impossible. Fruit juices are not a sirup. You can not call them a sirup and put them in the law as a sirup. That would introduce all sorts of difficulties with the Treasury Department the moment you undertake it. The loganberry juice can be drunk in the form in which it is originally pressed from the berry. It does not have to be diluted unless you like it better. The same thing is true with these grape juices. There is a difference, notwithstanding the argument made by the gentleman from Alabama, between fruit juices, expensive to make, difficult to keep, hard to handle, and some concoction of carbonic-acid gas and water with a little sugar in it, and there is almost the same difference with regard to all these beverages made from cereals from which you can make a whole barrel of beverage for the same expense as to make a quart of loganberry juice. There is no question about that, and that is the reason there should be a distinction, should be a difference, in the rate of tax upon those different kinds of beverages. Now, Mr. Chairman, the time is very much limited and I do not want to cut off these gentlemen entirely, so I will only use these two minutes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I would like to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment——

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I think there is an amendment pending.

The CHAIRMAN. There are amendments pending. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask for a division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 57.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to get unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES of Texas: Page 1, line 9, after the word "drinks," insert "and there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all unfermented grape juice, ginger ale, root beer, sarsaparilla, pop, artificial mineral waters (carbonated or not carbonated), other carbonated waters or beverages, and other soft drinks sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer in bottles or other closed containers, a tax equivalent to 1 per cent of the price for which so sold."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the amendment is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order the amendment is out of order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And I want to say this about the point of order.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I would like the gentleman to state it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I make the point of order that the gentleman's amendment is out of order as conflicting with paragraph 3 of Rule XXI.

In the first place, it is clearly out of order because the paragraph and bill are the same in this case. It would be out of order in either case, I think, but in this case the paragraph and the bill to which this amendment is offered are the same. This bill deals only with nonalcoholic fruit-juice beverages. The gentleman endeavors to add an entirely different subject, to wit, cereal beverages.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Those are not included.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Ginger ale and all that sort of thing, at any rate.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The part that deals with cereal beverages I left out.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It deals with ginger ale, at any rate.

Mr. Chairman, under paragraph 3, Rule XXI, you can not introduce into a tariff or revenue bill dealing with certain specific articles another and a different article. Let me refer the Chair to page 521 of the Manual. The Chairman in that case was interpreting the meaning of this rule. It was the first decision where the full meaning of that paragraph was considered. At the bottom of page 520 the Chair says:

It is clear to the mind of the Chair that this rule was intended to further limit the right of amendment, and to make it clear that to be germane the amendment should relate to the subject matter in the bill, and to the particular item in this bill sought to be amended.

This is a bill entitled:

A bill to place on the free list agricultural implements, cotton bagging, cotton ties, leather, boots and shoes, fence wire, meats, cereals, flour, bread, timber, lumber, sewing machines, salt, and other articles.

And a little further on he says:

While the bill relates to the free list, does the amendment proposing to put glass on the free list in any proper sense relate to the subject matter in the bill, or to any item in the bill?

And proceeded to rule the amendment out of order.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that was the bill of almost the broadest conceivable sort. A very large number of articles were sought to be placed on the free list in that bill, and even though the bill was as broad as that, an effort to include glass among these specified articles was held to be out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear from the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] on the point of order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Let me add this statement, Mr. Chairman, and briefly refer to the history of this rule. At the time it was adopted it had been the custom on this side of the House in considering tariff bills to offer a rule making out of order amendments to revenue bills under consideration. We were a good deal criticized for that.

In 1911, when the other side got the majority, they put in this rule, paragraph 3 of Rule XXI. It is an exception to all rules theretofore or thereafter provided as to germaneness. It was intended to limit germaneness to the least possible extent, and so it was very easy for our friends on that side of the House to bring in a tariff or revenue bill without bringing in a rule, and it seemed perfectly fair on the surface, though the right to amend was absolutely destroyed. Paragraph 3 of Rule XXI was established, and just behind the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] is the gentleman [Mr. ALEXANDER] who announced the first comprehensive ruling, and with absolute correctness, as I believe. It prevents absolutely the amendment of any item of a tariff bill by introducing some new subject, and it is proper, Mr. Chairman, that that should be so, because if the gentleman who now offers this amendment to include ginger ale would have the right to include ginger ale, he would have the right to include automobiles, jewelry, and almost everything else that has upon it a manufacturer's tax, and it would inevitably lead to chaos.

I submit again that both under the spirit and under the letter of paragraph 3 of Rule XXI the gentleman's amendment is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, if I understand correctly the precedent which is cited by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], it refers to an appropriation bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, no; to a revenue bill.

Mr. JONES of Texas. But that makes no difference. His proposition is not parallel to the one which the Chair has before him at the present time. This particular bill levies on nonalcoholic fruit juice beverages a tax of 2 cents per gallon. The present law taxes such beverages 15 per cent of the price for which they are sold.

Now, the first amendment, as I understand, was ruled out by the Chair on the theory that such amendment undertook to repeal a tax measure; that is, to add a repealing amendment to a taxing measure. I have simply added, instead of 10 per cent of the price, a tax of 1 per cent of the price, making it a taxing amendment. The repealing provision, of course, would apply to it as it does to the other portion of the bill.

Now, I have not included in this amendment the first part of the old law which refers to cereal beverages or substitutes therefor, containing less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol as sold by the manufacturer. It would probably be subject to a point of order if I had included that in the amendment, because this particular tax bill which we have before the House at the present time is a tax referring to nonalcoholic beverages. I have therefore, in my amendment, simply included those items which are named in the old bill as "nonalcoholic," and are named in the same paragraph which cover the items contained in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Texas whether or not he thinks that a bill placing a tax upon nonalcoholic fruit juice could be amended by a germane amendment that would propose to add ginger ale, root beer, sarsaparilla, pop, and artificial mineral waters?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Well, it includes grape juice as well. It includes those articles that are named in the same paragraph. I think it is a question of beverage rather than the particular adjective that is attached to the word "beverage." They are nonalcoholic beverages, and the principal word is the word "beverage," rather than the adjective "fruit juice" attached before the word "beverage." They are the nonalcoholic beverages that are named in the same paragraph. Now, being beverages, and being nonalcoholic beverages, it seems to me they would go in with these other beverages. It is simply adding another adjective to the noun. The noun is the principal word in the sentence. It is the word in the sentence that gives the sentence its meaning, and the adjective is simply the qualifying word to the noun. The effect of my amendment is simply to add some qualifying words to that noun. The word "beverage," as I say, is the principal word. "Nonalcoholic" refers rather to the class and type of beverages. I have simply added one more nonalcoholic beverage. They are specifically designated as unfermented.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman, then, under his theory, could add an alcoholic beverage?

Mr. JONES of Texas. No. I do not know whether you could or not, but I do not think that is important. That issue is not in the case.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair thinks the amendment is in violation of both section 3 of Rule XXI and of section 7 of Rule XVI, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

Mr. BLACK. After the word "beverage," in line 4, strike out the words "whether carbonated or not."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK: In line 4, page 1, after the word "beverage" strike out the words "whether carbonated or not."

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not prevail. I shall ask for a vote.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, how much time remains?

The CHAIRMAN. Five minutes.

Mr. BLACK. I would like to explain in a very brief way the reason for offering my amendment, and I see no reason why it should not be accepted by those who are friendly to grape juice, loganberry juice, and other fruit juices and are seeking to encourage those industries. I know that we are all familiar with the fact that these fruit juices are put up in bottles without carbonation. The method by which these juices are used as a home beverage is to take the juice and mix it with sugar and water and serve with plenty of ice.

The only place where they are carbonated is at the soda fountain, and this afternoon we have taken off the tax from soda-fountain drinks. Now, the reason I have offered the amendment is this: In section 628 of the war revenue bill we placed a tax of 10 per cent on the sale price of all carbonated beverages. Let us take Coca-Cola. The sirup is not a beverage. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] dwelt at considerable length upon that proposition; but we are all familiar with the fact that you can not take Coca-Cola sirup and use it as a beverage. The only way in which it can be used as a beverage is to carbonate it, either at the soda fountain or in the bottle with carbonated water, and when that was done, under section 630 you put a tax on it at the soda fountain and under section 628 all the bottlers of Coca-Cola have paid 10 per cent on the sale price. Now, what will be the result if you leave in this bill these words "whether carbonated or not"? The manufacturers of these fruit juices will take loganberry juice and grape juice and possibly some other juices and make them up in sirup form and sell them to the bottler, and when the bottler carbonates that beverage, under this provision if it stays in, "whether carbonated or not," he will pay 2 cents a gallon on those beverages instead of 10 per cent. Now, what difference will it make as to the amount of his tax? A case of soda water that is ordinarily sold to the dealer contains 24 half-pint bottles, which would be 12 pints or 1 gallon and a half. Under the present law there would be about 8 cents collected on that case of soda water, because I think the average price would be about 80 cents for a case of 24 half-pint bottles. Now, suppose you make these carbonated drinks from loganberry sirup or other fruit juice sirup. You would have a gallon and a half of carbonated drink made from fruit juice sirup, and you would pay 3 cents on it instead of 8 cents. Now, is there any better reason why you should pay 8 cents on other sirups and only 3 cents on carbonated loganberry drink?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Now, take a case of 24 half-pint bottles of soda water, made from a sirup. They pay 8 cents to the Government.

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The bottler absorbs that, and the retailer charges 6 cents a bottle under the guise of a tax, and places that onto the public.

Mr. BLACK. The bottler does not absorb the tax. He charges it up to the retailer. At least it is my understanding that it has been done in most cases.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Charges 8 cents?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And the retailer gets 24 cents, 1 cent on each of the 24 bottles, and that is something we want to get rid of.

Mr. BLACK. I advocated on the floor this afternoon that if you repeal the tax on any of the soft drinks, you ought to repeal them all. But, gentlemen, if you are only wanting to protect the buyer of fruit juices, you do not need to have the word "carbonated" in here, because we all know that grape juice, loganberry juice, and drinks of that sort are put up by the manufacturers in half pints, pints, quarts, and gallons, and without carbonation. But if we are going to permit the making of loganberry sirup or grape sirup and make carbonated beverages out of it as is done with lemon and orange and sarsaparilla sirup, then I do not see any reason why all such drinks should not pay the regular 10 per cent tax. I do not see any just reason for discrimination in favor of the one and against the other. It is for this reason I have offered my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. All I want to say is that I hope that amendment will not prevail. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BLACK) there were—ayes 20, noes 47.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] sent an amendment to the desk.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let the amendment go into the RECORD.

The amendment is as follows:

Amendment by Mr. KITCHIN: Strike out all of the enacting clause and insert the following: That section 628 of the revenue act of 1918 be amended by adding, at the end of such section, the following: "(c) Fruit juices, whether consisting of pure fruit juice or of pure fruit to which sugar has been added, to which an equal amount of water or more must be added to make a potable liquid of the soft-drink class, shall be construed as a sirup and shall not be taxed under this section.

Mr. KITCHIN. I withdraw that amendment, because there is no chance in the world of getting this House to pass it, and it is no use to take up the time.

Mr. FORDNEY. I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7840) providing for a tax on pure fruit-juice beverages, had directed him to report the same back to the House without amendment, with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. FORDNEY. I move the previous question on the bill to the final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FORDNEY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. RUCKER, for this week, on account of sickness in the family.

To Mr. KRAUS, at the request of Mr. VESTAL, indefinitely, on account of illness in family.

To Mr. DAVEY, for two days, on account of important business.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following joint resolution:

H. J. Res. 147. Joint resolution to ratify and confirm from and including July 1, 1919, obligations incurred pursuant to the terms of certain appropriations for the fiscal year 1920.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, July 29, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Navy transmitting views of the Navy Department in connection with certain aspects of radio communication (H. Doc. No. 165), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. TIMBERLAKE, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4437) to provide revenue for the Government and to promote the production of tungsten ores and manufactures thereof in the United States, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 161), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7539) to provide for monthly payment of pensions, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 162), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MONTAGUE, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7110) extending the time for the construction of a bridge across Flint River, in the State of Georgia, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 163), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. RAYBURN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7706) to extend the time for the construction of the Broadway Street bridge across the Arkansas River between the cities of Little Rock and Argenta, Ark., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 164), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7707) to extend the time for the construction of the Main Street bridge across the Arkansas River between the cities of Little Rock and Argenta, Ark., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 165), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GARLAND, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 150) to suspend the requirements of annual assessment work on mining claims during the year 1919, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 170), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. VAILE, from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 163), authorizing the Secretary of Labor to lease the Charleston immigration station and dock connected therewith, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 172), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII. the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3586) granting a pension to Martin L. Stokesberry, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

By Mr. KAHN: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 165) to allow the payment of bills lawfully incurred for construction work actually performed or construction material actually purchased and delivered prior to the approval of an act approved July 11, 1919 (Public, No. 7, 65th Cong., H. R. 5227); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, July 29, 1919.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come to Thee day by day because we can not hope to achieve the great purpose of our Government, the highest reaches of our civilization, without Thy guidance and Thy blessing. Thou art the author of the ideals for which we stand. We come seeking Thy guidance and Thy blessing. We pray that Thou wilt unfold to us the manner in which we should live. Reveal to us the path upon which we should travel. Open to us the vision of the great future to which Thou dost call us. May we be kept by Thy grace and see this Nation progressing along the line following the track of divine revelation to the highest possible achievements of Thy people. We ask these things for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

RADIO COMMUNICATION (H. DOC. NO. 165).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting the views of the Navy Department in connection with certain aspects of radio communication which have become so acute as to demand action by the Congress at the very earliest opportunity, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 2837. An act to repeal section 630 of the revenue act of 1918, approved February 24, 1919; and

H. R. 7840. An act providing for a tax on pure fruit-juice beverages.

SHANTUNG PROVINCE, CHINA.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, with the indulgence of the Senate I should like to take four or five minutes to call attention to a very radical error that appears in a very important document which was introduced yesterday by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], it being a letter or an editorial written by ex-President Taft and published in the Philadelphia Public Ledger. In this article ex-President Taft said:

> The exact facts in respect to the Shantung matter have not been set forth as clearly and fully as could be desired. What Germany had in China was granted her by China at the time of the Boxer troubles by way of an indemnity for the killing of her minister, Baron Kettler, and was one of the concessions to foreign powers which grew out of the rising against the foreigners in the time of the Dowager Empress.

Mr. President, the ex-President proceeded then to argue that China had conceded to Germany as an indemnity for the death of Baron von Kettler, which death occurred during the Boxer insurrection, the lease or cession at Shantung, and argued from that proposition that there was a vested interest in Germany which passed to Japan by conquest, and justifying the recognition of the German title and the action of the peace conference in passing over the equities of Germany to Japan.

Mr. President, those are not the exact facts. The exact facts are exactly the reverse, and as the statement I have quoted is the foundation of the whole article, I think it is just to the Senate that the correct story should be told, as it may be in two or three minutes.

The Boxer insurrection occurred in 1900. It was the result of the coup d'état of the Empress Dowager. Shantung was leased to Germany in 1897 or 1898, three or four years before the Boxer insurrection occurred.

It was known as early as 1896 that Germany had developed the policy, and it was so publicly stated in the Reichstag, that she must have a port and a sphere of influence in China, and that was to be the bay of Kiaochow and the environment of the Shantung Peninsula.

Germany's opportunity came in 1897, when two missionaries, not two diplomatic ministers, were murdered in the neighborhood of Kiaochow by highwaymen. These highwaymen were not representatives of the Government; they were mere outlaws, and Germany's right to demand indemnity for the missionaries' death or a vast cession of valuable territory in China would be just as good as Great Britain's right would be to demand a cession of the State of Maryland if two of her subjects had been killed, as they might have been, by outlaws in this city last week.

When the Boxer insurrection broke out we all remember how the representatives of foreign countries were impounded in the city of Peking. They were given by the Dowager Empress in June, 1900, 24 hours to leave the city. At a conference held on the night of the 19th of June, 1900, in the compound it appeared that a majority of the ministers and a majority of the foreigners of our nationality, the French nationality, the British nationality, and other European nationalities had practically decided that they would move off to Tientsin on the following morning, or within the 24 hours.

The British opposed this move, because Tientsin was a long distance away and it would take a mile of carts to transport these foreigners to that city of refuge through a thickly populated country, where the Boxers were having it all their own way. They urged and pleaded and argued with their confreres not to risk the danger, as it meant certain death to them all.

Baron von Kettler, who represented the German Government, took it upon himself, brave man that he was, to visit alone, with his private secretary and two Chinese servants, the Chinese foreign office to see if there could be some modification of this order for them to leave within the 24 hours. On his way to the foreign office he was murdered by imperial soldiers.

The legations at once determined that if the imperial army of China could not protect the foreign ministers in walking from the compound to their own yamen, it would be worse than madness to undertake this journey to Tientsin. So it was given up, and the life of Baron von Kettler was what saved all the lives within that compound.

The indemnity demanded for his death was determined in the protocol of 1901, four years after this cession of Shantung had been made to Germany, and that indemnity consisted of Germany's share in about $350,000,000 in gold. The only mention of Baron von Kettler in the protocol was that the Germans demanded that a monument should be erected to his memory upon the spot where he was slain, and to-day a beautiful arch spans the street at that spot, upon which are inscribed in Chinese and in German inscriptions of the deepest regret and mortification for the act.

Ex-President Taft would have been right in defending that indemnity if it had been the indemnity granted for that brave man's death. The fact is, however, that the indemnity that was agreed to be paid, and which has been up to date in part paid, and which was the indemnity agreed upon in common under the protocol by all the nations to which I have referred, including ourselves—the remainder of that indemnity so justly exacted is taken away from Germany under the peace treaty we are now considering.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MOSES presented petitions of sundry citizens of Andover, Wentworth, Henniker, Salisbury, Hanover, Deerfield, Jackson, Hudson, Bradford, and East Kingston, all in the State of New Hampshire, praying for the ratification of the league of nations treaty, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I present a communication from the commander and the adjutant general of the South Carolina Division, United Confederate Veterans, of Greenwood, S. C., transmitting resolutions unanimously adopted by that division indorsing the proposed league of nations. I ask that the communication and accompanying resolutions be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the communication and accompanying resolutions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GREENWOOD, S. C., July 23, 1919.

To the UNITED STATES SENATORS FOR SOUTH CAROLINA,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIRS: We respectfully forward to you resolutions unanimously adopted by the South Carolina Division of United Confederate Veterans. We trust that they may be of service in the settlement of the great question now before our country and the world.

Sincerely, yours,

W. A. CLARK,
Commander of the South Carolina Division U. C. V.
DAVID CARDWELL,
Adjutant General South Carolina Division U. C. V.

Whereas the war which has been waging in Europe for the past four years, in which, for the sake of the liberties of mankind and the preservation of our Christian civilization, the United States was called to take part, was brought to an end on the 11th day of November last, and the great victory was won by the allied nations of Europe, aided by the Army and Navy of our country; and

Whereas the terms of peace have at last been agreed upon and are now before the Senate of the United States for ratification; and

Whereas our President and his associates have labored hard in an effort to bring about a just and lasting peace: Be it

Resolved, That we, the South Carolina Division of the United Confederate Veterans, in annual meeting assembled at Greenwood, S. C., do hereby hearily indorse the work of our great President, Woodrow Wilson, and his associates in the Paris peace conference; and we specially indorse the proposed league of nations created for the avowed purpose of affording another tribunal for the settlement of international quarrels aside from bloody war. The league was born of necessity, nurtured by the Nation that was willing to go to war for things nearer and dearer than the possessions of another nation, but even now in its infancy there are those in the household of its birth who would strangle the infant that came into the world to bring peace. America has sought to give to the world something to take the place of the battle field, and, however short of perfection it may seem to be in its beginning, we deplore the organized efforts of certain public men who seek to destroy the first great step of the nations toward universal peace.

We believe that the conscience of the world is awakened to the need of such a league. Warring nations are no longer the only ones interested in war, for it affects the whole world, and it is high time that we were providing some substitute for wholesale shedding of blood. Such we believe the league of nations to be, and as a step in the right direction we welcome it in the name of humanity and bid it Godspeed on its way: And

Resolved, That we reaffirm our confidence in our President and those associated with him in the administration of our Government, we reaffirm our confidence in our Congress, and would offer our aid in promoting the world peace toward which we all look with anxious hope, and to that end we pledge our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor.

Resolved further, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the President of the United States and to each of our United States Senators.

Certified this 23d day of July, 1919.

W. A. CLARK,
Commander of the South Carolina Division U. C. V.
DAVID CARDWELL,
Adjutant General South Carolina Division U. C. V.

Mr. SPENCER presented a memorial of sundry citizens of St. Joseph, Mo., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Kenyon-Kendrick bill providing for Federal control of the meat-packing industry, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. PHIPPS presented a petition of the Clearing House of Denver, Colo., praying for the return to private ownership of the railroads of the country, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CULBERSON. I present resolutions adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of El Paso, Tex., favoring the passage of the Kenyon-Kendrick bills providing for Federal control of the meat-packing industry. I ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions indorsing Kendrick and Kenyon bills.

Whereas there has been introduced in the Senate of the United States, under date of June 23, 1919, by Senators KENDRICK and KENYON, bills providing for the regulation of the meat-packing industry; and

Whereas these measures provide for the stimulation of the production of live stock and regulation of stockyards, refrigerator-car service, and the general sale and distribution of packing-house products; and

Whereas there is nothing in either of these bills that can correctly be construed to be an injury or a detriment to the independent packers of the country; and

Whereas the Federal Trade Commission has, after due investigation, reported the activities of the packing interest, commonly known as the "Big Five," such reports setting forth the menace of the huge control of the Nation's food products by these interests, which extends not only to live-stock products, but to other articles of food, dairy products, grain, and fruits, and even to building materials; and

Whereas this monopoly of the food products of the country is inconsistent with the spirit and principle of American government and does restrict individual enterprise: Be it therefore

Resolved, That the El Paso Chamber of Commerce, through its board of directors, does indorse the Kendrick and Kenyon bills as now before the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to our Congressmen and Senators, Senators KENDRICK and KENYON, to our special Representative at Washington, D. C., and to various commercial organizations, requesting the latter to pass resolutions of a similar character.

I hereby certify that the above is a true and correct copy of resolutions as passed by the board of directors July 22, 1919.

K. M. ROBERTS, General Manager.

Mr. LODGE. I present petitions signed by Walter Channing and 9 other citizens, Helen L. Winslow and 9 other citizens, Mary P. Hayden and 10 other citizens, Susan H. Kelley and 9 other citizens, Thomas Jarboe and 40 other citizens, all of Wellesley; of Arthur H. Nichols and 3 other citizens, Susan C. Lyman and 14 other citizens, Emma H. Saunders and 11 other citizens, Annie T. Seabrook and 22 other citizens, W. N. Kant and 11 other citizens, of Sarah H. Dabney and 7 other citizens, of Ellsworth Huntington and 12 other citizens, of J. W. Murdough and 8 other citizens, of Sylvester R. Robertson and 29 other citizens, of Mary L. Cushman and 26 other citizens, of Virginia F. Moors and 32 other citizens, of L. Gertrude Bertwell and 13 other citizens, of William H. Kohl and 17 other citizens, of Mrs. E. Isabel Noyes and 7 other citizens, of Etheldred F. Folsom and 20 other citizens, of Mrs. M. R. Porter and 10 other citizens, of Delveran King and 42 other citizens, of Henry C. Levick and 6 other citizens, of George B. Galley, jr., and 43 other citizens, of A. J. Wiechardt and 11 other citizens, of Elizabeth Towne and 17 other citizens, of Dr. Albert E. Thompson and 16 other citizens, of David Cheever and 3 other citizens, and of Pauline M. Dawson and 10 other citizens, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the ratification of the proposed league of nations treaty. I ask that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and that the body of one of the petitions be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petitions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and the body of one of the petitions ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Believing that the United States should enter the league of nations, which aims to promote international cooperation and to achieve international peace and security;

Recognizing that the covenant of the league of nations can not be separated from the peace treaty, since the latter was founded on the assumption that the league of nations would be formed;

Believing that delay on the part of the United States Senate to ratify the peace treaty will seriously jeopardize the peace of the world;

We, the undersigned citizens of Massachusetts, urge the United States Senate to ratify the treaty of peace, including the covenant, without reservation or amendment as soon as it is submitted for ratification.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2440) for the relief of the estate of John M. Lea, deceased, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 118) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 358) carrying into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in the matter of the claim of T. L. Love, surviving partner of Robert Love & Son (Rept. No. 115);

A bill (S. 2343) for the relief of Capt. Frederick B. Shaw (Rept. No. 116); and

A bill (S. 2453) to carry into effect the finding of the Court of Claims in the claim of Elizabeth B. Eddy (Rept. No. 117).

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1330) for the relief of V. E. Schermerhorn, E. C. Caley, G. W. Campbell, and Philip Hudspeth, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 114) thereon.

DAYLIGHT-SAVING LAW.

Mr. CUMMINS. I report from the Committee on Interstate Commerce the bill (H. R. 3854) for the repeal of the daylight-saving law. The report is a favorable one; and I give notice that to-morrow at some time, there being no speeches scheduled for that day, I shall endeavor to bring it to the attention of the Senate for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

PAYMENT OF WAR DEPARTMENT OBLIGATIONS.

Mr. WADSWORTH. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) to permit the payment of obligations entered into by the War Department prior to July 11, 1919.

Mr. President, at the risk of taxing the patience of the Senate I ask unanimous consent for immediate consideration of the joint resolution, and I suggest that the Secretary read it.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the joint resolution read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas it is provided by the act of Congress approved July 11, 1919 (Public No. 7, H. R. 5227)—

"That no part of any of the appropriations made herein nor any of the unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made for the support and maintenance of the Army or the Military Establishment shall be expended for the purchase of real estate or for the construction of Army camps or cantonments, except in such cases at National Army or National Guard camps or cantonments which were in use prior to November 11, 1918, where it has been or may be found more economical to the Government for the purpose of salvaging such camps or cantonments to buy real estate than to continue to pay rentals or claims for damages thereon, and except where industrial plants have been constructed or taken over by the Government for war purposes and the purchase of land is necessary in order to protect the interest of the Government."

And

Whereas doubt exists as to the proper interpretation of said provision and the intention of Congress as expressed in said provision:

Resolved, etc., That the foregoing provisions of said act shall not be construed to prevent the payment from the unexpended balances of bills lawfully incurred for construction work actually performed or construction materials actually purchased prior to the approval of said act.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the only amendment the joint resolution makes to existing law is contained in the last provision, and that only applies where money has been actually expended upon the order of the War Department for any purpose for which they had authority to expend money.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from Utah is correct. The situation, to state it briefly, is this: The Comptroller of the Treasury has ruled that under the language used in the annual appropriation bill, which is recited in the preamble of the joint resolution, the War Department can not pay any money to a contractor, even though that contractor has finished a building in accordance with the terms of the contract which he has made with the Government, nor can the War Department pay a contractor or compensate him for material which he has purchased and delivered on the ground to be used in construction work. The result is that a large number of contractors are in danger of bankruptcy. It is an exceedingly difficult situation. Congress certainly did not mean that any such hardship should be inflicted.

Mr. NELSON. May I ask the Senator from New York a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Does the joint resolution authorize the confirmation of any contract made for the purchase of real estate?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It does not.

Mr. NELSON. It only covers labor and material?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It covers labor and material on work already completed.

Mr. NELSON. But it does not involve any contracts for the purchase of real estate?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is not any mention of real estate in the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask that a letter I have received from the Secretary of War be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, July 26, 1919.

To the CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
United States Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to forward to you a measure which the War Department earnestly desires enacted by Congress, and it is requested that effort be made to secure its passage at the earliest date practicable.

It has been decided by the Comptroller of the Treasury that under the restrictive legislation contained in the Army appropriation bill recently enacted payment of obligations for construction at Army camps or cantonments incurred prior to the enactment of the legislation referred to can not be made.

In order that the War Department may settle these obligations authorization by Congress is necessary.

Failure to settle these obligations, it is feared, will cause hardship to persons interested in these settlements, which include payment to laborers, settlement of bills for material, and payment to contractors. The urgent necessity for authority to settle these obligations is apparent.

It is the intention of the War Department in securing the enactment of this measure only to effect the settlement of obligations already incurred and not to obtain authority to complete unfinished construction or undertake new construction work at any Army camps or cantonments.

Respectfully,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

LICENSING OF PACKING INDUSTRY.

Mr. MOSES. I submit an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill (S. 2202) to stimulate the production, sale, and distribution of live stock and live-stock products, and for other purposes. I ask that the amendment be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The amendment was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. MOSES to the bill (S. 2202) to amend a bill to stimulate the production, sale, and distribution of live stock and live-stock products, and for other purposes, numbered S. 2202, by striking out all after the enacting clause and substituting therefor the following:

"That when used in this act the term 'commerce' means commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, or in any territory, or possession of the United States, or in the District of Columbia, or between any such territory or possession and another.

"The term 'person' includes a partnership, a corporation, or an association of two or more individuals, and the members of a partnership or the directors, officers, receivers, or other person charged with the duty of the management and operation of the business of a corporation or association.

"SEC. 2. That no person shall engage in or carry on any business in commerce unless he shall secure and hold a license which shall be issued by the Secretary of Agriculture upon application in accordance with regulations prescribed under this act.

"SEC. 3. That after the expiration of 60 days from the date this act becomes effective any person who, without a license issued and in force under this act or while such license is under suspension, engages in or carries on any business for which a license is required by this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

"SEC. 4. That each license issued under this act shall be effective from the date of its issuance and shall continue in force until suspended or revoked in accordance with the provisions of this act. It shall be the duty of the licensee to comply with the provisions of this act and the rules, regulations, and orders whether or not incorporated in such license which the Secretary of Agriculture shall from time to time prescribe in conformity with this act. The Secretary of Agriculture may regulate and control the licensee's relations, whether direct or indirect, to the purchase, manufacture, or sale in commerce of commodities other than those handled in the business for which the license was applied for and issued and may require the licensee to refrain from direct or indirect participation or interest in such other business, either by ownership, control, community, or stockholding, or otherwise, and it shall be the duty of such licensee to comply with such regulations, terms, and conditions, and the Secretary of Agriculture may by regulation limit and prescribe the classes, numbers, and kinds of commodities and merchandise which any licensee may sell, manufacture, and deal in and may forbid licensee from selling, manufacturing, or dealing in more than one kind of article or commodity. The Secretary of Agriculture may, as to any business from which a license is required under this act, promulgate regulations from time to time regulating the price of all commodities sold by the licensee, prescribing the method of doing business by the licensee, prescribe the method in which the accounts of the licensee shall be kept, and prescribe the character of plants to be used by the licensee and may limit the profits which such licensee may make on the business transacted by such licensee during any year to such an amount as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem reasonable.

"SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any licensee under this act to—

"(a) Engage in any unfair, unjustly discriminatory, or deceptive practice or device in commerce; or

"(b) Charge an unreasonable price or rate for any commodity sold by it in commerce; or

"(c) Exact an unreasonable profit for any calendar year in carrying on his business in commerce; or

"(d) Refrain from buying any commodity for the purpose of unreasonably depressing the price thereof in commerce; or

"(e) Withhold from the market any commodity for the purpose of unreasonably enhancing the price thereof in commerce; or

"(f) Conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other person to apportion territory for carrying on business or to apportion purchases or sales of any commodity, or to control prices in commerce; or

"(g) Conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other such licensee to engage in any course of business or to do any act for the purpose of preventing any person from carrying on a competitive or similar business in commerce; or

"(h) Otherwise act or refuse, neglect, or fail to act, or conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other person to do, or aid or abet the doing of any act contrary to the provisions of this act and the regulations made herein.

"SEC. 6. That every licensee shall keep such record and statements of account and make such reports or returns, verified under oath or otherwise, as will fully and correctly disclose all transactions involved in his business, and the true ownership of such business, by stockholding or otherwise, in such form and at such times as may be required under general or special orders of the Secretary of Agriculture. For the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this act or of verifying any report or returns made thereunder, any officer or agent of the Government designated in accordance with such orders may, during the ordinary business hours in any day, enter and examine any place used by any licensee in his business, and may inspect any books, letters, papers, or documents relating to such business.

"SEC. 7. That the Secretary of Agriculture may investigate and ascertain the demand for, the supply, the consumption, costs and prices of, and the facts relating to the ownership, production, transportation, manufacturing, storage, handling, or distribution of any commodity entering into or used in 'commerce.' For the proper execution of the provisions of this act, and in order to provide information for the use of Congress, it shall be the duty of any licensee, or any officer, agent, or employee of such licensee, when requested by an officer or agent of the Government designated in accordance with regulations under this act, to answer correctly, to the best of his knowledge, under oath or otherwise, as may be required, all questions touching his knowledge of any matter authorized to be investigated under this section, or to produce any book, letters, papers, or documents in his possession or under his control relating to such matters. Any licensee, agent, or employee of such licensee who shall within a reasonable time prescribed by the officers or agents making the request, not exceeding 20 days from the date of the receipts of the request, willfully fail or refuse to answer such questions or to produce such books, letters, papers, or documents, or shall willfully give any answer that is false or misleading, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,000, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or both. Any information secured under this act, except secret processes or formulas, shall be available for either House of Congress at its request; and the Secretary of Agriculture may cause such information to be published from time to time when deemed necessary or advisable.

"SEC. 8. That the Secretary of Agriculture may make such rules and regulations as may be required to carry out the purposes of this act, may cooperate with any department or agency of the Government or of any State or political subdivision thereof or with any person, and may make any investigation and take any action or commence and prosecute any proceedings not inconsistent with the provisions of this act which the Federal Trade Commission is authorized to make, take, or commence under any other act regulating the conduct or operation in commerce of any of the businesses for which a license is required by this act. The several departments and agencies of the Government, when directed by the President, shall furnish to the Secretary of Agriculture, upon his request, all records, papers, and information in their possession relating to any person subject to any of the provisions of this act, and shall from time to time detail to the Department of Agriculture such officials and employees as the President may direct.

"SEC. 9. That any person who violates or fails to comply with any provision of this act or any regulation or order made and prescribed pursuant to this act, or who willfully—

"(a) Fails or refuses to make full and true entries, or makes any false entries in the accounts or records required to be kept by a licensee; or

"(b) Makes any false or fraudulent statement in a return or report required in this act; or

"(c) Alters, mutilates, conceals, or destroys any such account or record, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall, unless the punishment is otherwise fixed in this act, be punished by fine not exceeding $2,000 or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment. Each day during any part of which a condition, practice, omission, or course of action, punishable under this section is maintained or continued shall constitute a separate violation thereof and shall be punished as a separate offense

"SEC. 10. That whenever the Secretary of Agriculture believes that any licensee is violating any provision of this act, or any rule or regulation duly made and promulgated to carry out the provisions of this act, he shall cause notice in writing to be served upon the licensee, specifying the alleged violation, and requiring him to testify at a hearing before the Secretary of Agriculture at a place and time designated therein, and at such time and place the Secretary of Agriculture shall afford the licensee a reasonable opportunity to be heard in person or by counsel and through witnesses, in accordance with regulations prescribed under this act; and the Secretary of Agriculture shall at the same time be afforded a reasonable opportunity to be heard in person or by counsel and through witnesses, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed hereunder. If after such hearing the Secretary of Agriculture finds that the licensee has violated the provisions of this act, or of the rules and regulations issued thereunder, he may suspend the license for such period as he may prescribe, or may revoke it as in his discretion the protection of the public interests may require. The testimony taken at the hearing before the Secretary of Agriculture shall be reduced to writing and filed for record with the Department of Agriculture. An order suspending or revoking a license shall include the Secretary's findings of fact, and his decision shall specify the date, which shall not be less than 20 days from the date of service thereof upon the licensee, when it shall become effective. In the conduct of any proceeding under this section for the suspension or revocation of a license the Secretary may compel the attendance of witnesses, the giving of testimony, and the production of documentary evidence.

"An order suspending or revoking a license issued by the Secretary of Agriculture, under the provisions of this section, shall be final and conclusive unless within 30 days after its service upon him the licensee appeals to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the circuit in which he has his principal place of business by filing with the clerk of said court a written petition praying that the Secretary's order be set aside or modified in the manner stated in the petition, together with a bond in such sum as the court may determine, conditioned that the licensee will pay the costs of the proceeding if the court shall so direct. The clerk of the court in which such a petition is filed shall immediately cause a copy thereof to be delivered to the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary shall forthwith prepare, certify, and file in the court a full and accurate transcript of the record in the proceedings held before him under this section, including the notice to the licensee, the charges against him, the evidence, and the order suspending or revoking the license. The testimony and evidence taken or submitted before the Secretary, duly certified and filed as aforesaid as a part of the record, shall be considered by the court as the evidence in the case. The Circuit Court of Appeals may affirm or set aside the order of the Secretary of Agriculture, or may direct the Secretary of Agriculture to modify his order. No order of the Secretary suspending or revoking a license under this section shall be modified or set aside by the Circuit Court of Appeals unless it is shown by the licensee that the order is unsupported by evidence or was issued without due notice and a reasonable opportunity having been afforded to the licensee for a hearing, or infringes the Constitution of the United States, or is beyond the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture under the provisions of this act.

"If the court determines that the just and proper disposition of such an appeal requires the taking of additional evidence, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Secretary of Agriculture in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as the court may deem proper. The Secretary may modify his finding as to the facts, or make new findings by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and he shall file such modified or new findings and his recommendation, if any, for the modification or setting aside of his original order with the return of such additional evidence. If the Circuit Court of Appeals affirms or modifies the action of the Secretary of Agriculture revoking a license under this section, its decree shall enjoin the licensee, its officers, agents, and employees from further carrying on, without a new license under this act, the business covered by the revoked license until the further order of the court. If the Circuit Court of Appeals affirms or modifies the action of the Secretary of Agriculture suspending a license under this section, its decree shall enjoin the licensee from further carrying on the business covered by the license during the period of suspension. The injunction shall be effective within five days, unless further notice is given by the Secretary of Agriculture of his intentions to apply for a receiver as hereinafter provided, in which case the injunction shall be effective upon the appointment and qualification of the receiver. Within five days after the entry of such a decree by the Circuit Court of Appeals, or in case no such appeal is taken by the licensee, then within five days after the expiration of the time allowed for appeals to that court from the Secretary's order suspending or revoking a license any United States District Court shall, upon the application of the Secretary of Agriculture setting forth the decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals, or the expiration of the period allowed for an appeal to that court, and that no such appeal has been taken, appoint a receiver to take possession of the licensee's property and assets and to conduct the licensed business, and shall make such other orders as may be necessary for the proper conduct of the receivership and the protection of the interests of the public.

"The Secretary of Agriculture's application for the appointment of a receiver shall take precedence over any other application in any other courts of the United States for the appointment of a receiver for the licensee's property and business. Upon the expiration of the period for which the license is suspended the district court may, in its discretion, issue an order extending the period of suspension, restraining the licensee from the transaction of his business or the disposition of his property or assets and continuing the receivership until the further order of the court. The order of the district court appointing a receiver shall direct him to take possession of the property and assets of the licensee and to conduct his business and to retain such possession and conduct such business until further order of the court. Whenever, on the application either of the Secretary of Agriculture or the receiver or the licensee, it shall, after a hearing, appear to the court that the ground for the order directing the appointment of a receiver has been removed and that the licensee may properly be permitted to resume possession of his property and the conduct of his business the court shall enter an order discharging the receiver as hereinafter provided. Unless otherwise provided by the order appointing him, the receiver so appointed shall, subject to the court's orders, have all the powers and duties relative to the property, assets, and business of the licensee exercised by or imposed upon receivers of corporations under appointment of the Federal court. A receiver appointed under the provisions of this section shall conduct and operate the business in accordance with this act and shall conserve the property and assets affected by the receivership and protect the rights of creditors of the licensee. In his reports to the court the receiver shall specify the practices, methods, acts, or omissions constituting a violation of this act or the regulations thereunder which were the basis of the order suspending the license, and the court, in its decree restoring to the licensee his property and license, shall recite such practices, methods, acts, or omissions and shall enjoin the licensee from resuming or continuing them. The receiver shall likewise include in his report all other violations of this act or the regulations thereunder which came to his notice in the course of his control of the business of the licensee, and the court may, in its discretion, after affording the licensee an opportunity to be heard, likewise enjoin the resumption or continuance of the practices, methods, acts, or omissions constituting such other violations. The United States Circuit Court of Appeals shall have exclusive jurisdiction to review the action of the Secretary of Agriculture under this section and may affirm, modify, or set aside any order of the Secretary revoking or suspending a license, but the decree of such court shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari, as provided in section 240 of the Judicial Code.

"SEC. 11. That the sum of $200,000 is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, available immediately and until expended, for carrying out the foregoing provisions of this act, including the employment of such persons and means, the expense of such printing and publication, the payment of such rents, and the purchase of such supplies and equipment in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, as the Secretary of Agriculture may find necessary.

"SEC. 12. That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to prevent or interfere with the procedure under or the enforcement of the provisions of the antitrust acts, the acts to regulate commerce, the act entitled 'An act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes,' approved September 26, 1914, the act entitled 'An act to promote export trade, and for other purposes,' approved April 10, 1918, or sections 73 to 77, inclusive, of an act entitled 'An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,' approved August 27, 1894, as amended by the act entitled 'An act to amend sections 73 and 76 of the act of August 27, 1894, entitled "An act to reduce taxation to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,"' approved February 12, 1913, nor shall anything contained in this act be construed to alter, modify, or repeal such acts or any part or parts thereof."

Mr. SHERMAN subsequently said:

Mr. President, I wished to make a parliamentary inquiry of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], but he does not seem to be here.

There was a most remarkable amendment offered this morning to Senate bill 2202, known as the Kenyon bill. It seems to license everybody engaged in interstate commerce; at least, a cursory reading of it gives that impression. I wished to make that inquiry of the Senator, if present, but he appears to be absent. I will allow the inquiry to stand in the RECORD.

Mr. MOSES subsequently said:

Mr. President, it is a far cry from the masterly expression of a deep philosophic study of a great subject presented by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] to the topic upon which I wish to speak for a minute.

In my absence from the Chamber earlier in the day the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] made some inquiry regarding the subject matter and the purpose and bearing of an amendment which I offered to Senate bill 2202, and inasmuch as the Senate will adjourn from to-day until day after to-morrow I take this occasion, in response to the Senator's invitation, to state briefly that it is the purpose of the amendment to carry out to its full effect the proposal in the bill I have named.

I confess, Mr. President, to considerable skepticism as to the merits and value and practicability of the licensing system as applied to American industries, but if one industry is to be singled out to be administered under a licensing system, if one group of industrial chieftains are to conduct their enterprise under the guidance of a civil-service employee located in Washington, that principle certainly should be extended to all enterprises of nation-wide magnitude and all industrial chieftains should be placed under the same restriction. I am entirely unwilling to see the policy of a licensing system adopted by piecemeal. If that is to be the policy of legislation in this country I wish it to be applied immediately and completely.

Inasmuch as the Senator from Illinois, who propounded this inquiry to me, is now absent from the Chamber, as I was when he made his interrogatory, I hope that he may read in the RECORD to-morrow this brief explanation of the purpose and bearing of the amendment which I offered, and that when the issue shall be joined in the consideration of the bill we may discuss the wisdom of applying the licensing system to the industries of the United States.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—ELLEN L. GOODWIN.

On motion of Mr. HALE, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying bill S. 2913, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, granting an increase of pension to Ellen L. Goodwin, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made.

COMMERCIAL FEEDS FOR ANIMALS.

Mr. NORRIS. I offer a Senate resolution, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 140) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission be, and it is hereby, instructed to make an investigation of the manufacture and sale of commercial feeds for animals, such investigation to include the gathering of statistics as to the supply of the various commodities which are used for animal feeds, together with the fluctuation in the prices of these commodities; the extent to which these commodities are converted into concentrated food by manufactures; what combinations or understandings, if any, exist between the feed manufacturers and wholesale feed dealers and retail feed dealers; and what fraud, if any, is practiced by dealers in the way of misbranding or using inferior substitutes in mixed feeds.

Further resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, directed to cooperate with the Federal Trade Commission in this investigation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. KING. I think it had better go over until to-morrow.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well; I am willing that it shall go over under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over and be printed.

CIRCULATION OF CURRENCY.

Mr. MYERS. I offer a Senate resolution, which I ask to have printed and go over until to-morrow.

The resolution (S. Res. 142) was ordered to lie over and to be printed, as follows:

Whereas on the 22d day of July, 1919, the Secretary of the Treasury, in response to an inquiry of the Senate, sent to the Senate the following communication:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, July 22, 1919.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the United States of July 8, 1919, transmitted to me by the Secretary of the Senate under date of July 9, I submit the following:

Under the act approved May 30, 1908, commonly known as the Aldrich-Vreeland Act, as amended, additional or emergency currency was issued, beginning on August 4, 1914, in amount $382,502,645. All of this additional circulation was retired before the close of the calendar year 1915. Authority for the issue of such additional or emergency currency expired by limitation on June 30, 1915.

No emergency currency has been issued by the Federal reserve banks. However, such banks have issued Federal reserve bank notes and Federal reserve notes in accordance with the provisions of law and under the general supervision of the Federal Reserve Board. None were outstanding August 1, 1914. The amounts of such notes in circulation on July 1, 1919, were:

Federal reserve bank notes $163,682,696
Federal reserve notes 2,493,992,462

The Treasury Department has no intention, nor, indeed, the power, to retire or withdraw from circulation any thereof, nor, as I am advised, has the Federal Reserve Board. The Federal Reserve System was devised to create an elastic currency which would expand and contract automatically in accordance with the requirements of business. Any reductions in the amounts of Federal reserve notes outstanding will be in accordance therewith. Federal reserve bank notes, for the most part, have been issued to replace silver certificates canceled and retired in accordance with the provisions of the act of April 23, 1918.

I transmit herewith a copy of the Treasury Department circulation statement for August 1, 1914, and July 1, 1919, showing the amount of money of the United States in circulation on the respective dates. Data are not available in the department with respect to the amount of money in circulation in the Territories and possessions of the United States.

Respectfully,
CARTER GLASS,
Secretary of the Treasury.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

And whereas in connection with the said communication the Secretary of the Treasury did transmit to the Senate the following tables and statements, to wit:

Circulation statement, Aug. 1, 1914.

	General stock of money in the United States.		Held in Treasury as assets of the Government.[1]		Money in circulation.

And whereas it appears therefrom that the amount of money in circulation in the United States is nearly twice what it was in volume and per capita five years ago: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the aforesaid communication of the Secretary of the Treasury and the accompanying tables and statements be and are referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and that that committee is hereby directed to consider the same and all thereof, and to report to the Senate whether or not it is advisable for Congress to enact any legislation to provide for a gradual reduction of the amount of money in circulation, and, if so, to report what legislation it deems necessary, expedient, or advisable to bring about some gradual reduction of the amount of money in circulation and to what extent and how rapidly such reduction should be had and what may be the views of the committee in general in the premises.

CITY OF FIUME AND VILLAGE OF SUSSAK.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer a resolution and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations without reading.

The resolution (S. Res. 141) was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Whereas the census of the city of Fiume shows an Italian population of 28,911, and a Slav population of 10,927, an Italian majority of 17,984; and

Whereas the population of the village of Sussak, which is separated from Fiume and to which no claim for annexation is made by Italy, is composed of 3,871 Slavs and 658 Italians; and

Whereas the two sections, even when taken together, show a total population of 29,569 Italians and 14,798 Slavs, or a clear Italian majority of 14,771 in both the city of Fiume and the village of Sussak; and

Whereas certain Jugo-Slav officers are changing these figures to confuse impartial and disinterested parties in furtherance of their avowed purpose of creating opposition against and attempting to prevent the annexation of Fiume to Italy; and

Whereas it is the desire of the Senate of the United States to mete justice to all parties concerned without fear or favor, when the treaty of peace between the United States of America and its Allies on one part and the Austro-Hungarian Government on the other part shall be presented to the United States Senate for ratification; and

Whereas it is the desire of the Senate of the United States to be properly advised as to the population of the city of Fiume and of the village of Sussak, so that its judgment or decision may be not rendered difficult on account of false and unsupported claims: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, if not incompatible with public interest, to instruct the delegation of the United States of America at the peace conference of Versailles to secure, in conjunction with the representatives of our Allies—Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan—and under their joint, impartial, and personal control, a correct census showing the correct population of Fiume and of the village of Sussak separately, and its division according to race, color, or nationalities, and to forward the same to the Senate for its advise and guidance at the earliest possible moment.

THE MOONEY CASE.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I present two letters, one written by myself to J. B. Densmore, United States Employment Service, dated May 6, 1919, and the other written by J. B. Densmore himself and addressed to myself, dated May 14, 1919, which I should like to have printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MAY 6, 1919.

Hon. J. B. DENSMORE,
United States Employment Service, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. DENSMORE: I find your letter on my return from an absence of some weeks.

You ask that, if I know anything of the misuse of the United States Employment Service, to advise you. The inquiry is made in view of a letter written by me in answer to a Mr. Anderson, of Rock Island, Ill. May I ask if the inquiry covers the activities of the United States Employment Service in San Francisco in the Mooney case? I would be very glad to include this subject in my answer to your letter, so as to avoid duplicating the correspondence.

Very truly, yours, LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
UNITED STATES EMPLOYMENT SERVICE,
Washington, May 14, 1919.

Hon. LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Receipt is acknowledged of your reply of May 6 to my letter asking you to be good enough to bring to my attention cases of misuse of the United States Employment Service which you mention generally in your letter to Mr. Anderson, of Rock Island.

In your reply you ask if my inquiry "covers the activities of the United States Employment Service in San Francisco in the Mooney case?"

My inquiry did not cover what you allege as "the activities of the United States Employment Service in San Francisco in the Mooney case," for the reason that the United States Employment Service had no connection whatever with the activities to which you refer.

I am sure you are so fair that you desire all the facts on this subject, which, briefly, are these: Since 1913 I have been Solicitor of the Department of Justice for the Department of Labor, appointed as such by the President. I resigned this position in January, 1918, at the request of the Secretary of Labor, to take up the work of establishing and directing the United States Employment Service.

During the year 1917, as solicitor for the department, I was sent by the Secretary of Labor to San Francisco to make an investigation of alleged graft and corruption in the Chinese immigration service in connection with the fraudulent admission of Chinese laborers to this country. I had a few trained investigators of the Government service with me, and at the conclusion of the investigation we had turned up and dismissed some 23 employees of the Immigration Service who were involved in accepting money from Chinese and others for the illegal admission of alien Chinese and for the delivery and destruction of certain records of the Government pertaining to Chinese. These frauds also involved several lawyers in San Francisco who were working with those dishonest Government employees.

I was instructed by the Secretary of Labor and the Attorney General to present the whole matter to the Federal grand jury with the United States attorney, which I did, with the result that about 22 of the grafters were indicted. The grand-jury investigation was finished and the indictments returned about November, 1917, at which time I returned to Washington, as there was no possibility of trying the cases in the near future. As several of the defendants had made complete confessions upon their arrest, and were Government witnesses, I felt that it was necessary to leave one of the department special inspectors to protect them from corruption by the more influential defendants, and also as a matter of protection to the Government's cases, as an attempt had been made to corruptly influence the action of the Federal grand jury while considering the cases we had before it.

With this in mind, one of the inspectors who had worked on the whole investigation was left in San Francisco, together with one other who lived there, and together they assisted the United States Attorney in gathering additional evidence to be used in the trial.

It was during the time these inspectors remained in San Francisco that they discovered an opportunity to present further evidence to the Secretary of Labor on the subject of the fairness of the trial of Thomas J. Mooney by the State's attorney for

San Francisco, which subject had been gone into by the commission appointed by the President, of which the Secretary of Labor was chairman. They were authorized to do so in connection with their other work.

In the meantime, when I returned to Washington in November, 1917, I was, as before mentioned, asked to take charge of the establishment and direction of the United States Employment Service, and I resigned as solicitor to do so. This new work engaged all my time, and it was not until the middle of October, 1918, that I found myself able to leave this work even for a few weeks to go to San Francisco and assist the district attorney in the prosecution of the cases. I was then Director General of the United States Employment Service, but I went to San Francisco at that time solely for the purpose of assisting in the Government's prosecution of the people indicted as a result of my investigation as solicitor and not at all for the purposes as universally charged " to investigate the Mooney case." Such investigation as was made was carried on by the two inspectors of the department who remained in San Francisco, and no person connected with the United States Employment Service had anything to do with it.

The investigation was practically finished when I arrived in San Francisco last October to assist the United States attorney in the trials, and the report of the investigators was transmitted by me to the Secretary of Labor. Unfortunately some of this report fell into the hands of the publisher of a local paper who published it without any authority whatever.

This statement is in no way meant to be an apology for any action of mine, as I am conscious of no act in connection with my official duty without authority therefor. It is meant to correct your apparent misapprehension that the United States Employment Service had any activities in connection with the Mooney case.

My inquiry to you was made in the interest of the betterment of the Employment Service, in the hope of having you bring to my attention, that they could be corrected, such matters as you mention in your letter to Mr. Anderson, of Rock Island, Ill.

I assure you there is no one who realizes quite as I do the imperfections of this service, but there can be no one more interested than I in removing them.

Sincerely,

J. B. DENSMORE,
Director General.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the matter is personal to myself and a case of pronounced official mendacity. I ask leave to make a statement in answer rather than by private correspondence to that United States official.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator from Illinois will proceed.

THE UNITED STATES EMPLOYMENT SERVICE ACTIVITIES IN THE MOONEY CASE.

Mr. SHERMAN. A concerted movement was for some time conducted to make permanent many millions of dollars in appropriations for the United States Employment Service. Many communications urged me to support the measure. I declined, giving my reasons in various letters. One of these letters addressed to Mr. Anderson, of Rock Island, Ill., was procured by or sent to J. B. Densmore, Director General of the United States Employment Service. He wrote me asking me if I knew of any activities of the Employment Service indicating a misuse of its powers, as I had intimated it in some of my letters, the Anderson letter among others.

All the letters were privileged to be made public. There were none of them private.

On May 6, 1919, in a letter which I have already submitted, I asked Mr. Densmore if his inquiry covered the activities of the United States Employment Service in San Francisco in the Mooney case. Mr. Densmore replied in a letter of May 14, 1919, signing it as director general on a letterhead of the United States Department of Labor, United States Employment Service. Director General Densmore denied that any person connected with the United States Employment Service had anything to do with the Mooney case. This unequivocal denial is contained in the letter submitted signed by Densmore. He undertook to explain that his presence in San Francisco on and before November 1, 1918, was exclusively to prosecute certain immigration frauds in which indictments had before that time been returned. The investigation of the Mooney case had previously been made, he says, by two investigators who had been employed in the immigration cases and had discovered an opportunity to present further evidence to the Secretary of Labor on the subject of the fairness of Mooney's trial. The director general says this investigation was practically finished when he arrived in San Francisco in October, 1918, to assist the United States attorney in the immigration trials there. The report of the investigators relating to Mooney was by Mr. Densmore transmitted to the Secretary of Labor. Mr. Densmore states in his letter that he went to San Francisco at that time solely for the purpose of assisting in the Government's prosecution of the defendants in the immigration cases and not at all for the purpose, so universally charged, to investigate the Mooney case. He adds that, unfortunately, this report on Mooney fell into the hands of a local newspaper, which published it without authority. This explanation, he says, is meant to correct my apparent misapprehension that the United States Employment Service had any activities in connection with the Mooney case. The letter directly states no one connected with the United States Employment Service had anything to do with the Mooney case. Densmore's letter conveys the statement that he simply transmitted a report made by the investigators in no way connected with the Employment Service to the Secretary of Labor.

It is most unfortunate for the director general of this service that on June 27, 1919, House resolution No. 128 required the Secretary of Labor to transmit to it information of the connection of John B. Densmore, Director of the United States Employment Service, with the Mooney case. Under the pressure of this resolution the Secretary gave to the House the suppressed report, Document No. 157, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session. It is found on page 3, headed " The Mooney case." It is dated November 1, 1918, San Francisco, Calif. It opens with this significant sentence from Mr. Densmore:

> Pursuant to instructions received from time to time during the past six months, I have the honor to report that I have conducted a secret and altogether informal inquiry into the Mooney case and beg leave to submit herewith the results of my investigation.

The six months' period from November 1, 1918, would relate back to May 1, 1918. Mr. Densmore was appointed Director General of the United States Employment Service January 1, 1918. Therefore the six months' period covered in this report is a time when Densmore was Director General of the United States Employment Service.

Again, on page 6, I quote:

> This was the condition of things when I asked for and received official permission to make a further investigation of the case along certain lines which I hoped would develop information of the first importance. By this time the fate of the Mooney defendants had aroused international interest and solicitude. * * * The liberal sentiment of Russia was aroused—

And so forth. Again, on page 6:

> In my investigation of the Mooney case I have kept these facts well in mind and proceeded on the theory that an unwarranted attack upon labor leaders with a premeditated and deliberate intention to injure and discredit union labor—

And so forth.

On page 7, in preparing for a fresh investigation, " two plans of operation naturally presented themselves." He continues it was decided to work secretly, and to the two trusted assistants in San Francisco he says, " I confided my plan of operations."

The entire document carries abundant evidence of the continuous activity of the director general in the Mooney case. It is signed, on page 76, " J. B. Densmore, Director General of Employment." A more complete case of official mendacity has not occurred capable of proof by documentary evidence. Before the House extracted this suppressed report from the Secretary of Labor the only evidence of the falsity of the director general's letter to me of May 14, 1919, was the publication of the report, in November, 1918, in the San Francisco Call, which is owned and edited by Fremont Elder. It is now officially established that the Director General of the United States Employment Service is unable to state facts, although he possesses the documentary evidence which would give him the information to do so. I regret the incident, but must preserve in some permanent form the reason why the United States Employment Service has been so prostituted to basely improper uses and the evidence thereof suppressed and denied by a United States official.

RESERVATIONS IN ENTERING LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I have before me a copy of a letter sent by me on July 18 to Justice Hughes, of New York, asking his opinion about reservations to the covenant for the league of nations in the peace treaty and also his reply. I ask leave that they be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON CANADIAN RELATIONS,
July 18, 1919.

Hon. CHARLES EVANS HUGHES,
96 Broadway, New York City.

MY DEAR JUDGE HUGHES: Many of us in the Senate are in favor of having the United States enter a league of nations, provided that in doing so we do not sacrifice the sovereignty or traditional policies of our country. We believe that the proposed covenant for a league of nations in the peace treaty now before the Senate does make such a sacrifice. Rather than take the covenant as it now stands, I am very certain that considerably more than one-third of the Senate would refuse to ratify the treaty altogether. As far as I am personally concerned, I do not want to see this happen, and I do want to see some plan devised whereby the United States may safely enter the league of nations. It has seemed to some of us that this result could best be accomplished by attaching certain reservations to the proposed covenant which would limit the participation by the United States in the league. I shall be very glad if you will give me your opinion as to the validity of such reservations, and also as to what reservations, in your judgment, should be made to safeguard the interests of our country.

Sincerely yours,

FREDERICK HALE.

NEW YORK, July 24, 1919.

HON. FREDERICK HALE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR HALE: I am in receipt of your letter of July 18, and it gives me pleasure to comply with your request for my opinion with respect to the validity and advisability of reservations on the part of the United States in entering the proposed league of nations.

Permit me to state at the outset the point of view from which I think the questions should be approached. There is plain need for a league of nations, in order to provide for the adequate development of international law, for creating and maintaining organs of international justice and the machinery of conciliation and conference, and for giving effect to measures of international cooperation which from time to time may be agreed upon. There is also the immediate exigency to be considered. It is manifest that every reasonable effort should be made to establish peace as promptly as possible and to bring about a condition in which Europe can resume its normal industrial activity.

I perceive no reason why these objects can not be attained without sacrificing the essential interests of the United States. There is a middle ground between aloofness and injurious commitments.

I share the regret that suitable steps have not been taken for the formulation of international legal principles and to secure judicial determinations of international disputes by impartial tribunals, and that the hope of the world in the determination of disputes has been made to rest so largely upon the decision of bodies likely to be controlled by considerations of expediency. There is merit enough in the proposed plan to make it desirable to secure it, if proper safeguards can be obtained, but it is just as futile to exaggerate its value as it is to see nothing but its defects. One must take a light-hearted view of conditions in the world to assume that the proposed plan will guarantee peace or bring about a cessation of intrigue and of the rivalries of interests or prevent nations which can not protect themselves from being compelled to yield to unjust demands where for any reason great powers deem resistance inexpedient. Rather, the proposed covenant should be viewed as a mere beginning, and while it is important that we should have a beginning, it is equally important that we should not make a false start.

I think that the prudent course is to enter the proposed league with reservations of a reasonable character, adequate to our security, which should meet ready assent, and thus to establish a condition of amity at the earliest possible moment.

As to the validity of reservations, this question has two aspects—first, with respect to the action on our part which is essential to the making of reservations and, second, as to the effect of reservations upon other parties to the treaty.

As to the first question it is manifest that attempted reservations will be ineffectual unless they qualify the act of ratification. The adoption of resolutions by the Senate setting forth its views will not affect the obligations of the covenant if it is in fact ratified without reservations which constitute part of the instrument of ratification.

If the Senate should adopt reservations by a majority vote, I assume that these will be made part of the proposed resolution of assent to the treaty, and the question will then be whether the Senate will give its assent with these reservations by the requisite two-thirds vote. If the proposed reservations are reasonable, the responsibility for the defeat of the treaty, if it is defeated, will lie with those who refuse the vote essential to the assent. If the Senate gives its assent to the treaty with reservations, the concurrence of the President will still be necessary, as ratification will not be complete without his action, and the responsibility for a refusal to give the ratification with the reservations as adopted by the Senate as a part of the instrument of ratification would thus lie with the President.

Assuming that the reservations are made as a part of the instrument of ratification, the other parties to the treaty will be notified accordingly. As a contract the treaty, of course, will bind only those who consent to it. The nation making reservations as a part of the instrument of ratification is not bound further than it agrees to be bound. And if a reservation as a part of the ratification makes a material addition to or a substantial change in the proposed treaty other parties will not be bound unless they assent. It should be added that where a treaty is made on the part of a number of nations they may acquiesce in a partial ratification on the part of one or more.

But where there is simply a statement of the interpretation placed by the ratifying State upon ambiguous clauses in the treaty, whether or not the statement is called a reservation, the case is really not one of amendment, and acquiesence of the other parties to the treaty may really be inferred unless express objection is made after notice has been received of the ratification with the interpretative statement forming a part of it.

Statements to safeguard our interest which clarify ambiguous clauses in the covenant by setting forth our interpretation of them, and especially when the interpretation is one which is urged by the advocates of the covenant to induce support, can meet with no reasonable objection. It is not to be supposed that such interpretations will be opposed by other parties to the treaty, and they will tend to avoid disputes in the future. Nor should we assume that a reservation would lead to the failure of the treaty or compel a resumption of the peace conference when the reservation leaves unimpaired the main provisions of the covenant looking to the peaceful settlement of disputes and the organization of conferences, and simply seeks to avoid any apparent assumption of an obligation on our part to join in a war at some indefinite time in the future for a cause the merits of which can not now be foreseen, as it is evident that in such case we must inevitably await the future action of Congress in accordance with what may then be the demand of the conscience of the Nation. In contemplating this experimental, albeit hopeful, enterprise, our security and good faith are primary considerations. Those, either here or abroad, who would oppose such reasonable interpretations or reservations on our part would take a heavy responsibility.

The question is then what specifically should the reservations be:

First. With respect to the right of withdrawal (art. 1). It is reasonable to provide that a member withdrawing from the league should not be released from a debt or liability previously incurred. But it should not be possible that through a claim of the nonperformance of an obligation a member desiring to withdraw should be kept in the league, perhaps indefinitely. I understand that different interpretations have been put upon the clause in question, and I think that there should be a clarifying statement as a part of the ratification.

Second. The clause relating to domestic matters, such as immigration or tariff laws is ambiguous (art. 15), as it provides for a finding by the council whether the question is one solely within the domestic jurisdiction. There should be a clear statement of our understanding that such matters, where no international engagement has been made with respect thereto, are not submitted for the consideration or action of the league or any of its agencies.

Third. It is urged by the advocates of the covenant that article 21 recognizes and preserves the Monroe doctrine. But the descriptive phrase employed in the article is inaccurate, and the meaning of the article is far from clear. There should be an interpretative statement which will remove all doubt that the traditional policy of the United States as to purely American questions is still maintained. I fully indorse Mr. Root's proposed statement of reservation and understanding upon this point, but in the view that an alternative form of statement may be helpful I submit one below.

Fourth. I agree with Mr. Root that it would be desirable to eliminate article 10, with its guaranty to "preserve against external aggression the territorial integrity" of all members of the league. My views as to this article were stated in the inclosed address before the Union League Club (Mar. 26, 1919), and I need not repeat them at length. I still think that article 10 is a trouble breeder and not a peacemaker.

If we are entering upon a new world order of democracies, the inevitable consequences should be recognized. Democracies can not promise war after the manner of monarchs. It is idle to attempt to commit free peoples to the making of war in an unknown contingency when such a war may be found to be clearly opposed to the dictates of justice. The limitation with respect to "external aggression" is important, but does not meet the difficulty. As the most earnest supporters of the article admit, it may be invoked against a power which has performed all its obligations under the other provisions of the covenant and be the victor "in a war 'legal' under articles 12, 13, and 15."

While the importance of article 10 is strongly emphasized by its supporters, it is said at the same time that the fulfillment of the engagement would be only according to the plan advised by the council of the league, and as this must be a plan upon which the members of the council unanimously agree we could veto any proposal calling for an intervention in what we deemed to be an unsuitable case. Again, it is freely recognized that war can only be declared by Congress.

Article 10 is objectionable because it is an illusory engagement. Whether we shall go to war to preserve the territorial integrity of another State in a situation not now disclosed or described so that the merits of the case may be judged will depend upon the action of Congress, and that action will be taken according to the conviction of our people as to our duty in the light of the demands of justice as they appear when the exigency arises. The general guaranty of article 10 can not be relied upon to produce action contrary to its judgment. We should not enter into a guaranty which would expose us to the charge of bad faith or of having defaulted in our obligation, notwithstanding that Congress in refusing to make war had acted in accordance with its conception of duty in the circumstances disclosed.

Of course a limitation of the operation of article 10 to a period of years would be preferable to the indefinite obligation proposed. But in my judgment it would be better that if article 10 is not eliminated a reservation and interpretative statement should be adopted which would adequately recognize the limitations I have mentioned. Further, it is possible that such a reservation and interpretative statement, while sufficient for our protection, would make acquiescence easier than if the elimination of the article were required. I append the form of such a statement for your consideration.

The resolution embodying the reservations and interpretations thus suggested might be in some such form as the following:

"The Senate of the United States of America advises and consents to the ratification of said treaty with the following reservations and understandings as to its interpretation and effect to be made a part of the instrument of ratification:

"First. That whenever two years' notice of withdrawal from the league of nations shall have been given, as provided in article 1 of the covenant, the power giving the notice shall cease to be a member of the league, or subject to the obligations of the covenant of the league, at the time specified in the notice, notwithstanding any claim, charge, or finding of the nonfulfillment of any international obligation or of any obligation under said covenant: Provided, however, That such withdrawal shall not release the power from any debt or liability theretofore incurred.

"Second. That questions relating to immigration, or the imposition of duties on imports, where such questions do not arise out of any international engagement, are questions of domestic policy, and these and any other questions which, according to international law, are solely within the domestic jurisdiction are not to be submitted for the consideration or action of the league of nations or of any of its agencies.

"Third. That the meaning of article 21 of the covenant of the league of nations is that the United States of America does not relinquish its traditional attitude toward purely American questions, and is not required by said covenant to submit its policies regarding questions which it deems to be purely American questions to the league of nations or any of its agencies, and that the United States of America may oppose and prevent any acquisition by any non-American power by conquest, purchase, or in any other manner of any territory, possession, or control in the Western Hemisphere.

"Fourth. That the meaning of article 10 of the covenant of the league of nations is that the members of the league are not under any obligation to act in pursuance of said article except as they may decide to act upon the advice of the council of the league. The United States of America assumes no obligation under said article to undertake any military expedition or to employ its armed forces on land or sea unless such action is authorized by the Congress of the United States of America, which has exclusive authority to declare war or to determine for the United States of America whether there is any obligation on its part under said article and the means or action by which any such obligation shall be fulfilled."

With high regard, I am,

Very sincerely, yours, CHARLES E. HUGHES.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. MOSES. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a brief editorial from the Boston Transcript, entitled "'Why some Senators' hold fast."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"'WHY SOME SENATORS' HOLD FAST.

"The blindness of partisanship to the beauty of patriotism and the deafness of partisanship to the dictates of conscience are exhibited by the following questions asked to-day by the New York Times, one of the chief petitioners for the unconditional ratification of the unpurged treaty of Versailles:

"How is it that Republican Senators rage against the treaty and league, though the Republicans of their own State beg them to change their course?

"How is it that some of them are imperiling their booms and some of them their chances of another term in the Senate?

"It is because 'some of them,' to the number of more than a militant one-third of the Senate, hold the honor of their country dearer than they hold their political lives, and will gladly lay down their political lives in defense of the honor of their country, in defense of the preservation of American independence, in defense of the policy of Washington and the doctrine of Monroe and the nationalism of Cleveland and the Americanism of Roosevelt, counting themselves fortunate that in so doing an opportunity has been offered them to emulate, in their places in the Senate, the splendid spirit that took the American doughboy over the top in France and made him spurn to count the cost or pause to consider whether he would ever come back. White House Democrats and Wall Street Republicans, who have entered into an alliance for the purpose of intimidating Senators into voting against the dictates of conscience and against the honor of their country as they envisage it, are bewildered by the failure of the alliance to accomplish its unworthy purpose and by an inability to find a reason for that failure in the encyclopedia of professional politics."

Mr. MOSES. I also present a press dispatch from Boston, Mass., containing an account of the action of the Democratic State committee of Massachusetts and resolutions adopted by that body on Saturday last, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the dispatch was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"BAY STATE DEMOCRATIC COMMITTEE SAYS BRITISH FOISTED LEAGUE ON UNITED STATES.

"BOSTON, July 26.

"The Democratic State committee adopted a resolution to-day expressing its unalterable opposition to the attempt of England and her allies to force upon the American people 'a so-called covenant of a league of nations which attempts to commit this Republic to recognize and hold forever the title of England to own and rule Ireland against the expressed will of an overwhelming majority of the Irish people.'"

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY.

Mr. LODGE. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Finance:

H. R. 2837. An act to repeal section 630 of the revenue act of 1918, approved February 24, 1919; and

H. R. 7840. An act providing for a tax on pure fruit-juice beverages.

THE OIL SITUATION.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a resolution submitted by me on yesterday, and which went over under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from yesterday, which will be read.

Senate resolution 138, submitted by Mr. POINDEXTER on the 28th instant, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission is hereby requested to investigate and report to the Senate the causes of recent advances in the market price in the United States, especially on the Pacific coast, of fuel oil, kerosene, gasoline, and other petroleum products, and in reporting the foregoing the said commission is requested to take into consideration and report the sources of oil supply for the United States, and particularly for the Pacific coast; the annual production of the same for several years last past, with especial reference to the years 1914 to 1919, inclusive; the corporate or other agencies by which the business of oil production, oil refining, oil distribution, and oil marketing, including petroleum and all its products, is and has been conducted in the past and at the present time, with especial reference to the particular period mentioned above, and to these activities on the Pacific coast, and to the Standard Oil Co. of California, the Union Oil Co., and the General Petroleum Co., and other companies engaged in this business on the Pacific coast, and to report to the Senate what, if any, combinations in restraint of trade between those engaged in this business or unfair competition on the part of any of these or other agencies engaged in said business have existed during the said period or do exist at the present time, and, if such combinations, restraint, or unfair competition have existed or do exist, what, if any, effect the same have had upon the market price of fuel oil, gasoline, and other petroleum products, especially on the Pacific coast and especially with reference to the price charged to the ultimate consumer of the same. The said commission is also requested to report to the Senate any suggestions or recommendations which may be agreed upon by the said commission relative to the removal of such combinations in restraint of trade, or unfair competition if the same exists, or other suggestions or recommendations relative to the cost, market price, production, distribution, and sale to the Government or to private consumers of fuel oil, gasoline, kerosene, or other petroleum products.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, when the Senator from Washington introduced his resolution yesterday I announced that I should lay some important information before the Senate. What I referred to was a report to the Secretary of the Interior on the international policies affecting the world's petroleum industry by Van. H. Manning, Director of the Bureau of Mines, dated May, 1919.

When in California last spring I learned, confidentially, that English interests were acquiring California oil properties, and that led me to make inquiry, and on March 8, after having telegraphed my apprehensions to the Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, I wrote to Van. H. Manning, Director of the Bureau of Mines, submitting a questionnaire. He replied on May 15, very fully, frankly, and completely, and it is this report, addressed to the Secretary of the Interior, that I submit now to the Senate. I delayed publicity, because I was told that the matter should be regarded as confidential until it had been examined by an interdepartmental committee, and since then the Secretary of State has written me, in answer to a letter of mine, that it might be released, with the exception of one confidential report which I beg leave to withhold.

The Director of the Bureau of Mines says that he should like to emphasize the fact that there is no other situation in respect to future supplies of essential raw materials for the United States and in respect to our future trade which is at the present time so important and so critical as the petroleum situation. In so far as America is concerned, the whole complexion of our petroleum industry has changed within the last two years. We are now consuming more crude oil than we produce, depending upon imports to make up the deficit. Forty per cent of our natural petroleum reserves has been taken out of the ground and used, whereas we have used up about 1 per cent of our coal. Our nationals have not gone abroad to any extent. American oil-producing companies are to be found only in Mexico, Central and South America, and Roumania. The United States produces yearly 65 to 70 per cent of the world's total production. The increase of our consumption of crude oil in 1918 over the consumption in 1911 was 190,000,000 barrels. We are eating up our substance.

In view of the extensive use of fuel oil in the industries, merchant marine and navy, of lubricating oils and gasoline, it seems certain that our consumption of crude oil will continue to increase at a rate comparable with that of the past. Our consumption in 1918 was 406,916,000 barrels or 61,920,000 more than our domestic production. The attractive oil-producing regions of the world have been closed to the entry of America. All of these areas with the exception of Mexico and parts of Central and South America lie within British and French possessions or spheres of influence. British and British Dutch nationals practically control all the world's petroleum industry that is not controlled by our own companies. Great Britain and British nationals are alive to the fact that production—production scattered all over the world—will be the dominating factor from now on and it is their plan to secure concessions or other rights covering these probable and possible oil-producing areas.

Unless Americans are encouraged to go abroad, future oil production will all be in the hands of British nationals within the next very few years. No greater or more lasting and far-reaching service can be rendered to this country at the present time than securing for American citizens their rightful participation in the development of all the world's resources of petroleum.

Mr. Manning answers categorically the several questions submitted to him which bears out his preliminary statement which I have just quoted in substance. Great Britain is the principal factor in this new scheme of world conquest.

I remember that two years ago a Senator quoted on the floor the remarks of Mr. Runciman, who was then the president of the Board of Trade in Great Britain, in which he stated that he, Runciman, found, in reviewing the resources of the British Empire, that the Germans were in possession of many of the natural resources of Great Britain. He then said that it was the duty of the nation, not only to control its own resources as against foreigners ever afterwards, but he either said or implied that it was its duty to control, so far as it was able, the production and the storage of these essential raw materials throughout the world. During the entire period of the war, hard-pressed as Great Britain was by the enemy, she never forgot for a moment the post-war period, which has now come, in which it would be necessary for her to conserve her own natural resources and to gather in the natural resources of other lands if she were not prohibited. What does this mean? England's policy is to control the carrying trade of the world, and oil is absolutely the determining factor in the competition of nations. Does the United States purpose to let her great opportunity to establish a merchant marine pass without a contest? That is the new conquest of peace, which is now going on; and very timely is it to recall these things when we are negotiating international treaties. I think there should be some reciprocity. If we give we should also receive.

It is very well for the great United States to be the fairy godmother of dependent States and small nationalities, but we do not want the big nationalities to array themselves very meekly in that category when it is a matter of receiving benefits. I think this report of Mr. Manning will awaken the Senate to the realization of the necessity, now that we are negotiating with foreign countries, giving and taking, that we should certainly protect our nationals in the exploitation of these vital resources, necessary for commerce and trade, for the Navy, for industries, for transportation. Why, I have shown you that we are consuming more oil than we produce, and that we have to import oil from other lands. Without this oil our vaunted greatness as a resourceful Nation will be undermined; and vigilant nations in other parts of the world, not unmindful of this fact, are endeavoring to assert a superiority, certainly in tactics and in strategy and in diplomacy, and unless we realize our position we are bound to suffer.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. PHELAN. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. Is it not a fact that the United States is also a great exporter of oil?

Mr. PHELAN. The United States has supplied oil during the war to foreign countries, and I think the principal exportations are, it may be, by American companies from Mexican fields. The Senator, however, does not dispute the statement of the Director of the Bureau of Mines that our consumption exceeds our production by 61,000,000 barrels annually?

Mr. THOMAS. I did not rise to dispute anything. I simply wanted to be corrected if my information was wrong, which is that we not only import but we also export large quantities of oil.

Mr. PHELAN. There is a great traffic in oil, and possibly by the exportation of oil we are injured in two particulars. That is to say, if there is a market for oil elsewhere, the companies referred to in the Senator's resolution will probably be raising the price on account of this extraordinary demand abroad, and we are injured also in the fact that our industries will languish if they are not supplied with oil, and there are at times possibly an artificial shortage of oil, due to export.

Furthermore, the American companies are denied the privilege of mining for oil in any part of the British possessions or protectorates, and the same is true, as Mr. Manning explains, of France, which leads to exports to meet foreign demand.

Great Britain has created a permanent governmental petroleum department, to grant permits in the British Empire and to assist British oil-producing companies in securing concessions in other countries. Throughout the British Empire she debars foreigners or foreign nationals from owning or operating oil-producing properties or even owning shares of stock.

I call your special attention to answer 3 in Mr. Manning's report, which I will later advert to.

What I learned in California last spring was that companies and corporations were organized, under our easy laws, which were in fact British companies, to acquire large areas in the Coalinga and other California districts. Sir Robert Balfour, who happened to be in California, and who is a member of the British firm of Balfour, Guthrie & Co., denied the alleged fact stated in the newspapers that he was there in the interest of the British acquisition of American oil fields. He had been in the oil fields when he made the denial. So it was a mere association of Sir Robert with the oil fields that led the press to publish the alleged fact that he was there in the interest of the acquisition of oil fields, oil properties, or oil stock. He wrote me a letter denying that he had any purpose in his visit to California to take up that matter and left the impression that his old firm, which had been connected with the Pacific coast in all matters of grain exportation and development for 50 years, was not seeking the acquisition of American fields for British owners. I accepted his statement, but then I wrote at the same time to Mr. Manning, and he wrote me, under date of June 28, 1919, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF MINES,
Washington, June 28, 1919.

Hon. JAMES D. PHELAN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Replying to your letter of June 24, I presume the quotation refers to the activities of the Shell Co. of California. This property was purchased from the Balfour, Guthrie & Co.'s interests in 1913 and was the first large purchase of the Shell Co. of California on the Pacific coast. Since then they have acquired a number of other properties in the Coalinga and other fields of California.

There are, of course, other British oil companies in California, one of which is the Kern River Oil Fields (Ltd.).

The connections of the Shell Co. of California is covered in a report recently submitted to you by Secretary Lane.

Yours, very truly, VAN. H. MANNING, Director.

You will see that Balfour, Guthrie & Co. were particularly active, and hence the intimation given out by the senior member of the firm that his presence in California was wholly innocent was not exactly in correspondence with the facts, and I have learned that within the last two weeks the Balfour-Guthrie firm has sold other oil properties, including the California Oil Fields, Limited, to the Royal Dutch Shell (British owned). The Union Oil Co. of California has just been sold to unidentified buyers. Is that also foreign?

So under our easy laws, I say, Great Britain is acquiring, right under our very eyes, the great productive oil fields of California, and at the same time denying our nationals the privilege of exploring, owning, and operating mines for oil in any part of the British possessions or its protectorates or owning any stock therein.

What is this Royal Dutch Shell Co. which Mr. Manning says has acquired these properties from Balfour, Guthrie & Co. and which owns so much valuable property in California, having acquired some within the last few weeks?

The Royal Dutch Shell Co. is the pioneering and holding British agency, and it is suspected that it is owned by a majority of shares by certain British nationals, and more than likely by the British Government itself, just as the British Government owns the Suez Canal.

My information is that the control of the Royal Dutch Shell Co. was before the war owned by the British Petroleum Co. This company was owned by German stockholders and their shares were bought, when offered by the British alien property custodian, during the war, by the Anglo-Persian Co., which is owned by the British Government. So the British Government owns, in fact, the Royal Dutch Shell Co. and its subsidiaries.

The Shell Co. of California, which is one of their subordinate or subsidiary organizations, had a production of 6,357,000 barrels in 1917, which is just about double its production in 1915. The Royal Dutch Shell has subsidiary companies all over the world, and the report I submit enumerates them.

This suggests to us the duty of exercising some control over oil production as a governmental function, the encouragement of our nationals in the fields of exploration at home and abroad, and if we can not secure reciprocity of treatment then retaliation by promptly debarring foreigners from acquiring oil properties in the United States. The Dutch Shell Co. has recently purchased the Pearson Mexican property, thus adding to its possessions a great oil company with a tremendous potential production in Mexico. Besides it has a great marketing organization, which extends even to the markets of this country.

The nationalistic sentiment is dominant in British control of oil areas throughout the world and particularly exemplified recently in Mesopotamia, Persia, Burma, Peru, and Ecuador.

During the war the question of oil control was never lost sight of, and during this period German-controlled companies were taken over by the British Government in several of its dependencies.

I may say that our Government has not given proper encouragement to men willing to explore for oil. It is notorious that but a small per cent ever succeed, and that the enterprise is very expensive, involving very often as much as twenty or thirty or forty thousand dollars to sink a deep well before they ascertain positively whether it will pay. So the men who have lost in the exploration for not only oil but gold, silver, and copper in the United States far outnumber those who have gained, but they are willing to take the chance. It is the spirit of adventure, the spirit of the pioneer, the man hungry for the horizon, that has developed the United States. If the Government had undertaken out of the Treasury to develop the silver and gold and petroleum and other natural resources hidden in the earth, it would not have been justified in the value of the output. The Government would have spent more money in finding these precious things than the value of the precious things themselves. Hence one naturally has a sympathy for the pioneer who takes his chance, and if he wins we should not begrudge him his success.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. PHELAN. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The Senator, of course, does not mean to express the view that the Government ought to have subsidized those who have gone upon the public domain for the purpose of developing the mineral resources, because the Senator knows that those who have been the pioneers in the mining industry have not asked for governmental aid. The only complaint they have made, and it was a just and reasonable one, was that the Government has too often interposed impediments to the development of the mineral resources of the United States. They ask to be permitted to go upon the public domain and to take the chances to which the Senator has referred, and only ask fair treatment at the hands of the Government.

Mr. PHELAN. I certainly did not intimate that I favored a subsidy, and one reason why that would be unjustifiable is that there are men always ready, in the West particularly, to explore on their own account, lured by the expectation of reward. But I say the reward rarely comes to them. That is their misfortune. To encourage them by offering a premium upon discovery has never been seriously proposed. But certainly they should not be penalized.

But the point I wish to make is that these derelicts, these wasted human beings, whom you will find in the mining camps, have given to the Government by their explorations of the hidden places of the country the great advantage of acquiring precious metals and other minerals without any cost to the Government, and they themselves have fallen by the roadside, and they may be regarded as heroes in our industrial campaigns. I do not know that they have ever even asked a pension from the Government; but the Government, in dealing with its own people, making laws for the exploration of the public domain, should bear these things in mind.

I was pained to hear the other day, indirectly, that Mr. E. L. Doheny, the California and Mexican oil developer, who has had phenomenal success, complained that he has not been fairly treated by this Government. What has been the result? He has appeared before the Senate Committee on Public Lands and told his story. He has appeared before the department and told his story. He had manifested the highest patriotism in all his public acts and statements. He found that the Government was unwilling, for some reason, to take his product, and he found that the Government was unwilling to protect his properties in Mexico, and he drifted to London, I am told, and there, with British interests, has organized, on a basis of equality of advantages, a marketing company. I know he was not disposed to do anything which would be inimical to American interests. But, after all, if a man can get no encouragement in the sale of his products, or in the protection of his property, it is quite natural for him to seek a market. Can we not well emulate England's solicitude for its nationals as a matter of vital national interest? I am informed he has organized a marketing company, which means a lessening of American influence, which means a division of American energy and pluck and enterprise, which should all be devoted to the cause of American development, prosperity, and prestige.

We have not any authority in the organization of our Government, as they have in England, to take up and promote in the national interests the enterprises of our nationals. They have too long been looked upon as pirates instead of discoverers, and as long as that attitude is held we will find ourselves, just as Mr Manning describes, alone in the world, cut off from the possibility of finding oil in any other land under the sun, even those lands for which we fought and bled, and be relegated to our own particular dominions, protected, perhaps, against outside aggression, but which do not yield sufficient oil commensurate with our own needs. We must have a broad national policy, and we must deal with the world certainly on terms of equality. We must stop giving away and deserting those national rights which will enable us, in the interest of our producers and of our national prosperity, to command better consideration of our national interests.

In answer to my question, "What is the remedy?" Mr. Manning replied as follows:

"10. Question. What should be done to protect and encourage the American operator in his effort to get a fair share of the oil of the world for this country?

"10. Answer.

"(a) The Government of the United States should adopt a continuous, zealous, and effective policy of protecting the rights, properties, and lives of American nationals and citizens operating in other countries.

"Fundamentally this policy is not altogether new. The Department of State has on more than one occasion made effective representations to other Governments relative to property rights of citizens of the United States.

"(b) The fixed intent of the Government to follow this policy (a) should be made known to our own citizens and to foreign Governments.

"This alone will do much to encourage and give assurance to American nationals to go abroad for production and to protect their rights and investments in foreign countries.

"(c) The acquisition, ownership, and operation of oil-producing properties should be placed upon some basis of reciprocity internationally. Hence—

"1. Representations should be made to those Governments which at present discriminate against or forbid the participation of American nationals within their boundaries or possessions on an equal footing with their own citizens, to remove these restrictions, and if this endeavor fails

"2. Companies organized or controlled in countries in which American companies are not permitted to acquire, own, or operate oil-producing properties should be prohibited from acquiring, owning, or operating such properties in the United States or its possessions.

"It is believed that this last policy should be adopted only after failure of all ready means for securing equal participation by American nationals in the countries in question. Such a policy affords a precedent or justification to the less advanced countries, such as Mexico, which are neither able to develop their own natural resouces or to participate in the development of ours, to discriminate against, to keep out, or to harass American nationals.

"(d) The control of American oil companies should be prevented from passing into foreign hands.

"This is of immediate importance.

"(e) It should be made possible for American tank steamers to compete on equal terms with foreign-owned tankers.

"(f) Positive stipulation should be made that, in any protectorate or mandatory sphere resulting from the pending peace negotiations, the protecting or mandatory power, its citizens and its nationals, shall not enjoy any special privileges or preferences in respect to the oil industry.

"It should be noted that Mesopotamia, South Russia, Palestine, Papua, Galicia, and other lands formerly belonging to enemy countries have great and very important petroleum-producing possibilities.

"(g) American citizens and nationals should be allowed to compete both at home and abroad on equal terms with foreign combines, in respect to combining or pooling their interests, under proper governmental supervision.

"American oil companies are greatly handicapped in competing as individuals against the Dutch-Shell combine.

"(h) Encourage and assist American interests to go abroad for oil production by increasing the scope (to include foreign countries) of the Interior Department in order that it may supply more thorough technical information relative to oil prospects and operations in all parts of the world.

"In its foreign expansion American business needs this governmental supervision, and through it the interests of the public can be best safeguarded."

I ask leave, Mr. President, to have printed in the RECORD the first 26 pages of Mr. Manning's report, and if that is granted I shall make another request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

REPORT TO THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR ON INTERNATIONAL POLICIES AFFECTING THE WORLD'S PETROLEUM INDUSTRY.

[By Van. H. Manning, Director Bureau of Mines, May, 1919.]

QUESTIONNAIRE.

"1. What foreign governments are showing a lively interest in seeking petroleum in various parts of the world ?

"2. In what parts of the world are foreign governments making explorations for oil, either directly or through their nationals?

"3. How are these governments trying to control the situation?

"4. What control of the situation do they aim to create through their laws governing corporations? What are England's and France's laws in this respect?

"5. Do they exclude foreigners from owning and operating fields in their domain or in their colonies?

"6. What about the rights, or lack of rights, for Americans who may wish to look for oil in South Africa, Australia, and Canada?

"7. How are American oil interests suffering or being put to a disadvantage by the laws, orders in council, or other regulations or practices of foreign countries?

"8. Are foreign corporations in the oil business assisted or subsidized in any way by their governments?

"9. Do foreign companies make use of any commercial or legal devices which are unfair or disadvantageous to American oil men?

"10. What should be done to protect and encourage the American operator in his effort to get a fair share of the oil of the world for this country ?

"1. Question. What foreign governments are showing a lively interest in seeking petroleum in various parts of the world?

"1. Answer. Most actively, Great Britain, the Netherlands, France, Japan, and Argentina.

"2. Question. In what parts of the world are foreign governments making exploration for oil, either directly or through their nationals?

"2. Answer. Great Britain. British Government, directly.

"In England and Scotland, where exploratory drilling is now progressing.

"In Persia, through the Anglo-Persian Oil Co. (Ltd.), in which the British Government owns 51 per cent of the voting stock. Appendix I gives an abstract of the last meeting of the board and directors of the Anglo-Persian Oil Co. This company has a concession granted by the Persian Government, giving the exclusive right to search for and deal with petroleum, asphalt, ozokerites, etc., throughout an area of some 500,000 square miles in the Persian Empire.

"In Papua, through an advance of £50,000 to the Commonwealth of Australia to assist in the testing of the Papuan oil fields. (Appendix XII.)

"Through the Royal Dutch-Shell, in which the British Government has and is acquiring large holdings, according to persistent reports. This group represents purely British interests to at least 40 per cent and its general policy is as much British as Dutch, in Dutch East Indies, South Russia, Roumania, Venezuela, Trinidad, Curacao, Egypt, Canada, United States, Mexico, and British West Indies.

"Appendix II gives the 1918 production of the Dutch-Shell.

"Plate I shows graphically the Royal Dutch-Shell group, in so far as information is available.

"Plate II shows graphically the principal controlled sources of supply and the marketing affiliations of the Royal Dutch-Shell group, in so far as they are known.

"Through British nationals in French West Africa (French territory, in which it seems unlikely that foreign companies will be allowed to operate in the future), South Africa, Algeria (French territory, in which it seems unlikely that foreign companies will be allowed to operate in the future), Australia, British West India, Canada, Cuba, Cyprus, East Indies, Ecuador, Egypt, Roumania, Trinidad, Turkey, Galicia, India, Italy, Madagascar (French territory, in which it seems unlikely that foreign companies will be allowed to operate in the future), Mexico, Morocco (French territory, in which it seems unlikely that foreign companies will be allowed to operate in the future), New Guinea, Peru, Syria, Tunis (French territory, in which it seems unlikely that foreign companies will be allowed to operate in the future), United States, Venezuela, and Russian Empire (1. Southeastern Russia; 2. Central Russia; 3. Sakhalin).

"Appendix III is a partial list of British companies engaged in oil development and production in different countries. This list does not include British oil companies that are marketers or distributors but are not producers or prospectors of crude oil, nor does it include British financial, mining, agricultural, plantation, and trading companies operating all over the globe, which have in the past and probably will in the future get into the business of oil exploration and production. Past examples: S. Pearson & Sons (Ltd.), originally engineering contractors, who acquired and developed the Mexican Eagle properties in Mexico; and Balfour & Guthrie Co. (Ltd.), grain dealers, brokers, and shippers, who acquired and developed large oil properties in California, now owned by the Shell Co., of California. The Shell Co. itself was not at first engaged in the oil business.

"It is to be noted that a number of the companies listed in Appendix III have close relations with the Anglo-Persian Oil Co., as well as with the Royal Dutch-Shell combine, through (1) interlocking directorates; (2) marketing arrangements; and (3) financial interests.

"It is further to be noted, in connection with Plate I and Plate II, that not only has the Anglo-Persian Oil Co. (Ltd.) a marketing agreement with the Dutch-Shell extending until 1922 but also the Anglo-Persian-Burmah group is jointly interested with the Dutch-Shell in the United British West Indies Petroleum Syndicate (Ltd.) and its subsidiaries.

"British nationals are now trying to get control of what promise to be very extensive and prolific oil fields in Mesopotamia.

"Southeastern Russia, with its present oil fields and future petroleum potentialities, is now under British military control.

"The Netherlands, through its nationals, in the Dutch East Indies and Curacao.

"Japan, directly as well as through its nationals, in Japan, Formosa, China, and the Island of Sakhalin.

"France, directly, is considering sinking test wells in France. A request was made in July, 1918, by the French foreign office that the American Government assist in this enterprise by furnishing technical advice and experienced drilling crews.

"Through French nationals, in Morocco, Algeria, Roumania, Greece, and Galicia.

"Argentine Republic, directly, in Argentine—Comodoro Rivadavia oil fields.

"Roumania, directly and through nationals, in Roumania.

"3. Question. How are these Governments trying to control the situation?

"3. Answer:

"GREAT BRITAIN

"(1) By creating a permanent governmental petroleum department (the petroleum executive under the war cabinet is to be made permanent) with powers and duties as follows: (a) To act as an advisor in petroleum matters to all other branches of His Majesty's Government; (b) to grant concessions for all oil development within the British Empire; and (c) to advise and assist British oil companies in securing concessions, carrying on work, and conducting trade in other countries.

"(2) By debarring foreigners and foreign nationals from owning or operating oil-producing properties in the British Isles, colonies, and protectorates.

"Prospecting for petroleum or working a petroleum property is lawful in the United Kingdom only for the board of trade or minister of munitions or person or persons authorized by them. (D. O. R. A., 2–A A A, Jan. 31, 1919.)

"(3) By direct participation in ownership and control of petroleum companies.

"(4) By refusing permission to British oil companies to sell their properties to foreign-owned or controlled companies.

"(5) By orders in council that prohibit the transfer of shares in British oil companies to other than British subjects or nationals.

"FRANCE

"Is continuing the controls exercised through the Commissariat General aux Essence et Combustibles and allied bodies that were set up during the war, and is seriously considering making a State monopoly of petroleum and petroleum products.

"The ownership of coal and presumably of oil resources is vested in the Government, and concessions for exploitation are granted on a royalty basis. The terms of individual concessions may be made such as to exclude foreign control.

"THE NETHERLANDS AND COLONIES.

"Prospecting licenses and concessions are granted only to Dutch subjects, inhabitants of the Netherlands or Netherlands East Indies, and to companies incorporated under the Dutch laws either in the Netherlands or in the Netherlands East Indies, having in their board of directors a majority of Dutch subjects. Persons or companies not established in the Netherlands East Indies must be represented in the islands by a trustee who must comply with the stipulations of the mining laws.

"JAPANESE AND ARGENTINE GOVERNMENTS

"Have withdrawn oil fields within their domain from private ownership or development.

"ROUMANIA

"Is considering the creation of a State monopoly of petroleum, both production and distribution, out of the monopoly which Germany was establishing there during the time of the German occupation.

"In a decree of November 27, 1918, the Roumanian Government expropriated certain rural property owned by foreigners. This is regarded as an agrarian measure, and it is believed it will not affect oil properties.

"ITALY

"Has passed a law, which has not yet been enforced, authorizing a State monopoly of sale and distribution of certain petroleum products. The Government control established during hostilities still continues.

"MEXICO

"Has been studying the question of a State monopoly of production and distribution. Article 27 of the Mexican Constitution of 1917 states that 'in the nation is vested direct ownership of * * * petroleum and all hydrocarbons—solid, liquid, or gaseous'; also that 'only Mexicans by birth or naturalization and Mexican companies have the right to acquire ownership in lands, waters, or their appurtenances, or to obtain concessions to develop mines, waters, or mineral fuels in the Republic of Mexico. The nation may grant the same right to foreigners, provided they agree before the department of foreign affairs to be considered Mexicans in respect to the same, under penalty, in cases of breach, of forfeiture to the nation of property acquired.'

"On February 19, July 31, and August 12, 1918, decrees were issued making it necessary, under penalties of confiscation, for all companies owning or leasing oil lands in Mexico to file new 'manifests' of properties already duly registered, which 'manifests' apparently constitute the first step in the nationalization of petroleum in Mexico. In addition to the new registry, taxes referred to as 'rentals' and as 'royalties' were imposed; these terms in themselves concede the national ownership mentioned in article 27 of the constitution. Continued operation of oil lands is conditioned upon 'contracts' with the Government, these contracts to be fixed by regulations yet to be issued. The foreign companies operating in Mexico have made a vigorous protest against the legislation, and the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, and France have also protested. The decrees have not as yet been enforced, and so far as known no final decision has been reached. (See Appendices XX and XX–A.)

"FOR OTHER COUNTRIES

"See Appendix XVII, which gives a summary of the best information at present available concerning the laws and policies of various other countries relative to the acquiring and operating of oil properties by foreigners and foreign interests.

"4. Question. What control of the situation do they aim to create through their laws governing corporations? What are England's and France's laws in this respect?

"4. Answer. This has been answered in part under answer 3, where is indicated the development of nationalistic and national policies leading to the direct or indirect governmental control of oil production and distribution in the respective countries. Appendices IX, X, XI, XIII, and XVI are attached to give further evidence respecting the policies of Great Britain and of British sentiment.

"Such control has a number of objects:

"(1) To insure an unhampered and certain supply of petroleum products in war as well as in peace;

"(2) To benefit the public treasury;

"(3) To secure for their own citizens all profits accruing from the petroleum business within the borders or zones of influence of these countries; and

"(4) To dominate indirectly shipping and commerce by controlling oil-bunkering stations and sources of supply of petroleum. Petroleum products may be bartered for other raw materials or commodities.

"The British petroleum press is advocating the creation of a 'National Petroleum Bank,' patterned somewhat after the Deutsche Bank, which will specialize in British petroleum securities and promotions. (See Oil News, London, Feb. 1, 8, 15, 22; Mar. 1, 8, 15, 22, 29.)

"Sir Albert Stanley, president of His Majesty's Board of Trade, is quoted in the London Times as stating, on December 10, 1917, that His Majesty's Government has under consideration the question of forming an all British oil company, free from all foreign interest and foreign control, for dealing with the development of oil fields outside the British Isles, and particularly in British colonies, dependencies, and allied countries.

"See also answer 6.

"France, so far as is known, has not as yet adopted special laws or orders in council on this subject. It is reported, however, that before the Lord Cowdray (British) interests could secure satisfactory assurances and permission from the French Government to proceed with oil explorations in a concession in Algeria, for which they have been negotiating for several years, they have been obliged to form a French company in which the control and the majority of stock is owned by French citizens. It would, therefore, seem that in granting or renewing concessions for oil properties the French Government is following a policy similar to the British.

"It is to be noted that American or other foreign citizens or nationals can not now compete with British or French nationals, as the case may be, in British or French 'spheres of influence' in the less advanced parts of the world. This statement applies in particular to companies developing national resources and, to a lesser degree, to companies engaging in any trade. There are many reasons that contribute directly and indirectly to this state of affairs. The fundamental ones are the close cooperation between British and between French nationals of all categories, and the close liaison between these nationals and their Governments.

"Mr. H. W. A. Deterding, managing director of the Dutch-Shell combine, stated shortly before the European war started that within 10 years he would control the oil bunkering of the world. The war may have delayed his plans, but the recent purchase of the Mexican Eagle by the Dutch-Shell group would indicate that they have not been abandoned. This, in connection with the activities of the Anglo-Persian-Burmah group in both hemispheres, indicates that the fruition of a purpose to control the world's oil bunkering, and thereby control shipping and trade, can easily be effected through (a) controlling sufficient present and future oil production scattered all over the globe, (b) a centrally controlled and world-wide distributing and marketing organization interlocking and coordinating with production and refining, and (c) control of sufficient tanker tonnages.

"While at the present time, United States interests occupy the leading place in the business of supplying oil to ships, the above summary indicates the danger of losing this position.

"5. Question. Do they exclude foreigners from owning and operating fields in their domain or in their colonies?

"5. Answer. Yes. For details, see answers 3 and 4.

"6. Question. What about the rights, or lack of rights, for Americans who may wish to look for oil in South Africa, Australia, and Canada?

"CANADA.

"6. Answer. Article 40 of the Canadian Regulations for the disposal of petroleum and natural gas rights, the property of the Crown, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, the Northwest Territories, etc., provides:

"Any company acquiring by assignment or otherwise a lease under the provisions of these regulations shall at all times be and remain a British company, registered in Great Britain or Canada, and having its principal place of business within his Majesty's dominions, and the chairman of the said company and a majority of the directors shall at all times be British subjects, and the company shall not at any time be or become directly or indirectly controlled by foreigners or by a foreign corporation.

"If the company which may acquire a location under these regulations shall at any time cease to be a British company or shall become a corporation under foreign control, or shall assign any of the rights acquired under the lease without the consent in writing of the minister being first had and obtained, the lease shall be subject to immediate cancellation in the discretion of the minister." (Canadian order in council, Jan. 19, 1914.)

"Since these regulations are in agreement with what appears to be the imperial policy, it is probable that similar regulations will be found to exist in other British possessions, were complete and up-to-date information available.

"It has been reported that the Dutch-Shell has made an application to the Canadian Government for a 250-mile oil and gas concession in western Canada and that the application has been supported by the British Government.

"AUSTRALIA.

"Queensland.

"Petroleum on or below the surface of all land in Queensland, whether alienated in fee simple or not so alienated from the Crown, and if so alienated whensoever alienated is and always has been the property of the Crown.

"The Northern Territory.

"Licenses are required for the exploitation of oil lands. Only companies incorporated in the United Kingdom or a British possession may receive such licenses. The governor general has the right of preemption of all oil produced, and in case of war may take control of the old properties. (Ordinance No. 1 of 1913.)

"South Nigeria (British).

"A lease must be obtained from the governor in order to carry on mining operations for mineral oil. The Government has the right of preemption over oil at market price. (Ordinance No. 12, 1907.)

"Transvaal (British).

"All minerals belong to the Government and not to the owners of the surface of the land.

"Trinidad and Tobago (British).

"The Government has the right of preemption of crude oil and its products, with due compensation, and has power to force the sale of oil properties to the Government. A concession covering 50 square miles was granted with the stipulation that the company is to remain British controlled, and that the Admiralty is to be given preferential rights of purchase of the oil produced. In 1917 all lands in the colony south of latitude N. 10° 26′ 36″ were declared oil-bearing lands, and no person can acquire title to such lands without the written consent of the governor of the colony.

"British Honduras.

"All mines of mineral oil are reserved to the Crown." (Ordinance No. 26, 1907.)

"British Guiana.

"All companies incorporated outside of the United Kingdom or British possessions can hold only such lands as might be authorized by the governor in council from time to time." (Ordinance No. 15, 1917, sec. 19.)

"India.

"American oil companies are expressly excluded from doing business in Burmah, and a blanket concession of 99 years was given the Burmah Oil Co. (Ltd.) in 1889, protecting this company from all foreign competition. (See Appendices XVIII and XVIII–A.)

"It is reported that recent legislation has limited the ownership of oil properties in India to British-born subjects. None but British oil companies are operating in India.

"7. Question. How are American oil interests suffering or being put to a disadvantage by the laws, orders in council, or other regulations or practices of foreign countries?

"7. Answer. Participation in producing and distributing oil is denied to American companies and citizens in these countries and their possessions, or Americans are otherwise discriminated against, as set forth in answers 3, 4, and 6. At the same time nationals and citizens of these countries are competing on equal terms with Americans in our own country. The United States is practically the only country producing oil in quantity wherein the citizens and foreigners participate and compete on equal terms.

"The contemplated policies of France and of Italy to nationalize the purchase of petroleum products for consumption within their borders will place the individual American producing and refining companies in a position of competing against each other to supply the business—in which they have hitherto largely participated—of the French and Italian Governments. American nationals have large investments in distributing plants, equipment, and organizations, which will be greatly depreciated, if not lost, by such actions on the part of the French and Italian Governments.

"American oil companies are now competing individually in whatever part of the world to which they may go for supplies of crude petroleum or markets for refined products, particularly products for which there is no ready market in this country, with the world-wide British-Dutch and British combines—the Royal Dutch-Shell and the Anglo-Persian-Burmah-United British West Indies Petroleum Syndicate group.

"There is a decided national and nationalistic policy throughout the British Empire to favor and encourage British oil nationals. When the pool board was formed as a war necessity in Great Britain for the domestic distribution of petroleum products a large American national which has had more of the oil business than any other company in the British Isles, was at first left out. This company was admitted to the pool board and to its fair share of the business it had previously held because of the necessity of securing petroleum supplies from the United States.

"The basic rates of the German railroads on oil moved into the country from such ports as Bremen and Hamburg—where American oils were imported—were about twice as high as those on Russian and Galician oil moved by rail from the countries of origin.

"If bunkering oil can be universally secured through only one oil combine, American shipping interests will be forced into fuel oil and, probably, lubricating oil contracts with this combine, to the disadvantage of American dealers as well as to their own disadvantage.

"8. Question. Are foreign corporations in the oil business assisted or subsidized in any way by their Governments?

"8. Answer. British oil companies are assisted by the protection and the encouraging restrictions and policies discussed in answers 3, 4, and 6.

"It would seem that British oil companies are further assisted by the action of the British Government in selling tank steamer tonnage, built by that Government during the war, only to companies that are both British owned and British controlled, while the sale of such tonnage is refused to British incorporated companies whose stock is preponderantly owned by American citizens. In this way the British-controlled companies are enabled to replace losses of tonnage suffered during the war while the other companies are unable to do so.

"Among the 'permanent measures' recommended by the economic conference of the allied Governments at Paris, June 17, 1916, to be carried out by them not only during but after the war, were measures directed to assuring their 'independence' as regards 'sources of supply'; and as an example there was mentioned 'enterprises subsidized and directed or controlled by the Governments themselves.'

"9. Question. Do foreign companies make use of any commercial or legal devices which are unfair or disadvantageous to American oilmen?

"9. Answer. The Royal Dutch-Shell group is constantly extending its operations and unified control by purchasing competing companies outright or by taking them into the combine. Such purchases, combinations, and interlocking control are prohibited by the antitrust laws of the United States. The Dutch-Shell has recently purchased the Mexican Eagle Oil Co. (Ltd.) (Lord Cowdray's Mexican properties), thus adding to its holdings another great oil company possessing a large present and a tremendous potential production in Mexico, as well as pipe lines, storage, wharves, and sea loading facilities and refineries. Through the purchase of the Mexican Eagle, the Dutch-Shell group secures control of its subsidiaries—the Eagle Oil & Transport Co. (Ltd.), which owns and operates a large fleet of tank steamers, and the Anglo-Mexican Petroleum Co. (Ltd.), a marketing organization that has extensive markets in Mexico, Central and South America, and the British Isles, and markets some oil in this country.

"The Anglo-Persian Oil Co. (Ltd.), in addition to its connection with the Burmah Oil Co. (Ltd.) (being practically owned by the latter company and the British Government), has acquired and now entirely controls the British Tanker Co. (Ltd.), the Petroleum Steamship Co. (Ltd.), the Homelight Oil Co. (Ltd.), and the British Petroleum Co. (Ltd.). The three last-named companies were formerly German controlled and were taken over by the British Government shortly after the war started. The last two companies are marketing organizations that were formerly competitors. The Burmah Oil Co. (Ltd.), enjoys a monopoly granted by the Crown in Burmah, and the Anglo-Persian Oil Co. (Ltd.), has a concession of unprecedented magnitude granted by the Persian Government.

"The development of a strong nationalistic sentiment among British oil companies is illustrated by the resolution recently adopted by the Lobitos Oilfields (Ltd.), which produces in Peru and has recently acquired oil lands in Ecuador, to prevent the transfer of more than 20 per cent of the capital to foreigners. Appendix XIX.

"10. Question. What should be done to protect and encourage the American operator in his effort to get a fair share of the oil of the world for this country?

"10. Answer. (a) The Government of the United States should adopt a continuous, zealous, and effective policy of protecting the rights, properties, and lives of American nationals and citizens operating in other countries.

"Fundamentally this policy is not altogether new. The Department of State has on more than one occasion made effective representations to other Governments relative to property rights of citizens of the United States. For example, Mr. Bayard, Secretary of State, wrote the minister of Peru on January 19, 1888, as follows:

"The Government of the United States will not permit, without interposition on its part, the spoliation by Peru of the property of American citizens invested in that country by the invitation of its own authorities. * * * And even were there such a tribunal, its decrees validating in defiance of international laws such confiscations could not bind the citizens of foreign States thereby despoiled.

"This is not, it will be understood, the assertion of any new principle in international law. The seizure or spoliation of property at the mere will of the sovereign and without due legal process has always been regarded as in itself a denial of justice and as affording the basis for international interposition.

"(b) The fixed intent of the Government to follow this policy (a) should be made known to our own citizens and to foreign Governments.

"This alone will do much to encourage and give assurance to American nationals to go abroad for production, and to protect their rights and investments in foreign countries.

"(c) The acquisition, ownership, and operation of oil-producing properties should be placed upon some basis of reciprocity internationally, hence—

"1. Representations should be made to those Governments which at present discriminate against or forbid the participation of American nationals within their boundaries or possessions on an equal footing with their own citizens to remove these restrictions, and if this endeavor fails—

"2. Companies organized or controlled in countries in which American companies are not permitted to acquire, own, or operate oil-producing properties should be prohibited from acquiring, owning, or operating such properties in the United States or its possessions.

"It is believed that this last policy should be adopted only after failure of all ready means for securing equal participation by American nationals in the countries in question. Such a policy affords a precedent or justification to the less advanced countries, such as Mexico, which are neither able to develop their own natural resources or to participate in the development of ours, to discriminate against, to keep out, or to harass American nationals.

"(d) The control of American oil companies should be prevented from passing into foreign hands.

"This is of immediate importance.

"(e) It should be made possible for American tank steamers to compete on equal terms with foreign-owned tankers.

"(f) Positive stipulation should be made that, in any protectorate or mandatory sphere resulting from the pending peace negotiations, the protecting or mandatory power, its citizens and its nationals, shall not enjoy any special privileges or preferences in respect to the oil industry.

"It should be noted that Mesopotamia, south Russia, Palestine, Papua, Galicia, and other lands formerly belonging to enemy countries have great and very important petroleum-producing possibilities.

"(g) American citizens and nationals should be allowed to compete both at home and abroad on equal terms with foreign combines in respect to combining or pooling their interests under proper governmental supervision.

"American oil companies are greatly handicapped in competing as individuals against the Dutch-Shell combine.

"(h) Encourage and assist American interests to go abroad for oil production by increasing the scope (to include foreign countries) of the Interior Department in order that it may supply more thorough technical information relative to oil prospects and operations in all parts of the world.

"This department should also be given more power and latitude in carrying out its general constructive economic policy leading to the sound development of the whole petroleum industry; to discouraging unrestricted and wasteful competition in producing territories within the United States; to developing better productive methods so that the largest possible amount of the oil that is in the ground can eventually be brought to the surface; and to the overcoming of waste and inefficiency in the production, transportation, refining, and utilization of petroleum.

"(1) Necessary legislation and machinery should be provided to make possible at once the creation of a world-wide exploration, development, producing, and marketing petroleum company, financed with American capital, guided by American engineering, and supervised in its international relations by the United States Government.

"In its foreign expansion American business needs this governmental supervision, and through it the interests of the public can be best safeguarded."

Mr. PHELAN. I submit a resolution, to be referred to the Committee on Printing, providing that the entire report of Mr. Manning, together with the maps or plans, be printed as a public document.

Mr. POINDEXTER. May I inquire of the Senator what it is that he asks be referred to the Committee on Printing?

Mr. PHELAN. The entire report, with the schedules and appendices, made by Mr. Manning, of which I have given a digest.

The resolution (S. Res. 143) was referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

Resolved, That the report to the Secretary of the Interior on International Policies Affecting the World's Petroleum Industry, with maps, by Van H. Manning, Director Bureau of Mines, May, 1919, be printed as a public document.

Mr. PHELAN. I also ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter which I have just received, which is a copy of a letter to Dr. Garfield on the same subject, and signed by M. L. Requa, General Director Oil Division, United States Fuel Administration; Van. H. Manning, Director Bureau of Mines; and George Otis Smith, Director United States Geological Survey.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

FEBRUARY 28, 1919.

Dr. H. A. GARFIELD,
United States Fuel Administrator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Following a conference in which the petroleum problem was considered in detail, we have agreed upon the following statement of fact as representing an accurate picture of the petroleum problem as we see it:

1. The rapidly growing use of internal-combustion engines, as well as of fuel oil on ships, both naval and merchant, inevitably means a more rapid increase in the consumption of petroleum in the future than in the past.

2. The enormous increase in world consumption in recent years has been coincident with the increasing difficulty of production in the United States, due to much greater depth necessary to drill in order to reach the oil-bearing horizon.

3. Careful calculations based upon data of the United States Geological Survey indicate the probability that 40 per cent of the available oil of the United States has already been exhausted, whereas less than 1 per cent of the coal has been mined.

4. The United States produces, consumes, and exports nearly 70 per cent of the annual world production of petroleum, and has therefore industrially and commercially more at stake than any other nation.

5. The success of the United States Shipping Board program is dependent in largest part upon the use of fuel oil.

6. In view of the enormous expansion in consumption in the recent past and immediate future, it is absolutely necessary, in order that the situation may be thoroughly safeguarded, that American interests be encouraged by sympathetic Government cooperation in acquiring additional foreign sources of supply and by protection of properties already acquired.

7. American oil companies are seriously handicapped in their ability to compete throughout the world with the Shell-Royal Dutch combine, and if the combination now under discussion in England becomes an accomplished fact, American interests will be still further handicapped.

8. The review of domestic conditions as set forth in the pamphlet entitled "Petroleum Resources of the United States," written by M. L. Requa, in 1916, has been proved to be a conservative statement of conditions. The arguments made at that time are even more acutely applicable at present.

9. The memorandum entitled "The World's Problem of Petroleum," prepared by Mr. Requa in September, 1918, is, we believe, a conservative presentation of the international situation, and the plan suggested therein is the only practical solution.

10. We are not unmindful of the oil-shale resources of the United States. The cost, however, of producing oil from this source is so much greater than the cost of producing petroleum from oil wells that it can not become a commercial proposition until prices are much above those now prevailing.

11. We can not too strongly urge some immediate Government action that will guarantee the continuance in American ownership of American oil companies, and by proper legislation make foreign control of these companies impossible.

12. We urge that Government cooperation with existing companies be agreed upon, which will guarantee the requirements of the Navy and the Shipping Board at satisfactory prices wherever delivery is made throughout the world.

13. American geologists, petroleum engineers, and drillers have led the way in developing the majority of the oil fields of the world, but these men have in large degree been in the employment of foreign capital. American capital should be encouraged to use this technical skill now forced to seek employment under foreign flags and to serve foreign interests.

14. The passage of the oil-leasing bill has been taken into consideration, and we desire to point out that all estimates made have included all withdrawn lands. Failure to drill these lands will render the situation more acute than above outlined.

We are impressed with the seriousness of the efforts being made by the British and Dutch interests to dominate the petroleum supply of the world. The United States now commands the premier position by reason of its domestic production, which even now exceeds one-third billion barrels per year, with less than 7,000,000,000 barrels estimated reserves (20 years life). This position of our country can and should be safeguarded and rendered secure by the Government giving moral support to every proper effort of American capital to make its circle of activity in oil production coextensive with the new expansion of American shipping. This means a world-wide exploration, development, and producing petroleum company, financed with American capital, guided by American engineering, and supervised in its international relations by the United States Government. In its foreign expansion American business needs this governmental partnership, and through it the interests of the public can best be safeguarded.

M. L. REQUA,
General Director Oil Division,
United States Fuel Administration.
VAN. H. MANNING,
Director Bureau of Mines.
GEORGE OTIS SMITH,
Director United States Geological Survey.

TREATY WITH FRANCE.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask that the message of the President of the United States, which, I understand, has been received, transmitting to the Senate the treaty between France and the United States, be laid before the Senate as in open executive session, and that the injunction of secrecy be removed from the treaty.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

Mr. PHELAN. It is not the intention of the Senator now to consider and act upon the message, but simply to have it read?

Mr. LODGE. I want to have the message read and then to have it take the usual course required by the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary (George A. Sanderson) read the message from the President, as follows:

GENTLEMEN OF THE SENATE:

I take pleasure in laying before you a treaty with the Republic of France the object of which is to secure that Republic of the immediate aid of the United States of America in case of any unprovoked movement of aggression against her on the part of Germany. I earnestly hope that this treaty will meet with your cordial approval and will receive an early ratification at your hands, along with the treaty of peace with Germany. Now that you have had an opportunity to examine the great document I presented to you two weeks ago, it seems opportune to lay before you this treaty which is meant to be in effect a part of it.

It was signed on the same day with the treaty of peace and is intended as a temporary supplement to it. It is believed that the treaty of peace with Germany itself provides adequate protection to France against aggression from her recent enemy on the east; but the years immediately ahead of us contain many incalculable possibilities. The Covenant of the League of Nations provides for military action for the protection of its members only upon advice of the Council of the League—advice given, it is to be presumed, only upon deliberation and acted upon by each of the governments of the member States only if its own judgment justifies such action. The object of the special treaty with France which I now submit to you is to provide for immediate military assistance to France by the United States in case of any unprovoked movement of aggression against her by Germany without waiting for the advice of the Council of the League of Nations that such action be taken. It is to be an arrangement, not independent of the League of Nations, but under it.

It is therefore expressly provided that this treaty shall be made the subject of consideration at the same time with the treaty of peace with Germany; that this special arrangement shall receive the approval of the council of the league; and that this special provision for the safety of France shall remain in force only until, upon the application of one of the parties to it, the council of the league, acting, if necessary, by a majority vote, shall agree that the provisions of the covenant of the league afford her sufficient protection.

I was moved to sign this treaty by considerations which will, I hope, seem as persuasive and as irresistible to you as they seemed to me. We are bound to France by ties of friendship which we have always regarded, and shall always regard, as peculiarly sacred. She assisted us to win our freedom as a nation. It is seriously to be doubted whether we could have won it without her gallant and timely aid. We have recently had the privilege of assisting in driving enemies, who were also enemies of the world, from her soil; but that does not pay our debt to her. Nothing can pay such a debt. She now desires that we should promise to lend our great force to keep her safe against the power she has had most reason to fear. Another great nation volunteers the same promise. It is one of the fine reversals of history that that other nation should be the very power from whom France fought to set us free. A new day has dawned. Old antagonisms are forgotten. The common cause of freedom and enlightenment has created new comradeships and a new perception of what it is wise and necessary for great nations to do to free the world of intolerable fear. Two governments who wish to be members of the league of nations ask leave of the council of the league to be permitted to go to the assistance of a friend whose situation has been found to be one of peculiar peril, without awaiting the advice of the league to act.

It is by taking such pledges as this that we prove ourselves faithful to the utmost to the high obligations of gratitude and tested friendship. Such an act as this seems to me one of the proofs that we are a people that sees the true heart of duty and prefers honor to its own separate course of peace.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
29 July, 1919.

ASSISTANCE TO FRANCE IN THE EVENT OF UNPROVOKED AGGRESSION BY GERMANY.

AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND FRANCE, SIGNED AT VERSAILLES JUNE 28, 1919.

Whereas the United States of America and the French Republic are equally animated by the desire to maintain the peace of the world so happily restored by the treaty of peace signed at Versailles the 28th day of June, 1919, putting an end to the war begun by the aggression of the German Empire and ended by the defeat of that power; and

Whereas the United States of America and the French Republic are fully persuaded that an unprovoked movement of aggression by Germany against France would not only violate both the letter and the spirit of the treaty of Versailles, to which the United States of America and the French Republic are parties, thus exposing France anew to the intolerable burdens of an unprovoked war, but that such an aggression on the part of Germany would be and is so regarded by the treaty of Versailles as a hostile act against all the powers signatory to that treaty and as calculated to disturb the peace of the world by involving, inevitably and directly, the States of Europe, and indirectly, as experience has amply and unfortunately demonstrated, the world at large; and

Whereas the United States of America and the French Republic fear that the stipulations relating to the left bank of the Rhine contained in the treaty of Versailles may not at first provide adequate security and protection to France, on the one hand, and the United States of America as one of the signatories of the treaty of Versailles, on the other:

Therefore the United States of America and the French Republic having decided to conclude a treaty to effect these necessary purposes, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, and Robert Lansing, Secretary of State of the United States, specially authorized thereto by the President of the United States, and Georges Clemenceau, president of the council, minister of war, and Stephen Pichon, minister of foreign affairs, specially authorized thereto by Raymond Poincare, President of the French Republic, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

In case the following stipulations relating to the left bank of the Rhine contained in the treaty of peace with Germany signed at Versailles the 28th day of June, 1919, by the United States of America, the French Republic, and the British Empire, among other powers—

"ART. 42. Germany is forbidden to maintain or construct any fortifications either on the left bank of the Rhine or on the right bank to the west of a line drawn 50 kilometers to the east of the Rhine.

"ART. 43. In the area defined above the maintenance and assembly of armed forces, either permanently or temporarily, and military maneuvers of any kind, as well as the upkeep of all permanent works for mobilization, are in the same way forbidden.

"ART. 44. In case Germany violates in any manner whatever the provisions of articles 42 and 43 she shall be regarded as committing a hostile act against the powers signatory of the present treaty and as calculated to disturb the peace of the world."

may not at first provide adequate security and protection to France, the United States of America shall be bound to come immediately to her assistance in the event of any unprovoked movement of aggression against her being made by Germany.

ARTICLE II.

The present treaty, in similar terms with the treaty of even date for the same purpose concluded between Great Britain and the French Republic, a copy of which treaty is annexed hereto, will only come into force when the latter is ratified.

ARTICLE III.

The present treaty must be submitted to the council of the league of nations and must be recognized by the council, acting if need be by a majority, as an engagement which is consistent with the covenant of the league. It will continue in force until on the application of one of the parties to it the council, acting if need be by a majority, agrees that the league itself affords sufficient protection.

ARTICLE IV.

The present treaty will be submitted to the Senate of the United States at the same time as the treaty of Versailles is submitted to the Senate for its advice and consent to ratification. It will be submitted before ratification to the French Chambers of Deputies for approval. The ratification thereof will be exchanged on the deposit of ratifications of the treaty of Versailles at Paris or as soon thereafter as shall be possible.

In faith whereof the respective plenipotentiaries, to wit, on the part of the United States of America, Woodrow Wilson, President, and Robert Lansing, Secretary of State, of the United States; and on the part of the French Republic, Georges Clemenceau, President of the Council of Ministers, Minister of War, and Stephen Pichon, Minister of Foreign Affairs, have signed the above articles both in the English and French languages, and they have hereunto affixed their seals.

Done in duplicate at the city of Versailles on the 28th day of June, in the year of our Lord 1919 and the one hundred and forty-third of the Independence of the United States of America.

ASSISTANCE TO FRANCE IN THE EVENT OF UNPROVOKED AGGRESSION BY GERMANY.

Whereas there is a danger that the stipulations relating to the left bank of the Rhine contained in the treaty of peace, signed this day at Versailles, may not at first provide adequate security and protection to the French Republic; and

Whereas His Britannic Majesty is willing, subject to the consent of his Parliament and provided that a similar obligation is entered into by the United States of America, to undertake to support the French Government in the case of an unprovoked movement of aggression being made against France by Germany; and

Whereas His Britannic Majesty and the President of the French Republic have determined to conclude a treaty to that effect and have named as their plenipotentiaries for the purpose; that is to say:

His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Dominions beyond the seas, Emperor of India: The Right Hon. David Lloyd-George, M. P., first lord of his treasury and prime minister; the Right Hon. Arthur James Balfour, O. M., M. P., his secretary of state for foreign affairs.

The President of the French Republic, Mr. Georges Clemenceau, president of the council, minister of war; Mr. Stephen Pichon, minister of foreign affairs; who having communicated their full powers found in good and due form have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE I

In case the following stipulations relating to the left bank of the Rhine contained in the treaty of peace with Germany signed at Versailles the 28th day of June, 1919, by the British Empire, the French Republic, and the United States of America, among other powers—

"ART. 42. Germany is forbidden to maintain or construct any fortifications either on the left bank of the Rhine or on the right bank to the west of a line drawn 50 kilometers to the east of the Rhine.

"ART. 43. In the area defined above the maintenance and assembly of armed forces, either permanently or temporarily, and military maneuvers of any kind, as well as the upkeep of all permanent works for mobilization, are in the same way forbidden.

"ART. 44. In case Germany violates in any manner whatever the provisions of articles 42 and 43 she shall be regarded as committing a hostile act against the powers signatory of the present treaty and as calculated to disturb the peace of the world."

may not at first provide adequate security and protection to France, Great Britain agrees to come immediately to her assistance in the event of any unprovoked movement of aggression against her being made by Germany.

ARTICLE II.

The present treaty, in similar terms with the treaty of even date for the same purpose concluded between the French Republic and the United States of America, a copy of which treaty is annexed hereto, will only come into force when the latter is ratified.

ARTICLE III.

The present treaty must be submitted to the council of the league of nations and must be recognized by the council, acting if need be by a majority, as an engagement which is consistent with the covenant of the league; it will continue in force until, on the application of one of the parties to it, the council, acting if need be by a majority, agrees that the league itself affords sufficient protection.

ARTICLE IV.

The present treaty shall, before ratification by His Majesty, be submitted to Parliament for approval.

It shall, before ratification by the President of the French Republic, be submitted to the French Chambers for approval.

ARTICLE V.

The present treaty shall impose no obligation upon any of the Dominions of the British Empire unless and until it is approved by the Parliament of the Dominion concerned.

The present treaty shall be ratified and shall, subject to Articles II and IV, come into force at the same time as the treaty of peace with Germany of even date comes into force for the British Empire and the French Republic.

In faith whereof the above-named plenipotentiaries have signed the present treaty, drawn up in the English and French languages.

Done in duplicate at Versailles on the 28th day of June, 1919.

D. LLOYD-GEORGE.
ARTHUR JAMES BALFOUR.
CLEMENCEAU.
S. PICHON.

After the reading of the President's message,

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the message and treaty be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and printed for the use of the Senate. I make this request as in open executive session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LODGE. I ask also that the treaty, which has not been read, be printed in the RECORD after the message of the President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That will be done. The Senate returns to legislative session, and the resolution of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] is before the Senate.

THE OIL SITUATION.

The Senate resumed the consideration of Senate resolution 138, submitted by Mr. POINDEXTER on the 28th instant.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Washington to the last paragraph of the resolution, and in doing so I desire at this time to move to strike out, beginning with the word "the," in line 13, page 2, down to and including the word "products," in line 21; in other words, the following part of the resolution:

The said commission is also requested to report to the Senate any suggestions or recommendations which may be agreed upon by the said commission relative to the removal of such combinations in restraint of trade, or unfair competition if the same exists, or other suggestions or recommendations relative to the cost, market price, production, distribution, and sale to the Government or to private consumers of fuel oil, gasoline, kerosene, or other petroleum products.

I do not want to take the time of the Senate to discuss it, unless the Senate desires to hear it discussed, but I would ask the Senator from Washington if he has any objection to striking out that portion of the resolution?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no objection to striking out those words.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, it will be recalled that after many years of labor a bill was passed by the last Congress looking to the further development of the oil fields of this country as well as the lands containing other nonmetallic minerals. A bill radically different, but covering the same subject, was passed by the House of Representatives, resulting in a deadlock between the two bodies, which continued for many months. The differences between the two Houses were eventually compromised, and a conference report was submitted embodying apparently the best possible thought of the two branches of Congress upon this rather difficult subject. It was impossible to get consideration for that conference report at the last session; and, in the hope that the work that was done would not be utterly lost, a number of Senators introduced at the beginning of this session bills in substance the same as that conference report, which bills were referred to the Public Lands Committee in the hope that they would take up the subject where it was left at the conclusion of the last session and speedily bring before this body for consideration a bill dealing with the subject.

I inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands what progress is being made with the subject?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from Montana, I wish to state that there were some half dozen leasing bills introduced in this body, as has been suggested by the Senator. As chairman of the committee, I directed each one of those bills to be sent to the Secretary of the Interior, and asked him for a report upon them. I wish to say to the Senator that up to the present time there has been no answer to the request. The committee, however, decided at its last meeting that, notwithstanding a report from the Secretary of the Interior had not been received, to-morrow the committee would begin the consideration of the leasing bills before it.

I can say to the Senate that if newspaper reports are true—and, by the way, I do not say that they are—the Attorney General takes the position that he does not wish to join in any report of the Secretary of the Interior until after he has had sufficient time to consult the President of the United States. It was reported to me the other day, Mr. President, that the Secretary of the Navy has stated that he is going to oppose all of the leasing bills now before the Public Lands Committee of the Senate. Whether or not that is true I can not say, but I want to say to the Senator from Montana and to the Senate itself that the Public Lands Committee of the Senate will to-morrow begin the consideration of the leasing bills; and if I express the sentiment of the committee, as I am positive I do, the committee is going to continue that consideration and is going to report a bill to the Senate at the earliest date possible.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, my recollection is that something over two months ago the session began and the bills were then promptly introduced.

Mr. SMOOT. Perhaps the Senator's remarks are justified, but I did not want to report to the Senate a bill and state to the Senate that no report had been received by the departments of our Government interested in the legislation. However, I think the committee has waited long enough; I know that the members of the committee think so; and I can promise the Senator from Montana and the Senate that a report will be made on this proposed legislation just as quickly as the committee can agree upon its terms.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I am very highly gratified at the promise made to the Senate by the Senator from Utah. I merely desire to add that I can not believe that the Secretary of the Navy stands alone among the public men of the United States adhering to the position that he will oppose any bills whatever looking to the disposition of the oil lands of this country or their development or utilization.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want the Senator to understand that I made any such suggestion.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understand the Senator did not make any such statement upon authority, but he simply told us what he had heard. However, the conviction in this body at least is unanimous that the situation calls, and cryingly calls, for some legislation.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, in order to clarify the pending resolution on the subject as to which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] yesterday made inquiry, I ask unanimous consent to insert in line 3, on page 2, after the word "coast," the words "and the profits of said business."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has a right to modify his resolution. The Chair understands that the Senator has accepted the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question, then, is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I entirely concur in the views expressed by the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] as to the neglect of the nationals of the United States by this administration. I join in his condemnation of that policy. I think it was entirely appropriate for the Senator from California, as a member of the party which is in control of our foreign affairs, to introduce into the RECORD a report by the Director of the Bureau of Mines, apparently made upon the request of one of the committees of Congress, recommending to the United States that it would be good policy for it to protect its citizens in foreign countries.

It was rather a peculiar way for the suggestion to be made and rather a naive remark on the part of the Senator from California, which he interjected as he made the request that the report be printed, that this was not altogether a new suggestion. It is not altogether new. It is true that it is grown to be obsolete in recent years. During the last six years, from desuetude, it has become an obsolete doctrine to a large extent.

I noticed in the newspapers on yesterday a recommendation of the Government of Mexico, concurred in, I believe, by the Government of the United States, that in order to save the life of his son, an American citizen lawfully resident in Mexico and entitled to the protection of his country, should pay money to some bandit who had seized his son within 30 miles of the boundaries of the City of Mexico and was holding him for ransom. The Senator from California may well call attention to the conditions of which this is but a familiar incident.

It seems a far call to the old days when an American citizen was safe under the protection of his flag in any part of the world. Realizing that a nation which refuses to give protection to its citizens will soon lose its claim upon their allegiance, we suppressed the Barbary pirates, and in the very infancy of our national life to vindicate our rights upon the sea we defied the power of England. The Senator from California may well point out that the abandonment of national protection means national decadence.

PEACE TREATY AND LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. GAY. Mr. President, in the settlement of world peace America, as in the final determination of the World War, has played a most conspicuous part. After months of patient work in the performance of the most gigantic task ever undertaken by skilled diplomatists, our American representative, the Chief Executive of our Nation, has returned and presented to this honorable body a document in which are embodied the high principles of statesmanship and fair dealing which have always characterized our Government.

The victory in statecraft has been as complete as was the victory of our brave men in the various branches of the service and reflects the same glory in the performance of deeds well done.

We are living in an international age. The travel by air brings London and Paris as close as St. Louis and Chicago. The necessity of world cooperation since the recent war is as vital to world reconstruction and a task as difficult as world preservation from the barbarous Hun. We must not permit chaos to rule in civilized Europe. We must cooperate to start afresh the wheels of industry and orderly government and protect the same and give a fresh start to war-worn peoples under new living conditions in which ambition to grasp the nobler things of life will have a place.

A league of nations to enforce peace has been the dream of eminent statesmen for decades.

Daniel Webster, the princely orator and profound statesman, in his eulogy of Adams and Jefferson, filled with the spirit of America's mission in the interest of the world's welfare, said:

> America! America, our own country, fellow citizens, our own dear native land, is inseparably connected, fast bound up in fortune and by fate, with these great world interests. If they fall, we fall with them; if they stand, it will be because we have upholden them.

President Jackson in his farewell address well said:

> You have the highest human trust committed to your care. Providence has showered on this favored land blessings without number and has chosen you as the guardians of freedom to preserve it for the benefit of the human race.

The distinguished senior Senator from Massachusetts, in an address delivered at the commencement exercises at Union College at Schenectady, N. Y., June, 1915, stated:

> Nations must unite as men unite in order to preserve peace and order. The great nations must so unite so as to be able to say to any single country, "You must not go to war," and they can only say that effectively when the country desiring war knows that the force which the united nations place behind peace is irresistible.

These very ideas, Mr. President, are embodied in the treaty which we now have before us, the force of united nations to maintain peace. Can America assume the responsibility, by any political quibbling or by any feeling of petty jealousy, of failing to join other civilized nations for peace? Can we as a Nation stand out alone and say to the world that we refuse to join in the plan to have world peace, simply because that plan has some few features which are not to the liking of some people? Why, Mr. President, it is impossible to have the Senate of the United States, or any other legislative gathering in this country, agree absolutely on any proposition. How, then, can we expect the great nations of the world, sitting about a peace table, to frame a document which would be entirely free of criticism and to which some objectors could not find fault? The treaty, we know, has been a series of compromises; compromises, however, which in no way have sacrificed any American principles, compromises which have been knitted together and molded into the greatest document ever presented to civilized people. Few doubt that had there been a covenant of a league of nations in 1914 that the world would not have been subjected to the crime of all ages from which it has just emerged. Few doubt that, with such a covenant in force, America would not have sent her millions of armed men to engage in bloody conflict on foreign soil. Few doubt but that the freedom of the seas would have been maintained and that Americans would have been safe wherever they went and under whatever flag they saw fit to go. It is to prevent a recurrence of just such events that I for one stand ready to cast my vote now to ratify the peace treaty and to adopt the covenant of the league of nations, to help mankind to lift a burden from suffering humanity everywhere, to keep America always foremost as the advocate of justice, liberty, and peace.

The greatest crisis in history has just been concluded, and to prevent a recurrence of such a conflagration is the duty of all who love humanity and desire peace on earth. It would be nothing short of a calamity should we allow partisan lines to warp our judgment and shorten our vision in the solution of the grave problem which now devolves upon the United States Senate by her constitutional authority.

The issue arises above all questions of selfishness and faction. There cries out from every grief-stricken home where sorrow has crossed the threshold by reason of this inhumane conflict a demand that there must never be another war. Loyal Americans who have made every sacrifice that right should prevail now look to this great legislative assembly, with all of its noble traditions, to play the part of true men and let no politics creep into its deliberations at such an hour.

The fruits of victory should not be wasted. Let us conserve our forces, moral and material, for the betterment of the world.

The difficulties of the peace conference were many. Delegates representing all corners of the earth assembled, many speaking different languages and reared in various environments and schools. Yet so set upon a single purpose were they that a unanimous decision has been reached.

Mr. President, I wish only to briefly review that portion of the treaty of peace with Germany, the covenant of the league of nations, the purpose of which is to promote international cooperation and to achieve international peace and security. It proclaims the high purposes of the contracting parties. Each one of the signatories shall be members, and other nations who are not now members may be admitted on proper application to the assembly. A way to withdraw is likewise provided. National sovereignty is in no way impaired.

An assembly and a council with a permanent secretariat are created. These are the powers through which the league will function.

The assembly shall meet at stated intervals, as occasion may require, at the seat of the league or such other place as may be decided upon.

The assembly consists of representatives of members of the league, and may discuss any matters which come within its scope affecting the peace of the world. Every member is entitled to one vote, and can not have more than three representatives. This insures absolute fair dealing to all nations, and gives as much power to the weaker or smaller nations as is possessed by the greater powers. In the Senate of the United States each State in the American Union has two Senators, and likewise two votes, regardless of their size, population, or material resources. No American will contend but that this is proper representation, and it is but just and fair that all nations forming a part of the great league of nations should be treated alike. All questions before the assembly must be decided by unanimous vote, and nothing can be done without the approval of the United States. No better plan has been suggested by the opponents of the league or by those who only thus far have half-heartedly given their support. The powers of the assembly are limited in comparison with the powers granted to the council.

The council shall consist of the principal allied and associated powers. These are five in number: The United States, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan, with four other members selected by the assembly from time to time in its discretion. Those named as original members are Belgium, Brazil, Spain, and Greece. The council must meet at least once a year at the seat of the league or at such other times and places as may be decided upon. Nations not represented by the council who are members of the league shall be invited to send a representative to act as a member of the council when matters affecting the interests of that member are under consideration. Each member of the league represented on the council has one vote and one representative.

The first meeting of the assembly and the first meeting of the council shall be summoned by the President of the United States.

Unanimous action is necessary, except in certain cases specified, when a majority of the members of the league represented at the meeting may decide. These exceptions are matters of procedure at meetings, including the appointments of committees to investigate particular matters.

There is a permanent secretariat and such secretaries and staff as may be required. The expenses are to be borne by the members of the league in accordance with the apportionment of the expense of the International Bureau of the Universal Postal Union.

The equality of sex in holding positions under the league is recognized and the place of meeting of the league is established.

Representatives of the league members shall have diplomatic privileges and immunities.

The first forward step toward providing for international peace is article 8, which looks to the reduction of armaments to the lowest point consistent with national safety. By this article the great war machinery of Europe will be forever wiped out. The vast expenditures and wasteful extravagances in building engines of war and maintaining armed forces will be obliterated, and money that has been expended for the purpose of destroying lives and property can now be used to uplift and benefit humanity and reduce the heavy burden of taxation, which has been for so long a time a curse on many European nations. The manufacture of munitions by private enterprises will become obsolete. Those great corporations which have in the past encouraged rebellion and international strife for private aggrandizement and gain will cease to exist. Needed public improvement can be realized in place of burdening business by unlimited expenditures which have been necessary to maintain the great armies and navies of the past. National safety and international obligations are recognized, and the members of the league agree to exchange full and frank information concerning their armaments, military, naval, and air forces, and conditions of their industries as adaptable to warlike purposes. The council takes into consideration geographical situations and circumstances of every nation in the plan to reduce armaments, and such plans are subject to reconsideration and revision every 10 years.

There is a permanent commission created to advise the council on the execution of the plan, as prescribed by the league, for the accomplishment of disarmament.

Article 10, the heart of the league, has been more bitterly attacked, perhaps, than any other.

This is an agreement to respect and preserve each other against external aggression. We here depart, as is absolutely necessary, from the policy of exclusiveness. We here undertake to assist in preserving the territorial integrity of France and Belgium against external aggression when the American people, through their accredited representatives in the American Congress so decree. America can not, and will not, under the Constitution of the United States, go to war unless a majority of her chosen representatives so affirm. There can be no more grabbing of territory by greedy nations under this article. The sovereignty of small nations is established. In agreeing to this section to preserve against external aggression the cause of most wars in the past is removed and war is given a deathblow. Let us remember that this section does not attempt to interfere in any way with uprisings and disturbances within a State. We have nothing to do with the domestic affairs of other nations and are in no way committed to any such policy by any article of this covenant. The fact that each member of the league gives this solemn assurance will have more effect to preserve peace than any other. We take it for granted that each nation, in signing this document, does so in good faith; and in signing it it enters a promise that it will not attempt, by conquest, to gain new territory or to expand its possessions. Almost all of the wars in history have been wars of conquest. America is the only great power whose record is clean and who has not been guilty of waging wars of conquest and despoilment. Weak nations are here protected, and no nation in the future can look with fear upon its neighbor with such an understanding honorably agreed to and honorably observed.

I for one believe, Mr. President, that section 10 will have more influence in the prevention of wars and will help more to preserve the peace of the world than any other article of the covenant. With this agreement entered into, the nation violating this article will be subject to boycott in trade relations by all of the other powers. This is sufficient to deter a belligerent from actually engaging in war. In addition thereto there are other means by which this obligation shall be fulfilled, and no nation in the light of past events is likely to undertake a repetition of what we have just seen and bring down upon itself the condemnation of the entire world. The effectiveness of this provision was well demonstrated in the war just ended, as the severance of trade with Germany created a virtual blockade and caused so much distress to the civil population in that country that there is no reason to doubt that such action was one of the prime causes of bringing the war to a sudden termination.

Any member of the league, should an emergency exist, can, through the secretary-general, summon a meeting of the council. Any breach of faith or unfriendly act affecting international relations are matters of great concern affecting the whole league, and the league can take any action which is thought proper and effectual to preserve the peace of nations.

One of the important provisions which will prevent nations from resorting to war in the heat of passion is that article which provides that when any dispute is likely to lead to a rupture the matter is subject to arbitration or inquiry by the council, and that in no case will they resort to war until three months after the award by the arbitrators or the report by the council. Nations, like individuals, are apt to be sobered by calm second thought, and much of the friction that arises through sudden misunderstandings or quick popular outbursts of passion will be prevented by the delay necessary in the submission to arbitration. Arbitrators can not delay for any unreasonable time and the council must report within six weeks after the submission of the dispute. This delay will afford an opportunity for discussion and the exchange of views, which doubtless will always clarify misunderstandings and give justice and the law a chance to prevail.

Members of the league determine what questions are left to arbitration, and those in dispute are free to select the members of the court of arbitration. They likewise pledge themselves not to resort to war against any member of the league and to carry out in good faith any award that may be rendered. Should this fail, the council may take steps to have the award enforced; but if at any time a dispute should arise likely to lead to rupture which is not submitted to arbitration, the members of the league agree that they will submit the matter to the council. The council may refer the dispute to the assembly, thus giving those in dispute the choice of having it determined by the council or by the assembly, as is provided in article 15.

Plans for a court of international justice are provided. Thus every possible safeguard is contemplated for permanent arbitration and for prompt enforcement of right and for bringing the nations of the world closer together for international harmony.

In matters of dispute between members of the league which have not been submitted to arbitration a method is provided by which the members of the league examine the disputed question and determine the real merits involved, whether the same is wholly within domestic jurisdiction under international law, and report to the league the facts and their opinion of the same, with a recommendation for such action as they shall consider necessary for the maintenance of right and justice.

Where disputes arise between a member of the league and a State not a member of the league an invitation shall be tendered to the nonmember to accept the obligation of membership in the league for the purpose of such dispute upon such conditions as the council may deem just. Immediate inquiry shall be made into the circumstances of the dispute, and recommendation of the council for such action as may seem best and most effectual, with power to enforce such recommendations through means already provided. If the disputants refuse to accept the obligations of membership in the league, the council may take such measures and make such recommendations as will prevent hostilities.

A provision is also incorporated in the league providing for the registry of all treaties and international engagements with the secretary of the league, so a ready reference may be had at some particular place of every such agreement, thus abolishing the pernicious secret treaties which have been the cause of so many world disturbances. It is also provided that the assembly shall from time to time advise the league when members of that body should revise treaties or international engagements which menace the peace of the world. All members of the league severally agree that all obligations or understandings among themselves which are inconsistent with the covenant shall be abrogated, and pledge themselves that they will not enter into any engagements inconsistent with the terms of the covenant. It clearly and explicitly maintains and protects the Monroe doctrine and all arbitrations for maintaining peace. It provides for the protection, guidance, and goverance of backward peoples who are unfit to govern themselves; makes suitable provisions that under the regulations of the league these people shall not be exploited and shall be led to the pathway of self-government, and provides that they shall enjoy religious freedom. The league is authorized to deal with the question of labor and endeavor to secure international organization through which labor throughout the world will receive fair and just treatment; it will endeavor to secure just treatment to all native inhabitants under its control and regulate the traffic in women and children and in opium and other dangerous drugs. It is to be intrusted with general supervision over the traffic in arms and ammunition, secure and maintain freedom of transit of commerce, and use every endeavor for the prevention and control of disease. All international bureaus already established will, as far as possible, be placed under the direction of the league. Red Cross organizations are to be encouraged and promoted in their work of prevention of disease and the mitigation of suffering throughout the world. Amendments to the covenant can only be made when ratified by each nation in the council and by a majority in the assembly. A member dissenting from an amendment is not bound thereby, but ceases to be a member of the league.

Mr. President, this league may not be a panacea for all evils which have affected the nations of the world; it may be that it will not prevent wars in the future, but if it prevents one war, it will have served humanity and civilization.

Business throughout the country demands that we now conclude peace terms and get back to normal as rapidly as possible. Labor will be happier, and all enterprises will advance. The farmer and manufacturer, the producers of food and other necessities of life, will be able to so adjust conditions for America that she may continue her great prosperity and assist the unfortunate nations who have so severely suffered to readjust their conditions.

The demand is for ratification now; and if this plan is not effective, it can be corrected in the future.

Mr. President, as a representative of the great State which to-day contains the largest body of loyal Americans in whose homes the language of France is as commonly spoken as English, a people who by ancestry and tradition regard France as their mother, I feel it imperative that I should express the universal sentiment among our people in favor of the league of nations. No section of the Republic is more deeply and soundly American; in none are the people more jealous of the independence and sovereignty of the American Union.

Many of our people still retain the customs and habits of their French ancestors, who came to Louisiana and made their homes, reduced the wilderness to flourishing plantations, built cities, and fought a victorious battle for nearly a century against the floods of the mighty rivers which flow through her borders, and who have overcome, like the sturdy people of their mother country, many of the hardships and adversities in the development of a great people.

Louisiana met every call for men and money, subscribed liberally and freely to the Red Cross and every organized war relief association. Its people raised the largest crops of sugar and rice in the history of the State and more than trebled its production of meat and corn.

With patriotic fervor, and cheerfully making every sacrifice to win the war, every obligation has been met and every call promptly answered. Familiar with the devastation of France, her loss of the flower of her manhood, and the intense suffering of her people, Louisiana now wants every possible safeguard against any future wars, with all of its horrors and sufferings.

Four great empires have fallen, the rulers dead or in exile; eight million of the flower of the Caucasian race have been killed in battle; and close to twenty million people have died from this wholesale destruction. Two hundred billions of dollars of debt have been fastened on posterity, to be ground out of the toil of generations yet unborn.

America entered the war under the great leadership of President Wilson. She threw into the wavering scale two million of her bravest and best and brought victory decisive and swift by the heroism of her sons. More than fifty thousand of her young men fell on the battle fronts of France.

This four years of destruction convinced the world that civilization must destroy war or war will destroy civilization. States and nations have discovered they can not live alone. They have learned that if one member suffers all must suffer. Time and distance have been annihilated by inventions. Terrible, indeed, was the slaughter. Methods of destroying life and property have been intensified. Terrible as were the means of destruction brought into the field at the commencement of the war, they were far more terrible at the end.

The artillery that strove in vain to turn back the German rush on Mons in the summer of 1914, though superior to anything ever before used in battle, was weak and small compared with the artillery that won back the ancient town in the summer of 1918. The bombs that spread destruction in London in 1915 were but toys in comparison with the bombs which were to have shattered Berlin had not the armistice been signed on the 11th of November. The application of modern science—for chemistry is a very progressive science—in the art of destruction is in its infancy, and, in the language of Mr. Asquith, "is still lisping in the alphabet of annihilation." It will soon come in vigorous manhood and then humanity will perish.

When the sky is black with aeroplanes; the ocean thick with submarines; when poisonous gases and liquid fires are projected from enormous distances, burning bodies of men and slaying them amidst torture; when means of destruction far more powerful than the biggest guns command vast areas of land and sea and are guided by foes hidden in far distant shelters; when the air itself is turned into a force of war; when distinction between combatant and noncombatant has vanished; and there is no security on earth, air, or sea, then humanity will perish from the earth. Surely civilization must for its own preservation destroy war or war will destroy civilization.

For 40 years Germany's main business was to prepare for war. Its greatest industrial plant at Essen engaged an army under the best scientists to manufacture implements of destruction. Its young men in its universities were taught to glorify war. Faith and conscience were eliminated. Kultur was drilled into the mind of every child in the land, and its fiendish principles put into action in sinking unarmed ships, murdering defenseless women and children on sea and land, in robberies of cities and towns, looting private residences, subjecting women to outrages worse than death, destroying the works of genius held sacred by the civilized peoples of all ages, by the cruel and merciless treatment of prisoners, and the introduction of the most excruciating and agonizing methods of inflicting death, thus making war more fiendish, cruel, and merciless, while at the same time more destructive, than at any previous period in the history of man.

The war ended in the breaking up of empires, the organization of new governments, the release from a grinding bondage of millions of human beings who had been hewers of wood and drawers of water for overlords who by brute force retained these millions under the yoke of toil and with no hope of betterment.

For nearly 40 years the majority of the people of Europe were groaning under taxes three-fourths of which were applied to means of defense or war. Nine-tenths of the revenues for years to come must be required to pay war debts and would be required to maintain armies and navies to watch each other.

The fighting ceased November 11. The stupendous task of establishing orderly government for the millions suddenly released from the iron hand of the past; of seeking means to prevent civilization from falling into utter chaos, such as prevails in Russia, was the primary duty of those who had conquered the great war machine of the Central Powers. All had been tried in the furnace of affliction. Fortunate, indeed, that among the representatives of the suffering peoples America came to the peace table seeking no material profit, claiming no indemnities and no territory, but coming to assert the principles of law in a world in which the principles of war had been broken down, to make sure in the future the essential principles of right dealing and humanity. Who in all this great land of ours was so well fitted to bring to the peace conference the principles which have made the American people mighty in arms and material power as Woodrow Wilson? Wilson, the profound scholar, the lifetime student of history and government by the people and for the people, who spent years in the continuous study of the sources of American power and achievement; the chosen leader of the Republic during the trying period before the war; the master mind who, by wise counsel and patriotic devotion to his country, advised legislation which he executed with singleness of heart and unselfish purpose to win the war; a statesman whose creed was summed up in the doctrine that right made might rather than the slogan of German Kultur that might made right; a man who had imbibed the spirit of the fathers of our Republic, that it was our privilege to make—

Not only the liberties of America secure, but the liberties of other peoples as well.

As expressed in his Fourth of July address at Mount Vernon:

What we seek is the reign of law, based upon the consent of the governed and sustained by the organized opinion of mankind.

President Wilson carried with him to Versailles the opinions and the wishes of the American people and at that conference put in concrete form their convictions of what should be the basis of an enduring settlement, opinions and convictions as clearly expressed as though they had been put in the form of an expressed referendum.

For more than two years, in messages to Congress, by public proclamation, and by speeches, he had clearly and concisely expressed principles and policies to be engrafted in a treaty of peace.

At Des Moines, on February 1, 1916, he said:

That flag stands for the right of mankind, no matter where they may be, no matter what their antecedents, no matter what the races involved; it stands for the absolute right to political liberty and free self-government.

When President Wilson met the representatives of the nations at Paris he found the first step to secure a peace that would bring the nations back to industrial pursuits was to form a common agreement for the settlement of the many complicated problems of new governments, settlements of boundaries, disarmament, and economic reconstruction.

In his proclamation of April 16, 1917, he said:

The entrance of our own beloved country into the grim and terrible war for democracy and human rights, which has shaken the world, creates so many problems of national life and action which call for immediate consideration that I hope you will permit me to address to you a few words of earnest counsel. We are fighting for what we believe and wish to be the rights of mankind and for the future peace and security of the world.

No voice or pen in America dissented from this proposition. It was read by the American people; everywhere it met their hearty approval, although all knew the tremendous sacrifice of men and money involved.

President Wilson, after close study of the questions at the conference, found that to secure these principles which had triumphed, a league of nations to maintain and enforce what had been conquered was an absolute necessity.

In his fifth annual message to Congress he concluded with this solemn statement:

A supreme moment of history has come. The eyes of the people have been opened and they see the hand of God is laid upon the nations. He will show them favor, I devoutly believe, only if they rise to the clear heights of justice and mercy.

In this reverent spirit our President represented the American people at the peace table and was guided in his acts in that conference.

His proclamations, as every other enunciation of principles, received the unanimous approval of the American people, and there was not a discordant note in the press or on the platform. Therefore President Wilson was justified in his statements in speeches in England and France and Italy when he stated that he voiced the heart and mind of the public on the terms of peace, for he had been their spokesman, had laid down the general principles during the war which should govern in the treaty of peace. It may be termed "idealism." If so, it was the idealism of the Nation. It was, however, no dream, but the practical application of the principles of the American Government to the problem of reconstruction of the world under the clearest and most equitable adjustment of governmental affairs ever put in operation since the Divine Master came to earth and preached the gospel of peace and good will to all men.

The war marks the end of an old order and the beginning of a new one. The spiritual meaning will only penetrate our minds after the final adjustment of peace shall have been completed. The social, political, and spiritual results of the tragedy will affect the destinies of mankind to the end of time.

The President, in his address to the Senate July 10, 1919, submitting the treaty for its ratification, said:

Convenient, indeed indispensable, as statesmen found the newly planned league of nations to be for the execution of present plans of peace and reparation, they saw it in a new aspect before their work was finished. They saw it as the main object of peace, as the only means that could complete it or make it worth while. They saw it as the hope of the world, and that hope they did not dare disappoint. Shall we, or any other free people, hesitate to accept this great duty? Dare we reject it and break the heart of the world?

It has come about by no plan of our conceiving, but by the hand of God, who led us in this way. We can not turn back.

Surely, Mr. President, the American people, who gave their absolute confidence to their chosen leader, armed with extraordinary powers, during the trying hours of the war, who responded cheerfully to every appeal he made for men, money, and the practice of self-denial, who listened to his clean and fervid enunciation of the issues involved, who believed that he clearly stated their purpose and interpreted the spirit of our Government, who believed in him and trusted him with a faith as trustful as was ever given to any leader of men, will not in the hour of triumph reject his final and conclusive work to end the great tragedy and establish peace on earth.

For seven weary and strenuous months he gave mind and soul to the great task. At the council board he toiled with the great statesmen who had led their people through the valley of the shadow of death. Experienced, tried statesmen, no novices in world politics, men who knew the difficulties of reconstruction, men determined to work out a plan to remedy the great wrongs of the past, men determined to preserve civilization, determined to destroy war, and to safeguard the future by a general plan of disarmament by cooperation of the society of nations to settle national difficulties at the council board rather than by the sword. All these joined in what they deemed the only practical method of securing an immediate peace, which should endure and give rest to a troubled and suffering world to insure the reign of law based upon the consent of the governed and sustained by the organized opinion of mankind, organized through the plan of the league of nations. As they trusted Woodrow Wilson in the past they trust him now and will still follow that clear mind and noble heart which engrafted in the league of nations that divine doctrine of liberty, the support of the weak, the trusteeship of the strong, and the universal brotherhood of man.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the attainment of permanent peace among men has been a theme for poets, philosophers, and statesmen since the race emerged from the rudiments of tribal life. It has found expression in the literature of all ages and all countries, in the sanctions of every established religion, and in the yearnings of humanity for an existence immune from conflict and tribulation. It is vitalized by the carnage of every great war. Its spirit crowns their close with treaty covenants establishing peace between the nations, bristling with rigid guaranties and prohibitions designed to safeguard its permanency. These parchment restraints and provisions have hitherto been regarded as self-executing; and the nations after imposing and securing them have again turned aside to find absorption in the more prosaic and profitable pursuits of trade, industry, and politics.

The rivalries of commercial competition soon reappear. These in time arouse the latent elements of strife which inevitably overcome the inertia of every established order that has failed to note their disturbing influence and provide against their acute development. History, therefore, discloses the constant interplay of their cause and effect. Its pathway is strewn with a dreary procession of treaties and alliances evolved from the bitter experiences of war and suffering, christened with the benediction of their authors, but foredoomed to failure by the operation of the causes which made their negotiation imperative.

We are just emerging from the most terrible of all wars. The vast range of the conflict, the destruction of life, the waste of property, the carnage, the heroism, and the sacrifice attending its progress have been portrayed many times upon this floor. The Allies, finally triumphant, have risen to their feet, covered with the stains of battle and surrounded by the ruins of a continent. Staggering under the awful burden of their losses and their obligations, they have imposed upon the enemy their terms of reparation. They have sketched upon the background of ruined cities and blackened landscapes the outlines of a league of nations designed to prevent the recurrence of future wars. They have woven it into the fabric of their treaty and forced its acceptance upon Germany, while denying to her the privilege of immediate membership. It is a plan composed of many details, some of them unobjectionable, others intricate and of supreme importance, none of them superfluous. It was drafted and is sponsored by many illustrious men chosen from all the nations, men prominent in public affairs, distinguished in social, political, and industrial life, noted for practical and intellectual achievement—patriots all and inspired by the purest and loftiest of purposes. These unite in giving the world earnest and disinterested assurance that the plan of the league will effectuate what all treaties of the past have proven powerless to secure. If this be true it should receive unqualified approval. For surely the permanent abolition of war would be the transcendent achievement of the centuries. No lover of humanity should hesitate, whatever his convictions, to ratify a covenant so desirable.

The draft of the treaty is formally before the Senate, which, as a part of the treaty-making power, must now pass judgment upon it. This body never before encountered a duty of such magnitude, whose performance is fraught with so many and such far-reaching consequences. We can not and will not evade it. We can discharge it faithfully and efficiently only after a patient investigation of the details of the document, its framework, its capacity for effectuating its avowed purpose, its results as far as we may forecast them, and, above all, its relation to the authority of the Senate operating under the delegated powers of a written constitution. Sentiment and passion should have no place in our counsels. Our action here is legislative in form only; in substance and effect it is essentially judicial.

We are confronted at the threshold with the inquiry whether the grateful assumption so confidently and constantly made and so widely accepted that this treaty is a practical guaranty of permanent peace is justified. If it may be sustained even with some qualification, our task would be materially lightened by the balancing of results with covenants of dubious expediency. If it will not bear the scrutiny of analysis, we may still conclude to accept the treaty, but freed from the influence of a sentiment which may prove illusory and disappointing. We are legislating, it is said, for all time, and we can not bow to prediction, how exalted soever its source, unless we be very sure of its basic value.

Lord Byron says that "the best prophet of the future is the past." To history, therefore, must we turn for enlightenment regarding the intellect of man, its attributes and characteristics in operation, what changes and modifications it has undergone in the progress of civilization, the influences directing or controlling its development, and, above all, the effect of war upon its spiritual and material processes.

What warrant does history furnish for the optimism of the hour? Has the recent war effected transformations in man which all previous wars were unable to accomplish?

In what essentials have man's defects and virtues been cleansed and purified in the crucible of his last great agony? Has he been transfigured by his recent sufferings and sacrifices, or, still true to type, is he merely chastened by the recent exhibition of his awful powers of destruction and, under the spell of a spiritual exaltation, absorbed by the age-old conviction that permanent peace "may be born of treaties and need not proceed from the prosperity and well-ordered education of the people"?

Man's progress from barbarism may be due, as claimed, to the uplifting and beneficent influences of morals and revealed religion. These have disclosed and defined their mutual privileges and restraints, established codes of conduct, and outlined the principles of justice. They have ministered through the centuries to his sense of responsibility to an Omniscient Power, the sanction of whose assurances of rewards and punishments was inexorable. Of all the nations upon earth those involved in the Great War just ended were foremost in recognition of the advanced principles of Christianity and their sense of responsibility to the obvious requirements of moral law. But the war ensued notwithstanding. It ensued not only, but the nations engaged on either side proclaimed that theirs was the cause of the Almighty, and invoked His aid in their behalf and against the enemy. Such, indeed, has been the attitude of nations in every war that has stained the annals of recorded time. These melancholy facts disclose but half the story, for it may be averred without the fear of successful contradiction that more lives have been lost in the carnage of warring religions since the world began than were sacrificed to the German Moloch since August, 1914. Liberty of conscience has indeed found latter-day refuge in the habitations but the spirit which exorcised it for ages still lurks in the heart of man. It is dormant only because religion has become a minor note in the diapason of modern progress. Morality, like every other natural condition, is static; its laws are unchanging and unchangeable. That which they were in the beginning they are now, and they ever will be. Their recognition and application to the varied complications of man's intercourse with man may be more pronounced in one age than in another. They may be observed in larger degree by one nation or generation than by others, but they may be varied by neither, for they are the same at all times and everywhere.

The moral and intellectual conduct of a given time and race is the reflex of the moral and intellectual view then prevalent. "The progress," says Mr. Buckle, "is one not of internal power but of external advantage." This author concludes, and I think correctly, that "moral motives and moral instinct have exercised but small influence over the progress of civilization. For there is unquestionably nothing to be found in the world which has so little changed as the great dogmas of which moral systems are composed: To do good to others, to sacrifice our own wishes, to love your neighbor as yourself, to forgive your enemies, to restrain your passions, to honor your parents, to respect those who are set over you. These and a few others are the sole essentials of morals, for they have been known for thousands of years and not one jot or tittle has been added to them by all the homilies and textbooks which moralists and theologians have been able to produce."

If the lessons of history teach us that neither morals nor religion has kept the world at peace, that Christ, indeed, came not to bring peace but a sword, that their benign influences were at flood tide when Germany drew the sword, how may we in confidence rely upon either as a stimulus for the prevention of future conflicts? May we expect that either or both have been diverted into other and purer channels, or that the minds of men have been finally cleansed and purified by their last ordeal of suffering and sacrifice? I wish it were possible. But if we except a few noble men and women from the general mass of mankind, I can perceive no evidence of such a change.

Will future wars be prevented by the condign punishment of those responsible for the last one? Victorious allies have decreed the delivery for trial and conviction of those who plunged the world into chaos five years ago. Vengeance, they declare, has not prompted them, but the need for examples warning others similarly disposed of the fate they must encounter.

A recent writer has said:

> After every great war ardent and indignant spirits have cried aloud, "It must never happen again." Europe in 1815, seeking an explanation of its devastating paroxysm of bloodshed, found it in Bonaparte; to-day the world is taught to attribute its latest convulsion to the Kaiser. Then, as now, the minds of men were dominated by the eternal delusion that the immediate cause of strife once found and removed nothing was needed but a common purpose of good will to remold the sorry scheme of things entire, and to achieve our heart's desire in a millennium of enduring peace.

Napoleon voluntarily delivered himself into the hands of England. Pending his final sentence, the ship containing him was compelled to put to sea to escape the crowds of clamoring Englishmen proclaiming his eminence and demanding his freedom. Amid such influences England decreed perpetual banishment of her arch enemy to the loneliest isle on the face of the globe as a warning and example for all time, but in vain. She merely crowned him with the immortality of martyrdom, enshrined him forever in the soul of militant France, and commended his career and ambitions to the future. The Kaiser was not appalled by Napoleon's failure. On the contrary, he aspired to greater things. There the parallel ceases. Shall we by the infliction of personal punishment restore it? I would not mitigate, if I could, the crimes of Wilhelm II. No human tribunal can exact adequate expiation for them; but I believe that his trial, conviction, and punishment will accomplish only what England accomplished with Bonaparte.

The influence of a martyred Kaiser may not become as great but may prove quite as potent for war as that of Napoleon. Prof. Cramb describes the mastery of the great Corsican over the minds of men as the most significant spiritual phenomenon of the twentieth century. He calls it the conflict between Christ and Napoleon and declares that Corsica has conquered Galilee; that Germany, while "abjuring the tyrant and oppressor of Europe, gradually acquired a profound and ever profounder reverence for the creed and the religion toward which that great and solitary spirit, perhaps the loneliest among the children of men, still struggled amid the tumults and desolations, the triumphs and the glories, the victory and the disaster, of his tragic and brief career."

Can it be true that the spirit and nature of man have been so changed and chastened by the awful experiences of the past four years, by his sacrifice of life and of treasure, by his development of methods of wholesale slaughter and destruction, that he is determined henceforth to avert his gaze from the genius of war and banish it from the events and contingencies of the future? Are his ambitions so softened, his greed, avarice, and selfish competitions so permanently dissipated, that appeals to the sword may now be replaced by appeals to conscience, by tribunals of arbitration, and by conventions of similar import?

The situation everywhere furnishes an eloquent and conclusive answer. I affirm without hesitation that the world is today more turbulent, and scarcely less bloody, than before the signing of the armistice. Only a few days ago Mr. Andrew Bonar Law told the British House of Commons that 23 different wars were then in progress. These have been enumerated and I shall ask permission to incorporate a list of them in the RECORD. Revolt or revolution in some part of the world is an everyday occurrence. New nations are fighting each other for territory, while the dominant races among them are butchering and despoiling their weaker subjects. The Frankenstein of Bolshevism is covering half a continent with its bloody tracks and consuming torch. Strikes, riots, murder, lawlessness, disregard of authority, robbery, and insurrection in Europe, Asia, and America have long been a story of each succeeding day. Respect for the ordinary conventions of law and order and a decent regard for the reciprocal rights and duties of the private citizen have generally declined, and in some parts of the earth have disappeared altogether. The world shudders at the possible consequence of a returning demobilized soldiery weaned from the prosaic environment of prewar conditions and inured to the sordid experiences of active warfare. The people of no nation upon earth seem inclined either to peace or to the arts of peace. International conflict between the great powers is not apprehended. Insurrection and internecine conflict threaten every land. The passions and discontent of men now rock the world.

Wars can not be avoided by any plans, leagues, or precautions unless the minds of men become averse to war; and I am unable to accept the theory that men can be made merciful, wise, and moderate, that their ambitions can be stifled and their jealousies curbed, by treaty regulations. The belief that this can be done is a very old one. It is, in the language of another, "a dramatic but deluded expression of the hope that by some miraculous process of lawgiving, the collective wisdom of human society might suddenly be made to dominate over its collective folly. The Russian Czar in 1815 assumed that the corporate conscience is capable of development equal to that of the individual conscience; that assumption is still widely prevalent, but it runs counter to all human experience, ancient and modern, and can not be justified under existing conditions of social and economic evolution."

And the nations are as the individuals composing them. These are naturally and necessarily concerned first for their own interest and welfare, to which all other considerations, even that of permanent peace, are secondary. France knows from a long and bitter and terrible series of experiences that the German of the twentieth is identical with the Hun of the fifth century, who covets his neighbor's possessions and is restrained only by the power of visible force. She has thoroughly learned his nature, his attributes, his intellectual processes, and his power in the hard and bloody school of strife and conflict. And in dealing with him she reveals her own possession of many of his qualities. She has therefore disarmed him not only but wrested a Province from him, and she demands a defensive alliance with England and America against Germany as a supplement to her league of nations. She may feel secure against the recurrence of another war, but she will take all necessary precautions to win it when it comes.

Italy wants peace, as we do, but not without Fiume and most of the Tyrol. If she must make a choice between them, she prefers the latter. No dread of consequences has swerved her for a moment from this demand, although she can find no treaty warrant for it and must know that without Fiume the new Republic of Jugo-Slavonia must nurse a wound that naught but war can heal. Scarce 20 days ago her soldiers, resenting the presence of a small French garrison stationed at Fiume by the allied powers to aid in preserving the peace, slaughtered many of them like cattle in the shambles. This atrocious butchery is reported to have been encouraged by their officers. She has also demanded the Austrian concession at Tientsin as spoils of war. With one hand she signs the treaty and accepts the league of nations, while with the other she slays the soldiers of her ally and spreads her net for transoceanic territory, undeterred by the sanctions of a covenant not yet hardened into permanency and undismayed by the prospect of collision with armed France. She holds by force what she has taken and demands by diplomacy what she still covets.

Japan advocates the league of nations, but her adhesion to the plan was subordinated to her demand for Shantung until the demand was recognized. China, deprived of an important Province and distrusting the integrity of Japan's promise to return it to her, declines the treaty and the league. Abandoned by her allies, she hints at overtures elsewhere and appeals to the conscience of the nations.

Greece must contend with France and Italy for dominion over the isles of the eastern Mediterranean and the coast of Syria. Who can say in view of these manifestations that the nations besides our own and recently at war are inclined to a peace with which these demands and ambitions can not be reconciled?

France nursed the wrongs which Germany imposed upon her at Versailles for nearly half a century. Mommsen declared that Louis XIV had supplied Germany with ample ground for Bismarck's invasion of France in 1870, and Poland's partition has fanned the spirit of Polish nationalism and shaped the destiny of the Polish race for two centuries. Will this treaty, differing not a whit in spirit and policy from countless precedents of the past, escape the consequences which sooner or later have overtaken and overwhelmed them all? I make no plea for Germany. She richly merits every requirement which the treaty has imposed upon her, although I doubt if she can ever comply with them. Were the nation dismantled and dismembered, were its people delivered in perpetual slavery into the hands of the Allies, were all its property, movable and immovable, confiscated and sequestered for the benefit of its plundered enemies, the reparation would be incomplete. But the Germans are human beings, possessed of human attributes, influenced by human motives, and inspired by human impulses. They have not accepted the treaty; that has been forced upon them. Their remonstranees, protests, pleas, and denunciations aptly and graphically indicate the national attitude regarding it. It is true that had the gauge of battle been against us Germany would have imposed equal or harder conditions upon the Allies. But would we have accepted them willingly or otherwise than at the point of the sword or with a less rebellious or protesting spirit or without a similar determination to rid ourselves of it at the first opportunity? Our treaty with her will be respected and its covenants performed so long as the allied powers can so dictate. It will be repudiated whenever that power shall disappear, and this whether Germany be within or without the league of nations. The aspiration of Germany will be the coming of that hour. She will prepare for it, within the limitations of the treaty if she must, but she will prepare for it nevertheless, and we may be sure that her preparations will not be discouraged by a world's assurance that the horizon of the future shall not be overcast by the gathering clouds of war. For it is everlasting truth that no peace of force has ever outlived the force which imposed it. "It binds only so long as you can make your enemy see behind the parchment the gleaming point of the sword."

Germany's fleets and armies have been dissipated and her military prowess overthrown. But her perfect system of espionage still covers the world with a vast network of intrigue, whose meshes penetrate its every secret corner. She still hears the discussions of council chambers, still records impressions of every sinister whisper that means aught to her present or future, still notes the pulse beats of every nation that has blocked her pathway to universal dominion. And she is sowing the seeds of another crop of dragon's teeth in the soil of prostrate Russia, whose harvest of misery is foreshadowed by the mistaken policy of the Allies toward that unhappy country. She is now the world's pariah. Excluded for the time, and perhaps permanently, from the league of nations, she will yet be familiar with all its activities. She can widen the differences of its members and subtly strive to encourage them. The conflicting currents of trade and commerce must inevitably create rifts in the scheme of allied unity, and the support of seventy millions of people outside the pale may become a prize in national competition for markets and material. Here is a balance of power pregnant with sinister import, one likely to materialize, possibly to be encouraged, by rival ambitions.

The league of nations, as the name implies, is international in its framework if not in its substance. Its labor provisions are distinctly so. It does not propose a fusion of peoples, but a covenant between governments whereby express powers, partly judicial, partly administrative, are mutually transferred to a representative organism. This ligament, federative in character, is to bind the nations together on terms of mutual security. This presupposes internationalism. Some of its sponsors declare the American Constitution to be its analogue, while the Socialist support of it is frankly based upon its international character. These features of the project amply justify the inquiry whether internationalism may be relied upon to banish wars from the affairs of men.

The Socialist rightly declares that patriotism promotes the war spirit, and that it springs from the sentiment of nationality, which in turn is the child of race consciousness. Mazzini wisely appealed to the race instinct of the Italian that he might arouse the spirit of nationality. He well knew that until the sentiment of his people thrilled with the pride of ancestry and the glory of their past their dormant patriotism would never respond to his burning appeals for national unity. The same processes underlie the story of every great race whose achievements crowd the pages of history. But it is a serious problem whether the extinction of nationalism, were that possible, would result in any corresponding advantage. It might secure peace, and it might stagnate the races. China is here both a warning and an example to the world.

But upon that contingency we need not speculate, for it is an impossible one. The composite man may appear as a sporadic production, but he can never be a type. Races may be blended as they mingle in the same communities, when enjoying equal privileges, as in the United States, but never otherwise. Their differing color, aptitudes, intelligence, latitudes, foodstuffs, religions, institutions, and social attributes are fundamental, and these will assert themselves persistently, if not offensively, to the confusion of internationalists and the undoing of empires.

Racial instincts and tendencies are the infallible antidotes to internationalism. They will assert themselves with a vigor and persistency that no barriers can suppress. They will survive every obstacle they encounter. Persecution, suppression, assimilation may check but can not destroy them. Races may be annihilated or reduced to pitiful fragments of survival by violence or by epidemics. Not otherwise can they be disposed of. The Jew is the age-long illustration of this truth. Before the crucifixion the hands of surrounding nations were against him. Since that period he has been persecuted by the common consent of the Christian world. He has been butchered, decimated, ostracized, exiled, starved, robbed, enslaved, and execrated. He has been exposed to every horror and subjected to the vicissitudes of every danger that the genius of cruelty and malice could devise. At this hour, when a world bled white is welcoming peace and humanity yearns for the day when the lion and the lamb shall lie down together, the newly freed peoples of Europe are celebrating their regained nationality by Jewish pogroms and assassinations. "Yet the Hebrew abides and is strong."

But the Jew only typifies a universal racial condition, which asserts itself when opportunity beckons and in moments of danger and of peril. The old law of self-preservation is both collective and individual. It appeals to the members of every race whose existence may be exposed or threatened. Like families, they frequently quarrel among themselves, but wage no battles of extinction. Like families, they forget internal differences and unite to meet the shock, or make the attack upon the outer circle, of the common foe. Americans were amazed in 1898 by the general sympathy of the Latin peoples of Central and South America for Spain, in the war we then waged against her for Cuban independence. Mexican distrust and animosity are a source of constant exasperation to us. But these antipathies are spontaneous because they are racial. The Anglo-Saxon attitude toward the Spaniard is a long history of successful aggression; and the descendant of the Spaniard instinctively associates Anglo-Saxon propinquity with racial antagonisms.

From the hour that the Central Empires declared war against Great Britain there was never a doubt as to the side America would espouse if she determined to enter the struggle. The German knew also what we would do, whether he lived here or in the Fatherland. Their one alternative was to keep us out, and when the urge became too great they added terrorism to propaganda. Germany thus cast the die that sealed her fate. She was the mortal enemy of Britain and resolved to dominate or to annihilate her. But Britain is our mother country, an unnatural and hard-hearted parent at times, if you like, but our mother country. Both nations are Anglo-Saxon. The crushing of the parent nation would be the ultimate undoing of the offspring, and that would set the world back to the days of medievalism. Many reasons have been assigned for America's declaration of war, none of which I shall challenge. But I affirm that the underlying mainspring of our action was Germany's menace to the Anglo-Saxon race.

The same urge which thrust Canada and Australia into the allied ranks at Ypres and Gallipoli; which prompted Tattnall in 1859 to aid the British squadron against the Chinese defenses in the Peiho River, because "blood was thicker than water"; which inspired England's assurance to Germany in 1898 that if she entered the Spanish War at all she would be America's ally; and which caused Chichester to place his ship between Dewey's fleet and the guns of Admiral Diederich in Manila Harbor. And it compelled the Federal Government to abandon its unnatural reconstruction policy in the South, which threatened to subject the Anglo-Saxon to the domination of an inferior and an alien race.

The spirit of nationalism was never more assertive than it is now. President Wilson's announcement of the right of self-determination was like deep calling unto deep. The response greeting it was universal. It aroused the self-consciousness of peoples, which had been dormant or intermittent for centuries. Much of the turmoil and bloodshed following the cessation of hostilities has been due to its swift and defiant assertion. And it is a condition not easily controlled. It must expend its energy before it subsides, and will do more to exorcise the spell of internationalism than all the fleets and armies of men. When we reflect that though gagged and shackled for centuries it could not be extinguished, we may pardon much of its excesses and feel sure of its ultimate adjustment to the scheme of the world's progress. But this end will not be easily or peaceably attained. For race must collide with race ere their jarring contentions can be disposed of. Not all the peace congresses of history can prevent it. It is the bitter fruit of the oppressions and tyrannies of the past, and it is as true to-day as in the days of Sinai that the sins of the fathers are visited upon their children.

England long ago realized the indomitable persistency of racial characteristics and accommodated her policies to it. She is the great mother of colonies, because she governs subject nations by respecting their customs, prejudices, and religions. She suppresses their lawlessness only, and invites their participation in public affairs. The fruits of her wise and tolerant administration of her subject peoples were made abundantly manifest in the late war, when their soldiers flocked to her standards and their treasuries were placed at her disposal.

Internationalism would be a menace if it were not an unattainable dream. Through no such agency can wars be banished from the affairs of men. Bolshevik Russia asserts the cause of internationalism and would establish it through the annihilation of every class of men save the lowest, least efficient, and most degraded. Let us credit the infamous creed with consistency, for it has blazed the only path along which internationalism is possible of attainment. When it is once secured, problems of peace and war, like all others affecting humanity, will have perished along with the nations concerned in them.

Ours is a material world and man is a fighting animal. His contests are not circumscribed by the periods and limitations of physical conflict. Bernhardi was not far wrong when he said that war was the continuation of foreign policy by nondiplomatic means. And foreign policy now concerns itself with commercial intercourse more largely than with purely political problems. In 1916 the allied powers conferred at Paris regarding the need for a common policy to be asserted in the "war after the war," when commercial interest would again be paramount, with Germany reaching out for the markets of the world. They outlined a program of offense and defense, drastic, pitiless, and exclusive, to be observed at all times and subject to change only by common consent. To that policy the United States took prompt exception, and it was, therefore, postponed to a more convenient season.

But the war of arms is practically over. International commerce, languishing during the war period, is again the prize of the nations, who will strive for it in eager and unremitting competition. Their rivalries and jealousies are everywhere developing. French exclusions, British embargoes, Japanese advantages of location, renewed American clamor for domestic duties of higher and yet higher proportions, on the one hand, are confronted on the other by the diminution of markets through the overthrow of Russia, the weakening of credit, and the ostracism of Germany. The manufacturing powers are facing the dawn of their fiercest and most relentless industrial contention for the world's markets and materials. War successfully appealed to their altruism; but this contest will not witness its survival of the armistice unless all of the signs of the hour be misleading. This quotation from a recent article in Harpers Magazine tells the story:

> The war has not changed the old system of international trade relations. We are far from the era of free trade between nations and the open door in colonies. Unless reaction goes so far as to cause a revolution, and if economic conditions in other countries are like those in France, we may expect the third decade of the twentieth century to accentuate the tendency to high protective tariffs and to governmental backing of large enterprises in marketing goods in secondary states, protectorates, and colonies. The industrial effect of France during the war made victory possible, but at the price of a commercial war after peace is signed. And if with peace the world secures a diminution of armaments, international commercial rivalry will be all the more intense.

In the domain of trade we are reentering the same old world that environed us before the war interrupted its activities, and the same rivalries, resentments, practices, underminings, overreachings, and retaliations will accentuate conflicting efforts for securing and maintaining commercial supremacy. These have been the primal source of all the wars of the past two centuries. They will prove the trouble breeders of the future just as surely. This is true, albeit commercial treaties establish reciprocal rights and duties between the nations hereafter as heretofore.

Mr. Courtenay DeKalb, writing for the Atlantic, in December, 1917, graphically declared that—

> We shall find at last that the supreme ends of peace and general prosperity are not attainable in nations that attempt a commercial interlocking while they bristle with bayonets of tariff opposition.

He also asserts that—

> The plan of a league to enforce peace, stripped of its details, is in the direction of unification and denationalization. To carry it out requires the sinking of national aspirations in the will of a controlling central authority, which to become effective must progressively change its scope of world dominance, and that inevitably means the ultimate supremacy of the most aggressive of the represented groups. It is contrary to the fundamental laws of broadly developing life. There is something better than this; something that will preserve the natural tendencies to intellectual growth in the race without requiring military aggressiveness as a national prerogative. That is to introduce the principle of natural trade by taking steps to eliminate the fostering devices on which national aggrandizement depends. It might not be possible to reach every scheme for artificial trade development which will lift its head, but the tariff can be stripped off, and the granting of subsidies and bounties, and all the cruder forms of paternalism. This would at least go far toward the organization of the sisterhood of nations on the true competitive basis of relative inherent skill, knowledge, and ability. In that direction lies the open road to peace and progress. The world may not delude itself; it must take that highway, or accept the principle of the trade war which goes hand in hand with Mars.

This author anticipated the President's declaration of September 26, 1918, that—

> It would be an insincere as well as an insecure peace that does not definitely exclude those economic rivalries which have been the prolific source in the modern world of the plans and passions that produce war.

It is here in the language of still another author that—

> Warm-hearted idealism approaches the colder regions of policies and practice.

I am unable to discover how the pending treaty proposes to exclude economic rivalries, unless the plan is embraced in the 41 articles of part 13 outlining the international labor program. And if these rivalries are not excluded, may we expect any other than a peace which is insincere and insecure?

Article 23 commits the members of the league to the endeavor to "make provision to secure and maintain freedom of communications and of transit and equitable treatment for the commerce of all its members." This clause seems to the junior Senator from Virginia all sufficient for the purpose. I quote his construction of the article:

> By according equitable treatment to the commerce of all members of the league, securing for them freedom of communication and transit, wars occasioned by commercial discrimination and by prohibition of access to the seas will be prevented. This will remove one of the most fertile sources of the wars of the past. Besides, this will greatly facilitate and increase foreign trade and commerce.

My mind would be relieved of an anxious burden if I could accept the cheerful optimism of this assurance, given so clearly and so free from any qualifying limitations. But if I did so, it would still be necessary to inquire whether it did not partially deprive Congress of its power to raise revenue and bring upon its devoted head the vociferous protests of all protectionists. The chairman of the Republican national committee, speaking, doubtless, after prayerful and anxious consultation with his associates whose first anxiety clusters around the next election, has recently demanded a reservation to the treaty safeguarding the tariff-making authority from the sacrilegious hands of any league, and my colleague has expressed himself in similar fashion. Personally I should like to see some uniform system of international customs scientifically prepared and equitably applied, as I would like to enjoy other sadly needed but altogether unattainable blessings. Selfishness, avarice, greed, constitutional restrictions, international jealousies, trade rivalries, resentments, suspicions, and a train of other unlovely but altogether human traits forbid. But I derive some consolation for these unfortunate conditions from Burke's assurance that no government founded solely upon the heroic virtues is possible. "Discontent is the divine mother of progress" and selfishness the driving force of the world. Trade wars and tariff reprisals must go on till human nature shall have been cast in other molds. Of this there is no present possibility. Brooks Adams teaches that trade is the relation between civilizations, and announced the discovery of a law through the agency of which civil progress follows the exchanges. If he is right, the law must persist even in the face of treaty covenants, and peace though sincere must remain insecure.

It will be observed that I am at this time making no analysis of the treaty covenants. I have, indeed, but seldom referred to them. I have made some study of the causes of human strife and the effect of treaty stipulations upon the conditions of war and peace since the commencement of that mighty struggle whose closing scenes make the present year so eventful. They have convinced me, much against my inclinations, that the optimism of those in times past and of those now living regarding the establishment of permanent international relations of any sort, and particularly for the regulation of their political affairs, however high the purpose or propitious the occasion, must prove disappointing. When this occurs, reproaches and recriminations inevitably ensue, and these do not tend to soften asperities or diminish the prospect of collision. My views may be unfounded or imperfect; they may indeed be wholly erroneous; but I hope that they may contribute in some small measure to the solution of our difficult task. Let us perform it reverently and with abundant care, accepting assurances only when they are fortified by the events of the past, and rejecting predictions which can not stand the test of patient, exhaustive analysis.

I am aware that armaments tend to war and that preparedness for defense is apt to be a cover for aggression, that militarism will persist if fleets and armies are to be constructed and maintained as heretofore, and that some method must be devised for minimizing or abandoning them. The world has just had all-convincing experience that armaments are no guaranty of peace, and the argument that the league of nations is the necessary forerunner of disarmaments constitutes a powerful plea for its acceptance. I am also aware that we can not return to the old conditions and expect to avoid the old consequences. And I am as desirous as any colleague now occupying a seat in this Chamber to provide, as far as human foresight can provide, against recurrence by reducing the probabilities of war. Hence this address is not a plea toward treaty rejection. It may be better in operation than it seems in theory. I have read the draft of the league many times, and I am not yet prepared to pass final judgment upon its merits. But I have learned that a league for peace is the unwelcome companion of a peace of force. Their ways are divergent, their objects antagonistic, their details inconsistent. These come to us as one instrument. They are so interblended that familiarity with the whole is essential to an understanding of its parts. It is to me a source of regret that the two could not have been formulated as distinct and separate protocols, a course that its framers would have adopted had the conditions at Versailles made it possible.

The league, inspired by unselfish and uplifting impulses, typifies peace and reconciliation; the treaty, based upon passion and self-interest, embodies suppression, reparation, indemnities, partition, punishment. The league proposes a plan for a new order in world affairs; the treaty perpetuates the old order. The league seeks to reestablish the family of nations along racial and self-determining principles; the treaty applies to the German his own method of indemnities and territorial acquisition. The league would restore Alsace-Lorraine to France and make the episode a warning to the nations; the treaty recognizes and reverses the application of the principle and makes France the aggressor and Germany the victim. The league would abolish militarism and establish international justice; the treaty reenacts militarism by feeding the passions which make war the final arbiter of national differences.

France knows this so well that she has asked for a defensive alliance of Great Britain and America with herself and against Germany. She knows that the treaty bodies forth a transformation scene upon the stage of Europe wherein she and Germany change places with each other, and that time must bring its revenges for Germany as it brought them for her, that peace for the future, like peace for the past, must be transitory so long as one people nursing a sense of injury and race oppression can only hope to satisfy never-ceasing discontents by retaliations which become inevitable when opportunity knocks at the door.

Everyone knows this to be the situation. The treaty is doubtless the best that the conflict of ideals and interests could have produced. It is not the men negotiating it whom we must criticize, but the inexorable conditions which they respectively advocated and encountered.

But its contending elements can not coexist, for they are mutually destructive. If the conditions of the treaty persist, the league will perish. If the covenant survives, the treaty must temper its harsher features to conform with the mission of the league. Both can not endure. In some form the treaty will probably be ratified, and time will determine which of its purposes will survive the other.

I may, however, say in conclusion that my view of a league to secure peace differs fundamentally from that here outlined and submitted to our final judgment. The theory of a league composed of every distinct sovereignty in existence has much to commend it if mutuality of action and of obligation through councils and assemblies be indispensable. But these are cumbrous, slow in operation, and apt to prove disappointing in critical periods when celerity of movement is essential to the accomplishment of its objects. Moreover, they lack direct control of the element of force, which is the ultimate dictator of peace. If I could write a covenant for a league to enforce peace, I would, bearing in mind the arbitration treaties of 1913 and continuing allied association for treaty enforcement, confine it to the English-speaking nations and colonies of the world. Theirs are the institutions of free men, theirs the wealth, the commerce. They are carriers of the sea. They advocate and enforce the impartial administration of justice and of law. They control the armaments and can mobilize the armies that may be needed to enforce the peace between nations. No people would disregard the admonition or reject the counsel of such a league. Its benign influence, the ripe fruit of centuries of experience in self-discipline, which is the parent of self-government, shedding its rays over the habitable globe, guaranteeing protection and extending aid to those not yet able to move unsupported along the pathway of national development, would do more to minimize the danger of war and promote the ways and the arts of peace than any other international understanding the wit of man can devise. And if these nations be true to themselves and to the impulses of their common origin, whatever we may now do or fail to do, these will in time be leagued by destiny for the harmony and well-being of mankind. If they can not save the world, it is past all redemption.

PEACE TREATY AND LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I crave the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments in making some remarks on the treaty of peace and the league of nations, and in making these remarks I shall avoid as far as possible all manner of technical discussion.

The total annual commerce of the world is over $50,000,000,000, and of this our country contributes nearly, if not quite, one-fifth. Our resources and our activities are so vast that they require a world for their necessary development and expansion. We can no longer isolate ourselves in our relations with other countries. Their doors must be open to us, and our doors to them. Modern science has made distant nations our near neighbors. Chaos, stagnation, and distress in one part of the civilized world react upon and ultimately affect other parts of the world, including our own country. There is, in these strenuous modern times, a neighborhood of nations, as well as a neighborhood of individuals. Nations can no longer with safety and immunity say, "I am not my brother's keeper." While our commerce extends to all parts of the world, Europe absorbs upward of one-half of the entirety. Our country has become, and for years has been, the great reservoir of food and raw materials for Europe. Europe has been our greatest market for these products, as well as for the vast products of our varied and manifold industries. We need Europe and Europe needs us. Free access to her markets is an absolute necessity of our industrial and economic life, and her capacity to absorb our products is contingent upon the degree of law and order that prevails within her borders. We can not, therefore, isolate ourselves from, or afford to be oblivious to, the conditions prevailing or likely to prevail in the realms across the sea.

Mr. President, we embarked in the Great War not because Germany had invaded our country, but because Germany had invaded our commerce and trade in European waters. She had made a dead line around Great Britain and France and in the North Sea, and parts of the Mediterranean, and decreed that across this line no American shipping should be allowed to pass. She proceeded to enforce this decree by a most ruthless and barbarous submarine warfare, in utter defiance of our rights and in utter defiance of all international law. As a demonstration of what she could do and intended to do with her submarines, she had long before this decree sunk the Lusitania. This attitude and course of Germany made it plain as never before that she was not only a great menace to England, France, and Italy, but also a most dangerous menace to America. Could she have subdued our Allies, our country would have been at her mercy and would have been her next victim, for it was evident that she aspired to world dominion. It was, moreover, clear to all who looked beneath the surface of things that not only was there a menace in her deeds and practices, but there was even a greater menace in her system of government; for it was only such a system that could breed such practices and such terrors. It was only such a system that, without valid cause, could embark on such a war and ride roughshod with fire and sword over a little country whose neutrality it was pledged to protect. The evident eagerness for the war, the campaign of terror and destruction in Belgium and northern France, all stamped Germany as the juggernaut among nations. She was emphatically a most dangerous menace, in spirit and in deed, to the entire world.

When our country embarked in the Great War nearly all our people, at least all good Americans, believed we had valid grounds for our action and were fully justified. Had we failed to meet the Teutonic challenge we should have been regarded as a poltroon among the nations of the world; and, more than that, it seemed apparent that without our intervention Germany could not have been thoroughly vanquished or a substantial peace brought to a distracted world—a peace vital to the future prosperity of our country.

Washington's Farewell Address, which we all cherish and of which we are not unmindful, did not deter us from embarking in the war and cooperating with the Allies in its energetic prosecution. Had he and the other great men of his day been with us at the time we entered the war, he and they would undoubtedly have fully justified our course. The founders of our Government could not foresee, indeed none of us could foresee, that in the first quarter of the twentieth century we would be sending an army of 2,000,000 men to Europe to participate with England, France, and Italy in curbing and suppressing the great ambition and menace of Germany. There was a most effective "entangling alliance" between our soldiers and the soldiers of England and France that brought the enemy to his knees and forced him to seek an armistice and to sue for peace.

Mr. President, our brave and heroic soldiers demonstrated to the world that they were second to none in courage, in initiative, in endurance, and in all the qualities that go to make first-class fighting men. They demonstrated that the American people were not, as many in Europe supposed, a mere nation of money-makers who worshiped Mammon so intensely that they had lost all stomach for war. The American soldier "went over the top" with a spirit and alacrity that surprised even the veterans of England and France. The glory of Cantigny, of Chateau-Thierry, of St. Mihiel, and of the Argonne is his forever, and the graves of our fallen heroes who made the supreme sacrifice bear mute witness to his bravery and heroism.

American soldiers have fought on the frozen fields of Canada, on the arid plains and tablelands of Mexico, on the shores of torrid Cuba, and in the distant Philippine Islands, but of all the wars they have been engaged in the war that terminated on the plains and hills of Argonne last November was beyond any question the most glorious—glorious because of the enemy encountered, glorious because of the issues involved, and, above all, glorious in its ultimate outcome.

It now remains for us to reap the full fruits of their victory. It has not only been our business to vanquish the enemy, but it is now our task to see that he stays vanquished and that he ceases to be a menace to the peace of the world. Unless this task is accomplished we shall have failed to score a complete victory. To undertake to secure the full fruits of our victory in Europe will involve a dangerous "entangling alliance" to no greater extent than was involved in our participation in the war.

If any great cyclone of war shall arise in the future it will come from Europe and not from the Western Hemisphere; and to say that our country would have no interest in preventing such a war would be contending for the isolation of our country from the rest of the civilized world.

The entire world, civilized and uncivilized, is vitally interested in preventing the recurrence of such a war as ended in November last or of any war akin to it. Our country has scored a great victory in war; it now remains to score a great victory of peace. Nearly three centuries ago the great English poet, Milton, declared:

> Peace hath her victories,
> No less renowned than war.

A treaty of peace has been negotiated between Germany on the one part and the United States, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan on the other part. The treaty has been ratified by Germany, and Great Britain, and I think by France and Italy. By its terms it is now in force between those countries, and it is now before the Senate for ratification.

It is unlike any other treaty resulting from and concluding a war in the past, in that it contains provisions for a league of nations to enforce and maintain peace. No similar attempt has found its way into any former treaty. The treaty may be likened to a judgment, and the league may be regarded as the executive officer, the marshal, if you please, to enforce the judgment. The avowed purpose of the league is to relieve the world of the terrors of war in the future, and with this purpose, I take it, we can have no controversy.

The question for us to consider is whether our country should participate in carrying out this purpose, and, if so, to what extent and subject to what limitations.

I have already pointed out how vitally our country is interested in the peace of Europe, the storm center of future wars. To have our economic, industrial, and commercial relations with Europe severed by the convulsions of a great war within her borders would divest us of much of our vitality, would confine us mainly to the Western Hemisphere, and commercially we would, to a large extent, be a Samson shorn of his locks. Europe is our greatest customer, and it is for the interest of our country to maintain that customer on a high purchasing level. This may seem a sordid argument, but, thank God, our people are not all sordid. The great mass of the American people, having enjoyed the blessings of a free government, are vitally interested in and sympathize with the downtrodden people of Europe, and realize that of all the calamities and agonies that can befall them the greatest is that of war.

I confess that I can not take much stock in the "entangling-alliance" argument. When we sent our soldiers to Europe to participate in the war with the Allies, we jumped that fence. It seems to me that was to a considerable extent an entanglement in European affairs. And having entangled ourselves to that extent, why should we not entangle ourselves to secure the full results of our victory and avoid being entangled in another war? But it is claimed by some overnervous people that the league will breed war. Can any sane man believe that if the representatives on the league of the United States, Great Britain, France, and Italy, through the machinery of the league, should forbid Germany to enter upon a war, Germany in the face of this admonition would venture to cross the Rubicon? The league is the first concrete and substantial effort that has been made looking to the prevention of war and the maintenance of international peace. It may be that some of the provisions are crude and vague and could well be improved upon. We can hardly expect perfection in a first effort in a new field. Time may develop the necessity for amendments, and provision should be made therefor in the covenants. I do not care to enter upon a technical discussion of the provisions relating to the league; that has been covered by many other Senators.

Mr. President, to my mind the chief question is, Are any of the provisions relating to the league unconstitutional or beyond the pale of the treaty-making power? I take it that the treaty-making power extends to all subjects not inhibited by the mandates of the Constitution and not counter to powers expressly vested in Congress. The paragraph of the Constitution conferring upon the President and the Senate the power to make treaties contains in itself no limitations. The Constitution declares:

> This Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made or which shall be made under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land.

But the "authority of the United States" is the authority conferred by the Constitution in its entirety, and nothing more. The war-making power, with the power to raise and support armies, is expressly vested in Congress, and in no other body or authority. No one, I take it, will for a moment seriously contend that the President and the Senate—a part only of the law-making power—can, by treaty, divest Congress, in its entirety, of its constitutional war power. So far as article 10 of the covenant would tend to embroil our country in war without the consent of Congress, it is manifestly outside of the pale of the treaty-making power. While it might be said that the league should take judicial notice of the limitations of our Constitution and construe article 10 in the light of those limitations, it is better for us, and much better for the league, to qualify that article by suitable reservation or disavowal.

There are those who maintain that article 10 does not militate against the war-making power of Congress; but as this is a matter over which there is much doubt and controversy, the safer course is to remove all doubt and controversy by express declarations or reservations.

The last provision of article 1 should in some form be eliminated or neutralized; the right of withdrawal from the league should be unconditional.

The contention that article 12 might compel us to submit to arbitration such domestic questions as immigration or other vital subjects is, I think, to a great extent obviated or neutralized by the second paragraph of article 13 and the eighth paragraph of article 15. But, in any event, if there is any serious doubt on this subject, it can be covered by suitable reservation, and so can the matter of the Monroe doctrine, if there is any doubt about that.

Except in one particular, to which I shall hereafter refer, the provisions of the treaty, considering its vast scope, seem to me just, fair, and reasonable.

Alsace and Lorraine are, as a matter of retributive justice, restored to France. The Saar Basin, with its coal mines, is placed in the control of France for a period of 15 years, as a substitute and recompense for the coal mines of northern France destroyed by the vandalism of Germany.

The Danish portions of Schleswig are, through a plebiscite, to be restored to Denmark. Poland is again resuscitated and established as an independent nation, with its boundaries fixed on the north, the west, and a part of the south, and is given an outlet to the sea by way of Danzig. Owing to present conditions in Russia, the eastern and southeastern boundaries could not well be established in the treaty.

The Czecho-Slovak State is recognized and its boundaries with Germany established.

The reparation provisions of the treaty, in view of the havoc and destruction wrought by Germany, are just, though not ample, but probably all that Germany can stand or that can well be realized from her at this time or in the near future.

Among the most important and valuable provisions of the treaty are the disarmament and demobilization provisions. If these are carried out, conscription is abolished and Germany will be left with a standing army of only 100,000 men, composed of volunteers under a 12-year enlistment, and a standing navy of 6 battleships, 6 light cruisers, 12 destroyers, and 12 torpedo boats, with a personnel of 15,000 men, volunteers under a 12-year enlistment. This will reduce her military and naval power to a minimum and for years render her less dangerous than formerly as a belligerent.

These provisions of the treaty are of great value to the German people in relieving them of conscription and in relieving them of the burden of maintaining a vast military and naval establishment, as in the past. It will enable them to devote their energies to industrial instead of military activities, and it will enable them nore easily to meet the reparation requirements of the treaty. While the German people may feel that the terms of the treaty are in many particulars very harsh and exacting, they can not help realizing, unless they are still possessed of a mania for war, military autocracy, and world power, that a great blessing has been conferred upon them by relieving them from the extensive military service in vogue in the past and the burdens of taxation incident thereto. But, more than this, they are relieved of army rule, and can more easily establish and maintain a freer and more democratic form of government than they have had heretofore. This will be the main gain of the German people from the war into which they were driven by their military autocracy. I hope the German people will have the good sense to avail themselves of this feature in the body of the treaty.

Poland, dismembered and divided by Germany, Austria, and Russia many years ago, has by the terms of the treaty, after years of suffering and brutality at the hands of those powers, been restored to its own people and established as an independent nation, to work out its own salvation on its own lines and for its own people, relieved from the incubus of the three despoilers. This is one of the grand results of the war that we can not help but rejoice in. America has been able to make some return for the help Poland's sons, Pulaski and Kosciusko, rendered our country in the Revolutionary War. The wrongs and injustice of more than a century have been in part atoned for and righted. Poland has in it the elements of a strong and vigorous nation, imbued with the elements of true democracy, and she will prove to be a safeguard and barrier between military autocracy on the west and south and Bolshevism on the east; and she will be able to stay German commercial attrition to the eastward, and to that extent be a relief to Russia.

The only part of the treaty, aside from the covenants of the league, that I can not be reconciled to are the provisions relating to Shantung, articles 156, 157, and 158. This concession, as I am informed, was made with much reluctance and misgiving. As I understand it, the genesis of the matter is this:

In the early part of the war, long before we came to the relief of the Allies, England and France were sorely pressed, especially England, on account of her unpreparedness, and they were seeking help and allies in all directions. As an inducement for Japan to join them, they agreed, in substance, that if Japan would capture the German acquisitions in Shantung and expel the Germans therefrom and in general support the Allies, Japan should, on the conclusion of peace, be subrogated to the rights of Germany. It was this agreement that confronted England and France at the peace table and prevented them from joining the President in opposing these provisions of the treaty. Japan was insistent, and China protested. I understand that Japan, while as a matter of pride insisting on the provisions of the treaty, yet, nevertheless, through her representatives, verbally agreed that within a year or two she would restore the concession to China; that a written memorandum was made of this verbal promise, but it was not signed by the representatives of Japan. Japan ought to clear up the matter and give satisfactory assurance that she will within a reasonable time return all the German Shantung concessions to China. It will never do to leave Japan in permanent control of this Province, with full right of exploitation. It would tend to put her in full control of the East, and ultimately lead to the dismemberment of China.

How fortunate we are at this juncture to have a big American base in the East, in the Philippine Islands, from which our voice can be effectively heard and our influence felt in oriental affairs! And now, when we are all rightfully exercised over Shantung, it is well to recall how a few years ago an effort was made in Congress, which came near succeeding, to cast the Philippine Islands adrift and leave them to shift for themselves, and the agitation for this is still pending. This Shantung affair ought to admonish us not to leave the Philippine Islands as a lure for similar exploitation. The relinquishment of Heligoland, when made, seemed a small matter to England, but it turned out to be a great embarrassment and handicap to her naval operations in the late war.

As the war which closed on the plains of Argonne last November was in all its course and aspects the greatest, the most terrific, and the most destructive of lives and property in all the known annals of time, so the treaty of peace which has resulted therefrom is the most comprehensive and the most far-reaching in all its details of all treaties, modern or ancient, It was a Herculean task to extinguish and overlap the great crater of the war. As the grounds covered by the treaty are vast, it leaves a large field for criticism for those who are so inclined.

My first thought was that the covenants of the league should be separated from the main treaty and considered apart therefrom, but on examination I find that this can not well or properly be done. So many of the provisions of the treaty rest upon and are entwined with the league covenants for their initiation or ultimate performance that such segregation would tend, directly or indirectly, to destroy or neutralize valuable and important provisions of the treaty and render some of its provisions abortive. So, to my mind, the only safe course to pursue is to consider and act on the covenants in connection with the other provisions of the treaty.

There has been so much technical and learned discussion of the covenants that I have avoided entering that field. I have merely in a brief manner pointed out some of the objectionable features and have suggested how these can be obviated and overcome. I have not groped around to find objections to defeat the treaty, for I am imbued with the faith that fundamentally the general purpose of the league is sound and fully warranted.

Little as we looked for it in 1914, we were, after all, contrary to the admonitions of the fathers of our country, "entangled" in a great war, not in our own borders, not anywhere in the Western Hemisphere, but 3,000 miles away, in the very heart of Europe. It seems to me that our country is, and ought to be, as much interested in preventing the recurrence of any similar war as in entering the war in the first instance. We ought to be as much interested in securing permanent peace results from the war as in making war. It surely can not be more dangerous to "entangle" us in securing a permanent peace in Europe than to "entangle" us in a war in Europe.

Aside from the facts I have heretofore mentioned, there are some facts and circumstances which at this juncture seem to me of the highest importance and worthy of our consideration. The events of the last seven or eight months have shown to us what a great spirit of unrest, bordering in some instances on anarchy, prevails throughout the civilized world as an aftermath of the Great War; and our country is not entirely free from this spirit of unrest. Organized society seems in many places to be in a soluble state, especially in the Old World. Let us not be blind to this condition nor seek to minimize it, but look it squarely in the face. What is needed is to restore law and order throughout the civilized world, and in this problem our own country is interested in common with the other great civilized nations of the world. A permanent and lasting peace, leading to a full revival of the industrial and commercial activities of the world, will tend to cure this spirit of unrest. Where food and work at good wages abound there is little thought of revolution. There can be no such revival where war clouds are on the horizon. Remove the terrors of war—the poor and lowly suffer most therefrom—and mankind will breathe easier and will soon be born to a new life and to a new spirit. Would it not be sad to think that our country should stand aloof from such purpose and such mission?

PROPAGANDA AND REPRESSION.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I desire to make a very brief statement bearing upon a memorial which I send to the desk and which I ask to have printed at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

47 UNIVERSITY PLACE,
New York, July 10, 1919.

To the CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

The undersigned ministers of the Gospel, deprecating the prevalent tendency to oppose the spread of anarchism by lawless and violent methods, respectfully invite attention to the following statement, which has already been addressed to the public:

"While the horror of the latest bomb outrage is still fresh in the minds of Americans, we would call attention to the menace of the growth of the spirit of violence, bitterness, and unreason among our people. We sincerely trust that the criminals responsible for these outrages will be discovered and punished by due process of law. Terrorism must be given no room in our land. But to eliminate this menace it is not enough merely to join in the hue and cry against anarchy and Bolshevism; we must also study the economic and mental factors which make the background for this half-insane type of terrorism. A common resolve to abide by our time-honored principles of free discussion and the regular processes of constitutional government is the need of the hour.

"Unhappily violence, recently employed in the name of patriotism, has been allowed to go unpunished by the authorities, and has even been praised by leaders in Government and in the press. In New York on May day peaceful meetings were attacked, the Call Building was raided, and innocent men and women suffered serious injuries. Many voices openly praised such treatment of 'the reds.' But condonations of violence lead to contempt of law and strengthen those who counsel revolution.

"To meet the situation we urge—

"1. That all men and women of good will set themselves to influence public opinion through every available medium against lawless measures by whomsoever they may be employed.

"2. That they resolve to see that fair hearings and just trials are given to men, irrespective of their political or economic opinions, so that it may be truly said that in America no man's case, be he an I. W. W. or a Bolshevist or the most reactionary conservative, is prejudged by an appeal to popular feeling; and in particular that they set themselves against the counsels of hate, whose effect upon the rising generation can only be to pile up future disaster for mankind.

"3. Since, in the judgment of the Attorney General of the United States, existing laws against criminal terrorism are adequate and since free discussion is essential for the exposure of economic and political errors, that the attempt be abandoned to coerce minority opinion, so long as it does not promote disorder, and to defeat social change by repressive legislation.

"As ministers of the Christian church and as citizens of this liberty-honoring Republic, we plead for faith in reason, good will, and fairness to oppose the forces of bitterness and violence in our national life."

Rev. George Alexander, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, New York; Rev. Charles R. Brown, dean of the School of Religion, Yale University; Rev. Henry E. Cobb, West End Collegiate Reformed Church, New York; Rev. Henry Sloane Coffin, Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York, assistant professor, Union Theological Seminary; Rev. Harry E. Fosdick, minister in First Presbyterian Church, professor, Union Theological Seminary; Rev. William P. Merrill, Brick Presbyterian Church, New York; Very Rev. Howard C. Robbins, dean of Cathedral St. John the Divine, New York; Rev. William Austin Smith, editor of the Churchman; Rev. Ralph W. Sockman, Madison Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church; Rev. Frank Mason North, secretary Board of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, president of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America; Very Rev. Hughell Fosbroke, dean of the General Theological Seminary, New York; Rev. Arthur C. McGiffert, president Union Theological Seminary.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, this memorial urges that all men of good will set themselves against violence and lawlessness and against all the counsels of hate. It urges toleration, freedom of discussion, and the abandonment of the attempt to coerce minority opinion and to defeat social change by repressive legislation. Coming as it does from men distinguished both for their intellectual leadership and their patriotic devotion to our free institutions, it is worthy of our most careful consideration.

Senators, none of us can fail to realize that we are here charged with unprecedented responsibilities while the Republic is passing through these most critical and dangerous days of her whole history. Upon the decision of the next few months depends the future of our institutions, dedicated to the exalted purposes expressed in our Constitution, and perhaps the fate of free republican government everywhere throughout the world.

On a number of occasions during the last session of the Congress I urged the repeal of the repressive, oppressive, un-American espionage act. Believing as I do in free discussion, in the essential rationality of popular government, in the all but infallible judgment of the masses of the people when the processes of the common mind are allowed to operate undisturbed, I deemed it essential that when a treaty was to be submitted involving all that we hold dear, pledging the blood of our youth in a new armed coalition which guarantees the rearranged map and an arbitrary redivision of a world of important parts of a treaty fixing the obligations which are to be fastened upon future generations, it was but fair to ask that the whole case be fairly submitted, that the people be allowed to freely and fearlessly discuss the facts and to reach the conclusion for themselves as to whether this proposed plan was designed to serve the ends of royalty, of imperialists, of reactionaries, of special interests, or whether it was devised to secure the advancement of the masses of mankind.

I deemed it dangerous at such a time as this to clothe interested Government officials with unlimited and arbitrary powers, to close the public forums to discussion and debate, to intimidate speakers, to censor the cables, to control the press, to exclude publications from the mails when as never before full and accurate information seemed to me to be indispensable for the preservation of our liberties. We asked, I say, only for a fair hearing upon this falsely named league of nations' plan at the great bar of public opinion, but this has been denied.

It is the apparent purpose of the administration to foist this scheme upon the people by a well thought-out campaign, cleverly combining propaganda with repression.

In certain cities it is impossible to hold a public meeting without the permission of the police. I offer in support of this statement a letter which I ask to have printed at this point as a part of my remarks:

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC SAFETY, BUREAU OF POLICE,
Philadelphia, June 20, 1919.

(Meeting June 26, 1919.)

HOWARD L. FUSSELL, Esq., Attorney at Law,
505 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of 19th instant, in which you ask permission for a meeting to be conducted at South Broad Street Theater at 8 o'clock on Thursday evening, the 26th instant, to be addressed by Senator France, of Maryland, Hon. D. F. Malone, of New York City, and Rabbi Magnes, of New York City, on "The preservation of American liberties," would say:

Permission is hereby granted for the proposed meeting to take place, providing it is properly and lawfully conducted, but the speakers in their remarks must comply with our laws and ordinances and with the proclamations issued by the President of the United States prohibiting treasonable or seditious utterances.

I have notified the Lieutenant of the fifth district to this effect, and instructed him to see that above conditions are strictly complied with.

Yours, respectfully,

JAMES ROBINSON, Superintendent.

Mr. FRANCE. I desire now to call attention to another illustration of repressive measures in the form of the suppresssion by the Department of Justice of a legitimate publication. I read from the Review, a periodical published in New York, the number of July 26, 1919, volume 1, No. 11, page 237:

The Century Co. has been informed by a representative of the Department of Justice that action will be brought to prevent the further distribution and printing of Thomas F. Millard's "Democracy and the Eastern Question," because of confidential matters it contains. What these matters are we have no means of knowing. The book was informingly reviewed in these columns (July 12) by Prof. W. W. Willoughby, whose residence during the last four years in the Far East and close study of its problems from a peculiarly advantageous position excellently qualified him to point out the striking importance of Mr. Millard's work. Prof. Willoughby's paper has already created considerable interest among those who appreciate the gravity attending our relations in the Orient, especially with respect to Shantung.

I desire now to read an interesting editorial upon this statement in the Century. This editorial does not come from a Republican paper. It comes from one of the strongest Democratic papers of the country, a paper which up until this time has been a real supporter of the administration, the Baltimore Sun, of Baltimore, Md. This is the editorial, and it might be well for the absent Democratic Senators to read it for their edification in to-morrow's RECORD:

[Editorial in the Baltimore Sun, Saturday, July 26, 1919.]

AGAIN THE CENSOR.

From the Review we learn that the Century Co. has been informed by a representative of the Department of Justice that action will be brought to prevent the further distribution and printing of Thomas F. Millard's "Democracy and the Eastern Question," because of confidential matters it contains.

What excuse under heaven can be presented in justification of this action? From the suppression of newspapers the Government moves onward to the suppression of books. Not on the ground of immorality—there is nothing in "Democracy and the Eastern Question" that would make blush the cheeks of the daintiest maiden. Not on the ground that it would interfere with the progress of the war—the war is over. Not even on the ground that it preaches subversive social doctrines—Mr. Millard's book has nothing to do with Bolshevism. But on the strange and mystifying ground that it contains confidential matters.

What possible confidential matters can a book on China and Japan, written by a man who, although he intensely dislikes Japan, is recognized as an authority on eastern questions—what possible confidential matters that the United States Government has a right or should care to object to can such a book contain? This Government has no secret treaties. It boasts of openly arriving at its covenants with other powers. It boasts of its belief in free speech. What has it to be ashamed or afraid of?

"Democracy and the Eastern Question" was reviewed in the Evening Sun of July 5. Our reviewer found it a bitter but forceful denunciation of Japan's course in China. He reviewed at the same time a defense of Japan's course by a Japanese writer. There has been no attempt to suppress the latter book. Is anti-Japanese propaganda to be prohibited and Japanese propaganda encouraged?

The censorship was supposed to end with the war. It is bad enough in war; it is intolerable in peace. Its characteristic stupidity is evidenced in this case by the fact that the suppression took place after the book had been on the market for two or three months and widely distributed. We hope the Century Co. will test the right of the Department of Justice to interfere with the printing and sale of this book in the courts.

That is an editorial from a Democratic paper. Commenting upon this editorial, the Baltimore News, one of the great independent papers of the South, goes on further in the discussion of the question of censorship, and I shall read into the RECORD this editorial from the Baltimore News of July 26, 1919, entitled "Censorship, indeed":

[Editorial from the Baltimore News, July 26, 1919.]

CENSORSHIP, INDEED.

Our highly esteemed Democratic contemporary discovers that the censorship is still in operation; that it is directed toward the repression of public information and discussion of international politics, particularly in their relation to national policies of other nations. A book on Japanese-Chinese relations is about to be suppressed because somewhat of the information it contains is of "confidential" character.

Does our contemporary really think this the first instance of censorship in this direction? Does any day go by that its copy desk doesn't handle dispatches bristling with intimations of a censorship at work to help the league of nations propaganda? How much comes in to our contemporary concerning the true situation in eastern Europe, a very considerable section of the world, whose future has now been so admirably settled on paper that we can afford to guarantee its permanence even by arms, if need be?

If our contemporary will look carefully through its files of the past few months, it will find there abundant evidence that the censorship to keep this Nation in the dark has been at work right along, and that it is more concerned to keep the Senate in the dark than the public. This, because the Senate has the greater need of the information, as a body that wants to make immediate and official use of it. If our contemporary will look very hard, perhaps it can find evidences that, so far as the Senate is concerned, the President is not even relegating the suppression of information to subordinates. He does it himself. Witness the many unanswered Senate resolutions on his desk that beg for official light on the problems officially before it. Witness the French treaty, that the Senate can not ignore, but which, as to text and to purpose, it must continue to consider in the light only of what the President has said unofficially concerning it; this being, in May, that it was simply an agreement to do in a specific instance what we would be bound in general to do under the league covenant, and, in July, that it was simply an interim arrangement.

Senators, if the purposes of this treaty are compatible with our national traditions and purposes, why is it that its proponents must use methods which are out of harmony with the spirit of free institutions and violate the specific provisions written by the fathers into the Constitution of our country?

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened and (at 4 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, July 31, 1919, at 12 o'clock meridian.

Earl M. Rees.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, July 29, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, impart unto us the skill, fortitude, and courage to cast out the demon we call pessimism, which infests our hearts and brings misery and sorrow to the world. Help us, on the other hand, to fill our souls with optimism, that we may have larger faith and confidence in Thee and our fellow men.

For in spite of the punch-bell honesty in our street cars, railroads, and business life we may be sure that in every great crisis men will rise to the exigencies of the hour, in the political, moral, and religious life, as our brave men on the field of battle flinched not from their duty and won a signal victory for liberty, fair play, and justice. So help us to depend upon them now, to stand for those great principles in the hour of the reconstruction of the world. Thus by truth and right and justice guide us. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2622. An act to provide necessary commissioned personnel for the Army until June 30, 1920;

S. 2236. An act relating to affidavits required by the act entitled "An act to extend protection to the civil rights of members of the Military and Naval Establishments of the United States engaged in the present war";

S. 2595. An act to extend the time for the construction of the Main Street Bridge across the Arkansas River between the cities of Little Rock and Argenta, Ark.; and

S. 2594. An act to extend the time for the construction of the Broadway Street Bridge across the Arkansas River between the cities of Little Rock and Argenta, Ark.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the House adjourns on Saturday, the 2d day of August, it stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian, Tuesday, the 9th day of September.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1361) further extending the time for the commencement and completion of the bridge or bridges authorized by an act entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the Dauphin Island Railway & Harbor Co., its successors or assigns, to construct and maintain a bridge or bridges, or viaducts, across the water between the mainland, at or near Cedar Point, and Dauphin Island, both Little and Big; also to dredge a channel from the deep waters of Mobile Bay into Dauphin Bay; also to construct and maintain docks and wharves along both Little and Big Dauphin Islands," approved June 18, 1912, as extended by an act approved June 30, 1916.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 2622. An act to provide necessary commissioned personnel for the Army until June 30, 1920; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 2236. An act relating to affidavits required by the act entitled "An act to extend protection to the civil rights of members of the Military and Naval Establishment of the United States engaged in the present war"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege, and ask that I may proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes or does he speak to his rights?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will not take the hour that I am naturally entitled to——

The SPEAKER. The Chair asked only to know whether to put the question.

Mr. TREADWAY. I rise to the question of personal privilege, so that there will be no question about that.

In this morning's Philadelphia Press, of which I hold a clipping in my hand, the following heading appeared:

MOORE assails TREADWAY—Pennsylvanian says Bay State man would not be missed from party.

That is the press notice to which I take exception, Mr. Speaker, in view of the colloquy that took place in the House yesterday. The colloquy referred to appears on pages 3263 and 3266. I made some very brief remarks in relation to the bill then under consideration, the "repeal of the soda-water tax," which remarks appear on page 3266. The coloquy which evidently occasioned the mistake in the Philadelphia Press appears on page 3263, where the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON] entered into some rather lengthy and disparaging statements in reference to each other and to party affairs, and so forth. My remarks subsequently made were much more peaceable, and I was endeavoring to show that the colloquy between the two gentlemen to which I have referred was the result of the hot weather rather than the result of any personal irritation between two such distinguished Members of the House as those engaged in that dispute.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield. The gentleman from Texas himself takes plenty of time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not stating a question of privilege.

Mr. TREADWAY. The Chair has the right to rule, and not the gentleman from Texas, as to whether I am proceeding in order or not. I decline to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the headlines referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts constitute a question of privilege. Of course, the gentleman from Massachusetts must confine himself to his question.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, my desire is to call attention to the error which was very plainly made in the lines which I have read from the Philadelphia Press, and to say that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] did not assail me nor did the Pennsylvanian say that the Bay State man would not be missed from the party. I trust that my party loyalty is sufficiently well known to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] so that such a question as that need never enter his mind or enter any discussion of his upon the floor when he is having a colloquy with such a distinguished Member as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON] or anyone else.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I confirm the gentleman's statement. No reference was made to the gentleman from Massachusetts, who merely endeavored to act as a peacemaker and who unfortunately has received the usual penalty that comes to a peacemaker—that of being hit with a brick after the colloquy is over.

Mr. TREADWAY. A brick in the Philadelphia Press.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Purely an error, not of the correspondent, whose report was accurate, perhaps, but of the blue-penciler up at home, who, after all, is the dictator who determines what shall be published. The gentleman from Massachusetts is entirely too valuable a Member to be lost to the Republican Party.

Mr. TREADWAY. Of course we all realize that the headlines are what attract the most attention in the papers. It is for that reason that I take this opportunity to call attention to the fact that the gentleman did not endeavor to read me out of the Republican Party, and I trust my conduct in the future will be such as to make such an endeavor upon his part absolutely out of the question, even though he be a member of the steering committee, to which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] made reference yesterday. I regard the steering committee as a most excellent body, and so far as I am concerned I am very glad of their advice and assistance in the conduct of our affairs on the floor of the House. With that explanation I yield the floor.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. Would the gentleman regard it as a very serious thing after all to be read out of the Republican Party?

Mr. TREADWAY. I certainly would. This newspaper story is not a very serious matter, but I did think it was worth correcting on the floor of the House.

FIRST LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY IN AMERICA.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas on July 30, 1619, the first session of the first legislative assembly which ever met in America was held at Jamestown (then called James City), Va.; and

Whereas to-morrow, July 30, 1919, will be the three-hundredth anniversary of said event, which may be justly considered as one of the great events in the history of this Republic and the world: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That when this House adjourns to-morrow, July 30, 1919, it do so in commemoration of the three-hundredth anniversary of the first session of the first legislative assembly which ever met in America.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, on page 3239, July 24, I was reported as not voting when I was present at the time and voted "no" on the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Without objection both the Journal and RECORD will be corrected.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, reference was recently made on the floor of the House to the apparent disparagement of the South and Southwest to a pamphlet issued by the Public Health Service of the Treasury Department concerning the percentage of venereal diseases among approximately the second million drafted men, by cities. The pamphlet states that the figures used were furnished by the medical records section of the Surgeon General's Office of the Army. Knowing the white people of our section to be as broad minded and pure hearted as any good Americans who live elsewhere in our country, I made inquiry of the Surgeon General with reference to these statistics in order that it might be known what proportion represented whites and blacks, respectively.

I am in receipt of a reply from Lieut. Col. Albert G. Love, of the Medical Corps, in which he states that no provision was made in this investigation for stating race, or color, or nativity, and that, consequently, it was not possible to say what was the incidence among the white and colored draftees. He does announce, however, that his office has presumed that the high rate for venereal diseases in the Southern States and cities was due to the high rate of venereal diseases among the negro part of the population. He inclosed a reprint of what he denominates the most reliable statistics which the office has, showing the relative rate of incidence in the United States Army of the venereal diseases among white and colored troops. These statistics reveal the fact that in the Army that was mobilized in 1917 the rate for various venereal diseases ranged from four and one-half to two and one-half times as great among colored troops as among white troops.

I think it but fair to the Southern States and cities that this statement should be incorporated in the RECORD in justice to the loyal and red-blooded Americans who live in those sections. No better people reside anywhere and no better soldiers fought in this war for world freedom. The records of their achievements are a permanent testimonial to their patriotism and their lives are in keeping with their splendid performance. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by making a statement in regard to the bill H. R. 6750, the alien deportation bill, which is expected to be called up to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CORRECTION OF A REFERENCE.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill S. 796, which was apparently erroneously referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, may be rereferred to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands. I have the authority of both committees for this request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana asks unanimous consent for the change of reference suggested. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

POINT OF NO QUORUM.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. It is obvious there is no quorum present.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Andrews, Md.	Echols	Kennedy, R. I.	Rayburn

The SPEAKER. Three hundred Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

REFERENCE OF A BILL.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to refer the bill H. R. 416 from the Committee on Agriculture to the Committee on Public Lands——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman some other time.

Mr. RAKER. All right.

The SPEAKER. Under the special rule for to-day, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the select committee [Mr. GRAHAM].

EXPENDITURES IN THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the report of the Select Committee on Expenditures in the War Department and ask for the reading of the report under the rule, and pending that I would like to ascertain by agreement with the gentleman representing the minority, if possible, whether it is not possible to obviate the reading of the tabulated part attached to the minority report.

Mr. FLOOD. I think it would be all right to read just the report, and not the appendix.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the appendix attached to the minority report may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the reading of the appendix to the minority report be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I think under the rule the first thing is the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report and resolution.

The majority and minority reports were read.

[For majority and minority reports see pp. 3268 to 3279 proceedings of Monday, July 28.]

Mr. WALSH (interrupting the reading). Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege affecting the rules and procedure of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. The gentlemen submitting the minority views have not conformed to the rules of the House, in that they have included excerpts from testimony and from documents and letters which are not the views of the minority. The minority report is not a report; simply an opportunity for the minority members of the committee to express their views. If the Chair will consult volume 4 of Hinds' Precedents, page 946, section 4607, he will see that where the question was raised before, during the consideration of the Coeur d'Alene investigation, the Speaker ordered expunged from the RECORD extraneous matters which were not in the nature of the views of the minority. He stated at that time:

> The Chair will state that he has ordered the Clerk to strike from the minority views those things which are not strictly the views of the minority. The Chair will advise the gentleman from Virginia that his instructions to the Clerk are that the views should not include arguments and testimony. * * * The committee has the right to make its own report; there is no doubt about that; but the views of the minority are not a report. * * * The Chair is clear, if called upon to rule, that he has the right to direct the Clerk to expunge everything except the views of the minority. The argument which has just been submitted by the gentleman from Virginia to the Chair is a proper argument to make to the committee when making up the majority report.

Now, we have letters here from various officials. We have on page 12 excerpts from the testimony had at a hearing; we have quotations in various matters added to the report as appendices. Clearly they are not the views of the minority, and those matters are proper matters to be presented to the House during the consideration of the matter upon which the report is made, but are not proper matters to be included in the report made upon the measure if submitted by the majority to express their views.

And I submit, Mr. Speaker, to the Chair, that the minority report is not in accordance with the practice of the House nor with the precedent laid down under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the precedent cited by the gentleman from Massachusetts, which seems to be in point. The Chair would be glad to hear from the members of the minority.

Mr. GARRETT. May I inquire just the part of the report to which the point of order was leveled? I was out of the Chamber at the moment.

Mr. WALSH. I regret the gentleman was out of the Chamber. Before I rose I looked over and I thought I saw the gentleman present. The question is directed to all that portion of the minority report which is extraneous matter, that is to say, which does not present the views of the minority, but consists of extracts from testimony and the views and arguments of other persons than those of the minority upon the committee.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, the primary duty of the special committee is not legislative but to ascertain facts and report them to the House. I should imagine that the ruling to which the gentleman has referred as a precedent must have been made upon a proposition coming from a legislative committee of the House of Representatives. Under the resolution creating this special committee it was specifically directed to inquire into and report facts, not legislation. I am at a loss to understand how the committee will at any time, if the point of order made by the gentleman be sustained, be able to comply with its duty under the resolution which created it if it can not in its report state the facts as it was instructed to do.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I will.

Mr. WALSH. How is it that the majority of the committee were enabled to present a report stating the facts without including excerpts from testimony and official documents?

Mr. GARRETT. Of course, there is a contention as to whether or not the majority of the committee in all respects stated facts. But leaving that aside and discussing the parliamentary situation, the majority of the committee expressed themselves in a way in which they chose to express themselves——

Mr. WALSH. And according to the rules.

Mr. GARRETT (continuing). And the way they had a right to express themselves.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the majority of the committee in making the report have a broader latitude than the minority in expressing their views.

Mr. GARRETT. I do not concur with the gentleman in that, but that is not in point. The fundamental point about this is that the committee is charged with the duty of finding facts and reporting them to the House, and if the majority of the committee have alleged as facts certain things, putting it in the language and in the way they choose, and the minority of the committee is not permitted to state the facts as shown by the evidence, choosing that method rather than the ipse dixit alone of the minority, I am at a loss to understand what these investigating committees will accomplish.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARRETT. I will.

Mr. REAVIS. I agree with the gentleman that the committee has a right to report facts, but the gentleman can distinguish between the report of the committee and giving of the testimony by which the facts are proved.

Mr. GARRETT. Unquestionably, Mr. Speaker, the committee charged with the peculiar duty that an investigating committee such as this is charged with would surely have leeway to quote the testimony giving the facts.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. GARRETT. I will.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The majority report itself makes a statement and bases that upon an alleged order of the Quartermaster General. What is the difference between that and hearing evidence? If they can quote orders and evidence—that is, the majority—why can not the minority?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, replying briefly to the contention of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] that the minority of this committee have some peculiar power because it is a special investigating committee and not a committee with power to legislate, I beg to state that unless the resolution appointing the committee conferred some peculiar power upon the minority of this committee they are bound by the rules of the House, which apply to all committees, standing or special.

Now, I submit that the views of the minority upon the committee are not a report. The only portion of the committee that can make a report is the majority of that committee. Under the practice the minority have been permitted to express their views, but they are confined to a somewhat narrower scope than the majority of the committee. If the contention of the gentleman from Tennessee is correct, he would have the matter which is the subject of action by the House thrashed out in the reports of the majority and minority as submitted to the House. The minority must state facts, and shall not be permitted under the rules to inject extracts from testimony and other extraneous matter; and I think, from the reading of the minority report, that the minority have even extended letters which were not considered by the committee—by the majority—as they appear to be of a later date than the date when the hearings were held. The place for these matters to be presented to the House is here upon the floor when the matter is under discussion, and under the rule they are no part, and can be made no part, of the report on the measure.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, let me call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] to a feature of this case which has not heretofore been adverted to in this discussion. While of course technically, as a general proposition, a minority can not file a report, and is as a rule given permission to file only the views of the minority, that is not the present situation. My colleague from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] has called my attention to the terms of the request of the gentleman from Illinois contained in the RECORD of yesterday. I desire to call the attention of the Speaker to the fact that the unanimous-consent request of the gentleman from Illinois gave the minority the right to file a report. That fact makes a very obvious distinction between this case and the case cited by the gentleman from Massachusetts and one that is proper to be adverted to in this connection. Apparently the intention of the gentleman from Illinois was to give to the minority the right to file a report, and not views, so that the report might include the very things to which the gentleman from Massachusetts has objected. The gentleman from Massachusetts will find on page 3268 of the RECORD the following:

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the report from the Select Committee on Expenditures in the War Department may be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and that the minority report from the same committee may be printed accompanying it, if it be filed with the Printing Office before midnight to-night.

The request submitted by the Speaker does not say that the minority may file their views, but it says that the minority report may be filed. That is a very clear indication, so far as this case is concerned, and without adverting to the precedent on which the gentleman from Massachusetts relies, that it was intended that the minority should have powers in this connection that ordinarily it would not enjoy. I cite the Speaker to the RECORD.

Mr. WALSH. That is a distinction between tweedledee and tweedledum. There is no such thing as a minority report under the rules of the House. If anybody got up here and was granted permission to file a minority report, he received permission to file minority views, because under the precedents that is all that is contemplated in this House.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts refer to that citation regarding the minority views in the rules?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. In reply to the tweedledum and tweedledee suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, granting that the gentleman is right in his main contention, yet it is certainly true that the House would have the right by unanimous consent to give the minority members of a committee the right to file a minority report, and when such a minority report is filed by the unanimous-consent action of the House, then the Speaker in determining the proper scope of its contents, would apply to that determination the same principles that he would apply to a majority report.

The point that I make is that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] in his unanimous-consent request used the words "minority report," and not the "views of the minority." His request was unanimously agreed to, and the unanimous action of the House will speak for itself, and by its own terms determine what may be done under the authority which it affords.

Mr. WALSH. According to the gentleman's argument, we could get up here and by unanimous consent amend the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. GARNER. No. You can not by unanimous consent amend these rules.

Mr. WALSH. You can not get permission to do something under one name when the rules contemplate its being done under another.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman would change the rules of the entire House of Representatives.

Mr. WALSH. I have heard the gentleman make an argument on the other side of that question very eloquently when he happended to be in the majority of this House. The rules of the House, section 730, page 319 of the Manual, provide this:

All reports of committees, except as provided in clause 56 of Rule XI, together with the views of the minority, shall be delivered to the Clerk for printing.

That is section 730, page 319 of the Manual, constituting clause 2 of Rule XIII. That is the old citation. I have not a later volume of the Manual at hand. It is clause 2 of Rule XIII.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, relative to this matter of privilege, it seems to me to be entirely immaterial as to just the exact language that appears in the RECORD. I do not now recall just what word was used. When the matter came up originally, as I preferred the request, the minority report part of it was not attached to it, but it was suggested by some one on the floor of the House that it be incorporated in the request and put in the RECORD in that form. But that does not make any difference one way or the other. The point is, can the minority, or the majority for that matter, incorporate in a report, which is supposed to be composed of matters of fact, matters entirely extraneous, and which, even if they relate to the subject matter of the report, are matters that were never heard by the committee? Now, the matters attached to these minority views are matters that were not heard by the committee and not heard in any place. They are matters never brought to the attention of the committee, and yet they are included in this report.

The question suggests itself to me, if the Speaker please, if this minority in this instance can do this, in any future reports of this committee where they report questions of fact that are not satisfactory, perhaps, to a minority of the committee that minority can go out about the town, or here and there about the country, prepare affidavits, get letters, take the ex parte views of anybody on any subject, attach them to the minority report, and have them made matters of record in this House. That certainly is not the idea. The idea is that the committee shall report facts, and nothing more.

Mr. GARNER. But how does the gentleman get around the unanimous consent that was given? The RECORD shows that you gave them unanimous consent to make this report.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. To file a report. Now, this is no report. This includes a lot of matters that are not a report of anything that ever occurred before this committee. If they can report these things they can report the affidavit of John Smith that Secretary Baker does not believe in this kind of policy. That is not a report of anything except some ex parte views of somebody who never came before the committee. Certainly this is not a matter that should be incorporated in this report or in any report. I am not speaking exclusively of minority reports now. I am speaking of a report that deals with matters of fact, which this committee was required to get.

Mr. WALSH. May I direct the Speaker's attention to the precedent which I have cited? The objection there was made to the minority including in their views the printed hearings and the arguments of the attorneys. Now, in this case they have included excerpts from the hearings and they have included arguments not of attorneys but of officials of the War Department and others, some of which, I understood the chairman of the special committee to state, were not considered by the committee during their hearing. Now, Mr. Speaker, the minority of a committee under the rules have the right to file their views, when consent is given, and if you simply call the minority views a report, that does not take it outside the scope of the rule. They must confine themselves to the limits of the rules. Changing the name of a thing does not make any difference. Why, if the gentleman's argument is sound all the minority would have to do in filing a report under consent of the House—and I will say in passing that the consent asked is usually to file a minority report——

Mr. GARNER. No, no.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman says "No, no"; but if you will refresh your recollection on it you will find that when committees divide upon partisan lines usually one Member of the minority gets up and asks unanimous consent that they may have so many days to file a minority report.

Mr. GARNER. Of course, if that minority is not familiar with the rules of the House, it may be a request to file a report; but usually the Member representing the minority understands the rules of the House and asks unanimous consent to file the views of the minority. I challenge the gentleman to refer to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for any period of time he desires. He will find in nine cases out of ten that the request is to file minority views; but in this instance the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] requested unanimous consent—and I know I did my best to keep this side of the House down as far as I could by saying, "Don't interfere with them; that is all this side could get, anyway"—and the gentleman asked unanimous consent that the minority might have until 12 o'clock to file a minority report.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Then the gentleman contends that under that consent the minority might include anything they pleased, as long as the minority considered it a report?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I did not say anything about the quality of the report.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman from Texas yield to me?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has not the floor.

Mr. GARNER. I can not yield. The Chair declines to allow me to yield.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not criticizing the gentleman. The Chair simply makes a suggestion in the interest of saving time. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Nebraska if he desires to be heard.

Mr. REAVIS. I rose only for the purpose of asking some one in charge of the floor to yield to me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is in charge of the floor. The Chair will listen to the gentleman.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I think we have been arguing about things that are largely nonessential. The only question before the Chair is whether or not the power that is given to a committee to report facts carries with it the authority to report the evidence employed to adduce those facts. It is of no concern to me whether the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] asked unanimous consent that the minority be permitted to file a report, and it is equally of no concern to me that the gentleman from Texas said that that was all they could personally ask for themselves. If such privilege was granted, the minority did not exercise it. What they filed is before you, and it is found on page 4 and is headed "Views of the minority," and not a minority report. Now, the question which the Speaker has to determine is merely whether or not the minority can take a great bundle of letters, a great bundle of telegrams, not any of them under oath, never adduced in the hearings before either the subcommittee or the main committee, and then in their views state certain facts and put in this ex parte matter, entirely alien to the record, in support of the facts which they state in their views. Under the rules of the House they are restricted to a statement of facts. I have no doubt that the minority could have gotten many more telegrams and many more letters expressing confidence in the policy of the Secretary of War, but those are not views within the rules. None of those things are sworn to. They are all ex parte. They are all alien to the record, and yet are put in, not in a minority report but in the minority views.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. This is a new question to the Chair, and apparently there has been only one decision upon it, made by Speaker Henderson. That precedent exactly sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Massachusetts. But Speaker Henderson apparently bases his decision on the distinction between the term "views" and the term "report." The distinction is very technical, and the Chair thinks that on such a question the technicalities should be observed equally on both sides. The point made by the gentleman from Virginia that the House by unanimous consent gave the minority the right to file a report instead of views is no more technical than the point decided by Speaker Henderson, and the Chair accordingly is disposed to think that, inasmuch as the excerpts and arguments which are cited in the minority views or the minority report appear to be relevant and such as would be used in argument on the floor of the House, they should be allowed unless the rules of the House clearly exclude them. The Chair has not had time to investigate the full decision of Speaker Henderson and the circumstances and arguments on which he founded his decision, and such further examination might change the opinion of the Chair. But from the decision as quoted in Hinds' Precedents the Chair is disposed to think it reasonable and in the interest of expedition to overrule the point of order. The general purpose of filing minority views is to give them an opportunity to express their reasons against the majority report, and this is the report of a select committee appointed only for the purpose of investigation; and the Chair thinks the minority's right should not be more narrowly limited than the strict interpretation of the precedent requires. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The Clerk completed the reading of the report.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this report was printed in the RECORD of yesterday. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the report and appendices be not again printed in to-day's RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KINKAID). The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the majority and minority reports be not printed again in to-day's RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the rule that has been adopted relative to this particular matter is not entirely clear, and in order to obviate some apparent ambiguities I now ask unanimous consent that the debate on any amendment or amendments that may be offered to this resolution may be under the five-minute rule of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. GARRETT. Reserving the right to object, I think it comes legitimately within the scope if, during the general discussion, a Member shall offer an amendment and comment upon it; that it would permit a discussion of the report and the pointing out of where it ought to be amended.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Under general debate I think that is entirely proper, but what I referred to was that, after we had finished the general debate, debate on the amendment, if any, should be under the five-minute rule.

Mr. GARRETT. And confined to the resolution.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois that the debate on the amendments shall be under the five-minute rule?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield whatever time he may desire to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS].

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the minority views presented with this report call in question the accuracy of the report and, at least indirectly, the fairness of the method pursued in taking the testimony upon which the report is based. I regret the necessity of taking the time I will require, but it is unavoidable. I want to spend just a moment on the method that was pursued by subcommittee number 4, from which committee this report comes, not only in taking the testimony but in arriving at its conclusion.

The first thing necessary to be ascertained was the system devised by the department for the sale of surplus food. While the work provided by the jurisdiction of this committee is appalling in its immensity, and the work that is submitted to it practically impossible to adequately perform, the committee came to the conclusion that the one thing of most pressing necessity which faced the committee was the question of getting food products in storage by the War Department of the United States out to the people.

We were actuated by two thoughts in that desire; first, the desire to get the food to the people; and next, the desire to get the money into the coffers of the Government which would be derived from the sale of the food. In our investigation we learned that there are three steps under the plans of the War Department looking to the sale of this food. The first step is the authorization of the surplus which is declared by the Chief of Staff, Gen. March. The witness that we called to ascertain when this authorization for surplus was first declared was the man who was given the responsibility of making the authorization himself. That was Gen. March. We called Gen. March before the committee. He was accompanied by his aides. Several gentlemen were there to assist him on matters that were inquired into and to furnish him with data and departmental orders when occasion required. Gen. March testified that he made the authorization for surplus of all perishable food products on the 30th day of November last, or just 19 days after the armistice had been declared. We then asked Gen. March as to the next step in disposing of food products. He informed us that the next step was the declaration of surplus issued upon the authority granted by him. We asked him who made the declaration, and he said the Quartermaster General, Gen. Rogers. So the next witness we called before us was Gen. Rogers, the man who makes the declaration of surplus. No sale can be made until that declaration is made. Gen. Rogers came before the committee and testified that notwithstanding the authorization of surplus was made on the 30th of last November, though he did not recall the March order of November 30, there was no declaration of surplus that would permit a sale of food products until the month of May, or nearly six months thereafter. Gen. Rogers was accompanied by a large corps of aides in his department, who had volumes of typewritten sheets before them, and whenever a question was asked concerning which the witness was not informed he would turn to his aides and they would furnish him the information and he would put it into the record. Gen. Rogers informed us that the next step after he declared a surplus was the sale of surplus by the director of sales, which sale was based upon the declaration made by the Quartermaster General. The director of sales is Mr. Hare, so we called Mr. Hare before the committee.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REAVIS. Yes.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. What excuse was given for the six months' delay in making the declaration?

Mr. REAVIS. The gentleman is anticipating me. I will reach that shortly.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. REAVIS. I will get to that in a moment. We called Mr. Hare, the director of sales, before the committee to ascertain why this product was not being sold, and his reply was that he could not sell it until the surplus was declared; that there was no authority under the system of the War Department for him to make any sale except on declaration of surplus made by the Quartermaster General.

Mr. Speaker, we knew the urgent necessity for haste in this matter; we knew of the millions of pounds of food products that were going to waste because of the delay down at the War Department; we knew of the dire necessity out among the people of America occasioned by the high cost of living; and, in order to economize in time, we did not call any of those before our committee who had been writing and wiring us, who had been calling on us personally, telling us of waste here and waste there, criticizing the Government, but we called the men who were responsible for action. We called them for another reason. The men who made these orders and upon whom the responsibility for action rested knew the reason for their conduct. They had very selfish and very natural impulses to defend their own conduct against criticism. For that reason we called the men before us who had the facts, who had the responsibility, who had made the orders, who had the selfish desire to defend what they had done, and we did that in order that we could be absolutely fair to this War Department and not take the criticism of Tom, Dick, and Harry, not take the testimony of those who were writing and wiring us, but calling the men who did the thing, who were impelled to defend what they had done, and it is upon their record and upon their testimony that this report has been made.

I would say, further, parenthetically, that the conduct of the War Department in its delay in selling this surplus food may have its defenders in this House—I do not know—but I say that when the proposition was put to these men high in the councils of the Army, these men who had the responsibility of action, who did what they were ordered to do—when the question was asked them, "What do you think of a system of that kind?" without exception they answered, "Please do not put me in the attitude of criticizing my superior officer." That conduct of the War Department, I say, may have its defenders on the floor of this House, but it has no defenders down in the War Department among those men who are acting under the orders of the Secretary of War.

As to the claim of unfairness, it seems to me that the committee, inspired by the desire to be fair, inspired by the necessity for haste, wanting every man who made an order to put his own defense in the record for making that order, could not have adopted a fairer method than that adopted, and the record and resolution that is now before this body is founded exclusively upon the testimony of the men who made the orders.

What is a surplus in the Army? When the war closed suddenly in November and active hostilities ceased we had an Army of 3,700,000 men. In round numbers, 2,000,000 of them were in France and 1,700,000 were in continental America. Not only did we have an Army of 3,700,000 men, but the War Department had formulated its plans and agreed on the proposition that in the immediate future we would have an Army of 5,000,000 men. The War Department, through the Quartermaster General, under the orders of Gen. March, as it appears by this record, when the armistice came was contracting and having delivered supplies for an Army of 5,000,000 men eight months in advance. It was the only safe plan. It took some time to get the food products from the localities where they were manufactured and where they were purchased to the seaboard. It took some time, approximately 30 days, to get them across the seas. It took some time to get them into the depots and warehouses in France, and they had constantly in front of them the necessity of keeping enough food in France to prevent any possibility of disaster in the food supplies of that Army. So on the 11th of November we not only had the food that would feed an Army of 3,700,000 men, but we were having delivered, and it was delivered to us in large quantities, long after the armistice was signed, food for an Army of 5,000,000 men eight months in advance.

The moment the armistice came they started to demobilize the Army. The first act of demobilization was the relieving from service of 75 officers in the city of Washington. That occurred the first week. The early demobilization was of those in America, and it was done so rapidly that 800,000 American soldiers were discharged and permanently out of the service 60 days after the armistice was signed. The demobilization went on from that time at an approximate rate of 80,000 a week, until on the 11th of May, I think it was, the total demobilization amounted to 2,252,000 men.

Now, bear in mind that 2,252,000 men was approximately two-thirds of the Army as it existed when the armistice was signed, and yet with the demobilization of 2,252,000 men, leaving about one-third of the Army yet to feed, leaving only a million and a half of soldiers to feed, with food supplies on hand for 5,000,000 men eight months in advance, the War Department had not yet declared a surplus of food products. A surplus is made in this way: If you have food enough for 100,000 men and 50,000 are discharged you have a surplus food supply sufficient to feed 50,000 men. Anybody would have known, it seems to me, by the exercise of ordinary judgment that with this tremendous demobilization the great rapidity with which they were being demobilized, that a tremendous food surplus would result. The Government needed the money, the people needed the food, and yet for six months, up to the month of May, there was no surplus declared upon which the director of sales could act. The first thing that the War Department did or one of the first things was to adopt a policy. This policy is disclosed in a circular issued in January of 1919, shortly after the war was over. It is signed by Mr. C. W. Hare, director of sales, and this is the policy:

It is the policy of the Director of Sales to dispose of the surplus property of the War Department so as to disturb the industrial conditions of the country as little as possible.

Now that policy if carried out in good faith is a good policy. There is no one who wants to disturb unnecessarily the business of the country. It is well to bear in mind, however, that if they had put the food products back to the people they would have only restored normal conditions. Forty per cent of the food productions of America were commandeered by this Government. Taken out of the general supply that was the food of the civilians and they had to get along with the remaining 60 per cent at great sacrifices at times. Because of the reduction of this supply to almost one-half the price of food products went up and continued to ascend. Now after the Army had been demobilized, when 40 per cent had been set aside to feed them as soldiers, when they had returned to civil life, why was not the 40 per cent released so as to increase the food supply of the people even if it did to a certain extent disturb industrial conditions? It should be borne in mind that even if it should "disturb industrial conditions," even if it reduced the cost of living, still the cost of living was increased when the food was first withdrawn and to have put it back would merely have tended to restore normal conditions. Now I want to say a word about this surplus. There is a criticism in the minority report about the allegations in the majority report with reference to the declaration of surplus. I read from page 24 of volume 1 of the hearings before subcommittee No. 4. I am reading from the testimony of the director of sales:

Mr. REAVIS. The armistice was signed in November and here it is July——

Mr. HARE (interposing). That is due to the fact there was no surplus declared until recently.

Mr. REAVIS. There was a surplus in March; then they were talking of forcing the soldiers to eat it.

Mr. HARE. I do not want to pass the buck. I did not have it for sale then. Now that I have it, I will sell it in the highest market.

Mr. REAVIS. How long have you had the meat?

Mr. HARE. About a month.

At another time the director of sales testified as follows:

Mr. REAVIS. Therefore we will not have an opportunity to go into the matter as fully now as eventually we will have to go into it. I wish you would state in a general way who has charge of determining what will be the surplus of food products, who in the War Department?

Mr. HARE. The Chief of Staff. That does not come under my control in any way. Mr. Crowell and I have often tried to have the surplus determined more promptly and accurately. But first the Army was fixed at 1,000,000 men, and then brought down to 500,000 men, and Congress has said it should be 325,000 men. On these bases various surpluses have been declared. This meat surplus, I believe, was declared the 1st of May, but I think it was there and the Army——

Mr. REAVIS (interposing). Was there no meat surplus declared at all until the 1st of May?

Mr. HARE. None; and I have no power over that. The director of sales only begins to function when a surplus is declared by the Army and its sale is directed, and then it is put into the hands of our department to make sales.

Mr. REAVIS. That is, the War Department, notwithstanding the armistice was signed in November, waited until the 1st of May before it declared that there was any meat surplus at all?

Mr. HARE. Yes, sir; I think that is correct. They started out making a surplus in March, and withdrew it because they thought they were inaccurate.

Mr. REAVIS. Notwithstanding the rapid demobilization of troops, the fact that the Army was being demobilized, no activity on the part of the War Department was manifest with reference to declaring a surplus of meats from November until the 1st of March?

Mr. HARE. None to my knowledge.

Mr. REAVIS. And then the surplus that was declared in March was subsequently withdrawn?

Mr. HARE. As being inaccurate, and the whole list gone over again——

Mr. REAVIS (interposing). So in fact there was no surplus declared for the purpose of sale until May?

Mr. HARE. Exactly so.

This testimony was given on the 8th of July, and notwithstanding two-thirds of that Army was out by May, notwithstanding we had contracted for supplies for 5,000,000 men eight months in advance, it was not until June that the War Department declared a surplus on meat products that would permit a sale. Volume 1, pages 7 and 8 of this same hearing. This is the testimony of Mr. Hare, who is the man responsible for the order. This report is not founded upon telegrams and letters sent indiscriminately across this country. It is not founded upon the ex parte and unfounded statements of anybody. It is founded upon the sworn statement of the man who made the order and who had the responsibility.

The minority views question the report as to the date of the surplus, but the record contains no contradiction of Hare's testimony. But finally they did get a surplus, gentlemen. Finally they did get in position where this product could be sold to the American people—such of it as was left and unspoiled.

And the first thing they did on the proposition was to call a meeting at the War Department. You will find that in volume 1, on page 21, and it is quite an interesting story. They were talking about canned meats at this meeting, and the meeting is reported on the 3d of June of this year. Here is what that meeting decided.

Before any of these sales, however, can take place an important question must be decided as to what price we are to market this vast store of foodstuffs for. It is obvious that if the price is made low enough and the articles sacrificed that all of it can be disposed of in this country. It must not be forgotten, however, that a very much better price can be secured through export.

That was the first meeting on the meat supply surplus in this country.

Then, again:

It seems advisable, therefore, that we continue our present efforts to market as much of this surplus as possible in this country at the best prices obtainable and sell the remainder for export. It must be borne in mind, however, that if a low price is established here for domestic sales it will make it more difficult to secure a higher price for the same class of canned meats from exporters.

Now, it was the determination of that meeting that so far as the meats were offered for domestic consumption, in order to keep up the export price, they were to keep up the price here.

There are a few other things contained in the report of this meeting that are illuminating. It is in this report that there was no domestic market for the canned meats; that it could not be sold here; that it was not in commercial packages; that they were in 2-pound cans when our market had been educated to an 8 and 12 ounce can, and for that reason it was useless to try to sell them on the local market. I ask the corroboration of the ranking member of the minority, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD], if they did not put these same canned meats on sale at Newport News, Va., the other day, which the gentlemen at this meeting determined that our people would not buy, and that the people broke the doors down trying to get it; that they put them on sale at 9 o'clock in the morning and the supply was absolutely exhausted at 11 o'clock of the same morning. And yet this meeting at the War Department decided that canned meats could not be sold in this country.

So what do you suppose they decided to do? Let me call your attention to what they decided to do:

In view of these various statements—

Just bear that phrase in mind, because it becomes important to learn who made "these various statements"—

In view of these various statements and, further, in view of the fact that it had come to the attention of the director of sales that Mr. Hoover had very recently purchased in this country for shipment overseas bacon held by the Italian and French Governments in this country, it was decided advisable it get in touch with Mr. Hoover and ascertain whether he would not purchase a certain amount of the canned surplus meats held by the Army.

Then, this next sentence:

Immediately after this meeting a cable was sent to Mr. Hoover, through the United States Liquidation Commission, asking him whether or not he was in the market to purchase a proportion of the canned meats held by the Government.

Now, gentlemen, that becomes significant, for this reason: At that time we had millions of pounds of surplus meat in France. Why did they want to sell Hoover what we had here? Why did they not try to sell him what we had there if it was not the purpose of the War Department to take this meat away from the American people? If the Secretary of War was not determined to keep it out of the domestic market in order not to disorganize business, why did they not sell their foreign product to Hoover instead of insisting that he buy the domestic product? Why did they not try to sell the foreign product that we are to-day trying to sell to France at a ruinous price? Why did they want to sell what we had here? There are some very luminous things that creep into this testimony.

Who do you suppose attended this meeting? We got that out in the testimony. There were seven Army officers who attended the meeting and a few civilians, and I have in this record the name of every civilian who was there, where they decided that our people would not buy it, where they decided we should get a better price abroad, where they decided that they should go to Hoover and try to get him to buy it instead of buying our French products. Here are the civilians:

Mr. J. A. Hawkinson, representing Wilson & Co.; Mr. M. C. Plainer, representing Wilson & Co., packers; Mr. D. B. Russell, representing Morris & Co., packers; Mr. J. J. Deady, representing Armour & Co., packers; Mr. A. F. Peiffer, representing Armour & Co.; Mr. W. F. Wardwell, representing Armour & Co.; Mr. G. C. Shepherd, representing Cudahy & Co., packers; Mr. F. E. Wilbur, representing Cudahy & Co.; Mr. E. D. Baldwin, representing Libby, McNeil & Libby, packers; and Mr. Burroughs, representing Swift & Co., packers.

These were gentlemen who were present at this meeting at which the policy of this department was definitely established to send these products overseas to keep them out of the American homes, where people were suffering for them, give them to Hoover to take abroad under the $100,000,000 appropriation we authorized in this House.

Hoover stood up against that for some time and refused to buy it, but since that time they have sold to him and shipped across the sea, with transportation charges, $22,000,000 of meat products that were stored in America, and we are now trying to sell our French product to the French people at a low price.

We are criticized for saying it is the policy of the War Department to keep these things off the local market. Why, I suppose there is not a man listening to what I say who has not personally observed something of the sacrifices that have been made by the American people to furnish the money with which this product was bought. Gentlemen, the American people bought and paid for it, and the American people should have it sold to them without delay just as soon as they can get it. [Loud applause.] Yet they are not to get it unless we can force the War Department to act, because the packers who sold it and who made enormous profits from the sale want it sold abroad instead of in America.

In volume 2 on page 78, Col. Davis, who had charge of the surplus property division and the sale of this product under the Quartermaster General, made this statement:

Mr. REAVIS. Do you know whether any sale had been made to Mr. Hoover out of the $100,000,000 we appropriated?
Col. DAVIS. There was a sale made to Mr. Hoover. Some packing-house products and flour were sent to Mr. Hoover's representatives in Europe; some went to Trieste and some, I think, went to Hamburg, and I presume that was bought out of the $100,000,000 fund.
Mr. REAVIS. You do not know? Do you know what quantity was purchased by Mr. Hoover of flour and packing-house products?
Col. DAVIS. I can get the figures.
Mr. REAVIS. I should be glad if you would, and put them in the record.

And in the same volume, on page 51, is a detailed statement of the sales to Hoover of the stuff we had in this country that was shipped to him abroad, and it amounts in total to $22,292,869 that we sent across the sea when we had millions of pounds abroad that to-day are spoiling for the want of a buyer.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I consumed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH). The gentleman has consumed 32 minutes.

Mr. REAVIS. I do not want to be unfair to the other members of the committee. Still, there are a number of things that, briefly, I want to call to your attention. There is a statement made in the minority report that we are extravagant in saying that this food is deteriorating. In volume 1, pages 24 and 25, you will find the following from Mr. Hare:

Mr. REAVIS. This meat is deteriorating?
Mr. HARE. I call it all perishable, and it should be sold within three months.
Mr. REAVIS. That does not answer my question. It is deteriorating?
Mr. HARE. Yes, sir.
Mr. REAVIS. In some localities to a marked degree?
Mr. HARE. It depends on the storage.
Mr. REAVIS. But in some localities it is deteriorating to a marked degree?
Mr. HARE. Yes, sir.
Mr. REAVIS. You have had some experience with deteriorated meats?
Mr. HARE. Yes, sir; I have taken meat into the woods on fishing trips and had it spoil.
Mr. REAVIS. I mean in your present capacity?
Mr. HARE. Yes, sir.
Mr. REAVIS. Haven't you had meat on your hands that spoiled?
Mr. HARE. Yes, sir.
Mr. REAVIS. Where?
Mr. HARE. In Baltimore; bacon.
Mr. REAVIS. Wasn't there some more than that in Baltimore?
Mr. HARE. I heard of ham also; and also I know of my own knowledge that subject to the temperature in wooden buildings the hams "smell" and "sweat" and deteriorate. That is the reason we can not give any guaranty back of the goods.
Mr. REAVIS. Isn't that true of the hams as well as the bacon?
Mr. HARE. Yes, sir.
Mr. REAVIS. Haven't you been compelled to sell ham, more than 2,000,000 pounds?
Mr. HARE. I do know there was a large amount of ham that was moldy and was sold at a sacrifice.
Mr. REAVIS. A large amount at Atlanta, Ga.?
Mr. HARE. At Norfolk.
Mr. REAVIS. And a large amount at Atlanta, Ga.?
Mr. HARE. Yes; but whether that has been sold or not I do not know.

Without taking the time to read the somewhat voluminous testimony on this question, I will say to you that it is in evidence that more than 2,000,000 pounds of ham in Baltimore deteriorated so that we sold it at 28 and a fraction cents per pound; that 1,497,000 pounds at Norfolk deteriorated so that we sold it at 20 cents a pound.

On Friday morning of last week the Baltimore Sun contained a statement of the condition that exists at our warehouses there, and the same condition is also all through the southern country where we have warehouses and where it is hot. This meat is spoiling, and has been spoiling rapidly. Here is the condition at Baltimore:

PILES OF FOOD BURNED—VAST STORES OF ARMY SUPPLIES MUST BE DESTROYED—SPOILED BY HASTY PACKING—SMOKE FROM GREAT DUMP NEAR RIVER VIEW BEARS TESTIMONY TO WASTAGE OF WAR.

Thousands of dollars' worth of foodstuffs of every kind are being burned as refuse at the Colgate warehouses of the United States Quartermaster Corps near River View, and the pity of it is, say the Government officials, that they are powerless to prevent the waste.

A visit to the warehouses yesterday disclosed the truth of persistent rumors that wholesale destruction of canned goods has been in progress for months. Just outside the wire palisade about the reservation, in plain view from the River View car line, the smoke from the refuse was ascending. The ground to the extent of about an acre was strewn with empty tin cans, burst open and their contents poured out in many places more than knee deep.

Three negro dump keepers were on the job, and the wheelbarrows in which the cans were trundled from the four big warehouses were close by.

SWAMP FILLED WITH THE CANS.

"That pile is nothing," one of them said in answer to a question. "All this ground we are standing on is filled with layers of tin cans several feet thick. You see, after we burn the stuff for a while and the pile gets big we cover it over with a layer of dirt and start a new pile. That swamp over there is several feet deep, and it is filled with cans, too."

The negro explained that he is one of the 16 men whose task it is to sweep up around the warehouses and wheel the condemned cans to the fire.

"Each warehouse has several inspectors, who go around every day and inspect tomatoes, peas, milk, and other goods, and as soon as they find bad ones they mark them, and we wheel them away," he said.

As to how long the destruction has been going on the negro was dubious.

"You see, I have only been here since February," he said. "I don't know how long it was going on before that, but I know that some of us have wheeled cans to the dump almost every day since I came here to work."

Now, gentlemen, it is suggested that the Government will reimburse itself, because it has a six months' guaranty on this canned stuff. Why, eight and one-half months have gone by since we purchased it. Eight and a half months have gone by since the armistice was signed, and it is in the record that some of it was bought in the year 1917. The guaranty has long since expired. But suppose that the Government got all its money back. God help the poor people who can not get the food! That is gone. It is difficult for me to characterize what I think of conduct of this kind. I could be arrested for what I think of that War Department and the way it has handled this food supply.

There are other items that I want briefly to call to your attention. I am not inclined to blame Rogers or Davis or Hare or these men who are acting under orders. Hare was a frank witness. I said to him, on page 26:

Mr. REAVIS. It was apparent the Army would not be more than 500,000, and if it was not more than 500,000 there was a vast quantity of surplus meat?

Mr. HARE. Yes, sir.

Mr. REAVIS. And any man would know that a vast quantity would have to be sold?

Mr. HARE. Yes, sir.

Mr. REAVIS. Don't you know of cases where the wholesale grocers have tried to buy it and could not and it was kept in storage until it deteriorated?

Mr. HARE. Yes, sir; and I have tried to pry it loose and sell it.

And yet they criticize the majority report that holds the Secretary of War and his policy not to disturb industrial conditions up to the view of the Nation.

My friends, I want to call your attention to one other thing, and I have got to hurry along or I will consume time that I ought not to take. On page 30 of volume 1, Gen. R. E. Wood, Acting Quartermaster General in the month of January, wrote a letter to Frank Gerber, the president of the National Canners' Association, which contained this statement:

No canned vegetables will be put on the domestic market during this season.

Just what the relationship between the Canners' Association and Gen. Wood was I do not know, but I do know that Gen. Rogers came back from France in February and succeeded Gen. Wood as Quartermaster General. He started to sell these canned goods. They had between 25 and 50 carloads on the track at St. Louis that demurrage was being collected on, and Gen. Rogers started to sell it. In volume 2, page 43, in the testimony of Col. Davis, we find this:

Col. DAVIS. As I stated before, Gen. Rogers, on his return from France, knowing that there was a large surplus of canned vegetables on hand, shortly after his arrival took up that question with a view to disposing of this surplus. This information at once reached the canners of the country, and Mr. Gerber, president of the National Canners' Association, together with several canners and the secretary of the association, whose office is here in Washington, called on Gen. Rogers and showed him a letter received from Gen. R. E. Wood, Acting Quartermaster General, agreeing not to place on the market——

Mr. REAVIS (interposing). When was that?

Col. DAVIS. This was in the latter part of February or early in March that this meeting occurred.

Mr. REAVIS. You may continue your statement.

Col. DAVIS. Agreeing not to place on the market this large surplus until after the 1919 pack was made.

Mr. DONOVAN. And when would that be?

Col. DAVIS. That would be completed along in September or along about September.

Mr. DONOVAN. Of this year?

Col. DAVIS. Of this year; yes, sir.

When that order was shown to Gen. Rogers he testified that he was in duty bound to keep the agreement that his predecessor had made, and on page 299 of volume 5 of the record Gen. Rogers testifies as follows:

Mr. REAVIS. General, were you disposed to sell all of these canned goods?

Gen. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. Why did you want to sell them?

Gen. ROGERS. I wanted to sell them because I thought it was for the interest of the Government to sell them.

Mr. REAVIS. Not only the 25 or 50 carloads, but all the canned goods?

Gen. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. REAVIS. That was the thing you had in mind at the time you had this conference?

That was the conference with Gerber when he came to him to show him the letter written by Wood.

Gen. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

And out of that conference between the Canners' Association, who had gotten a promise from Gen. R. E. Wood not to sell these canned goods on the domestic market—and there were 200,000,000 cans of them, running from 1-pound to 3-pound cans—Col. Davis, in order to further assure the Canners' Association, wrote the following letter to Mr. Gerber.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. REAVIS. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What were the contents of those 200,000,000 cans?

Mr. REAVIS. Peas, squash, spinach, corn, tomatoes, pumpkins—all that sort of canned vegetables.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And not meat?

Mr. REAVIS. Oh, no; these were canned vegetables; but if you will look at the record, in the list of the men who belong to the Canners' Association, it is worth while to notice that most prominent are some of the packers in Chicago, who were canning vegetables as well as meat. Bear in mind that the people needed this food. Bear in mind that your Government needed the money; but here is what Col. Davis writes to the president of the Canners' Association on the 17th of March of this year:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
PURCHASE, STORAGE AND TRAFFIC DIVISION,
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF PURCHASE AND STORAGE,
Washington, March 17, 1919.

FRANK GERBER,
President National Canners' Association, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. GERBER: Your letter of March 15 to Maj. Gen. H. L. Rogers has been referred to me for reply.

I am glad to be able to relieve your mind on the subject of any surplus of canned vegetables to be dumped on the market.

Acting along lines suggested by you—

Suggested by the president of the Canners' Association—

canned peas, corn, squash, and string beans will be added to the ration list, which has always contained canned tomatoes. This will entirely dispose of our stock and eliminate surplus.

I trust this will relieve your mind and those of your associates in the Canners' Association.

Yours, very truly,

A. M. DAVIS,
Colonel, Quartermaster Corps, Director of Storage.

[Applause.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REAVIS. With pleasure.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is the writer of this letter a member of the Canners' Association?

Mr. REAVIS. He is now acting at the head of the Surplus Property Division in the War Department, under Newton D. Baker. That is the man who wrote that letter.

Mr. KNUTSON. Nice business!

Mr. REAVIS. Oh, do not criticize him. I will show that he was acting under orders.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Will my colleague yield there for a question?

Mr. REAVIS. I will, with pleasure.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. In some parts of the Republic the people think that Congress is somewhat to blame for not passing legislation to permit the sale of this food. Now, is it not a fact that there was ample law, from the time the armistice was signed, to do all that was necessary along that line?

Mr. REAVIS. There is not any question about it at all. It is merely the policy of the department not to do it. Now, you talk about Col. Davis, and ask if he is a member of the Canners' Association. Let me call your attention to what Davis intended to do by this letter. You will find it on page 53 of volume 2; Mr. Davis is very frank about it:

Mr. REAVIS. I tried to get that from Mr. Hare yesterday and he passed the buck to you, and now you pass it to somebody else, and we will get him and get to the bottom of it.

Now, you say here, quoting your letter, "This will entirely dispose of our stock and eliminate surplus." Now, if that had been true, Colonel, you would have deprived the Government of the money that it would make from the sale of these canned vegetables?

Col. DAVIS. Mr. REAVIS, this was written this way, largely with a view of quieting the mind of the canner and the farmer as to the likelihood of this surplus being dumped on the market here, and they know, and Mr. Gerber knew, that it did not in any way prevent or intend to prevent the sale which we expected to make of a portion of our canned goods on the other side of the water.

Mr. REAVIS. Well, how would that permit you to make a sale of a portion of your goods when you say in your letter that this will consume all the surplus?

Col. DAVIS. That is what I say; that was done for the purpose of quieting the minds of the canner and of the farmer——

Mr. REAVIS (interposing). You did not mean it?

Col. DAVIS (continuing). As to the fact of any surplus being dumped in this country; it did not mean that we were not going to continue our efforts to sell some of our goods abroad. It would take us—with the strength of the Army that we had at that time it would take a long while to use the entire amount, and it was intended to show these people that there would be no surplus so far as they were concerned to harrass the conditions in the United States.

Mr. REAVIS. That is, you mean that the American people would have no opportunity of buying this surplus?

Col. DAVIS. That is the point exactly.

Mr. REAVIS. And notwithstanding the distress occasioned by the high cost of living here the only people to get the benefit was the people abroad and not our own?

Col. DAVIS. That is it exactly.

Mr. REAVIS. And that was done to protect the canners and the farmers?

Col. DAVIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. REAVIS. Now, gentlemen, I wish I had two hours more in which to talk about this thing, but I have gone on and taken more time than I really should have taken. But as to this Wood order and this Davis letter that were issued by these men in charge of these departments, let me show you by the testimony of Gen. Rogers where they came from. This is Gen. Rogers's testimony:

Mr. REAVIS. Was there any definite conclusion arrived at at the first conference with reference to the disposition of canned vegetables?

Gen. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. REAVIS. What was the conclusion?

Gen. ROGERS. The conclusion was—after Mr. Thorne came into the office, I asked him if he knew anything about this letter of Gen. Wood, and he said that he did, and that the letter was not only written by Gen. Wood but had the approval of the War Department.

Mr. REAVIS. The approval of the War Department?

Gen. ROGERS. I think he made the statement "At the approval of the Secretary of War." I would like to change my statement and say, instead of the War Department, that it had the approval of the Secretary of War.

There was the deliberate purpose of the War Department to compel the soldier to eat all the canned vegetables which could be sold in America. This purpose was inspired by the desire to save the canners from competition with the Army surplus, to keep up the price to the burdened people even though it prevented the Government from getting the money which would have been derived from this sale. This thing which "invisible government" was doing through conspiracy with the War Department is shown not only by the testimony of Col. Davis but is also shown by the following testimony of Gen. Rogers:

Mr. REAVIS. Now, let me ask you this: Does not the letter say, which you say was written with your approval, that this will eliminate all surplus?

Gen. ROGERS. The letter states that, but as near as I can remember it is misleading in that it was expected to sell a part of these canned vegetables for foreign export.

I am not disposed to criticize Gen. Rogers or Col. Davis or Mr. Hare; but it is charged in the report, and by way of reiteration and on my responsibility as a Member of this House I charge now that it was the well-defined policy of the Secretary of War to keep these food products away from the American people who bought and paid for them, and to export them to save the big business interests of this country. [Applause.] That statement is made on the sworn testimony of the men in charge of these bureaus down at the War Department.

Gentlemen, every man who has studied the philosophies of history realizes that the food of the people is the most menacing proposition with which a Government has to contend. The whole shore of existence is lined with the wrecks of nations whose destruction had its inception in the hunger of the people. It is twenty centuries since Christ walked this earth with the children of men to teach them the fundamentals of a new civilization, and now, after the passing of nearly 2,000 years, it seems to me that the causes which lead to revolution are more menacing and more universal than they ever were before.

Organized government and orderly society seem struggling to justify their right to endure. These are brooding years, pregnant with God knows what, for there is strife and turmoil down in the shadows. Scarcely a nation in Europe that is not in the twilight, and brave is the man who ventures a prediction as to the affairs of this world a year hence.

We are proud of this country, proud of its history and of its accomplishments. For some the "light may stream on the path ahead and nowhere else," but for me the glorious past of America will never be shrouded in darkness. We are confident of its future; but, sirs, with all of its power and resources, it could lie in ashes before the month is out if its people became hungry enough.

Hunger is the breeder of revolution. Notwithstanding the distress occasioned by the high cost of living, notwithstanding there is rebellion in the spirit and in the heart of those who are burdened with the high cost of living, the War Department, to keep from disturbing the industrial conditions, has been hoarding foodstuff in the warehouses of this country until it has deteriorated and spoiled.

Whatever disturbance industrial conditions may suffer will be because these food purveyors sold the product in the first instance. Let me illustrate my meaning: Sitting in front of me is my good friend from Illinois [Mr. WILSON]. The tailor who sold him the clothes he is wearing, and which look like a million dollars draped over his handsome shoulders, disturbed conditions by so doing because he destroyed the demand for that suit of clothes. Do you think he should be heard, after making the sale and receiving his profit, to demand that Mr. WILSON hang the garments in the closet because conditions would be disturbed if he should wear them?

The American people bought and paid for this food. It was sold for consumption. Conditions were disturbed in the sale. Mr. Gerber, president of the Canners' Association, testified before our committee that the profits derived the year these goods were sold were far and away the most profitable he had ever had, and yet after selling them and getting the profit he conspired with the Secretary of War not to let the people of America consume them, because if they did it would disturb the industrial conditions.

I have been speaking more than an hour, and I regret that I have taken so much of your time. I would like to relate an incident which I witnessed recently, and with its relation I will conclude. I was in one of the public markets last Saturday evening when I observed a frail, prematurely aged lady speaking in a low tone to the clerk. She was wretchedly clad in faded calico, and she had all the evidences of cruel poverty. She was inquiring how much of a cheap cut of meat she could buy for 20 cents. Some who were near her, inspired by sympathy, asked some questions, and learned that she was providing Sunday dinner for herself and three children. I do not want to comment on the incident, but I cite it because the lady is a type of thousands who dwell in this land of plenty. It seems to me that the struggle is somewhat unequal; on the one hand these great wealthy companies seeking to control the food supply of the people, fortified by the sympathetic protection of the War Department, striving always to keep up the price, to increase profits and dividends, and on the other hand, quite helpless and alone, the woman doing her best to keep life in the bodies of the little fledglings God had given her. You will choose to-day the one you will help. So far as I am concerned, so far as the Republican Party is concerned, you will find us fighting on the side of the great mass of our people typified by the lady in the calico dress. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, a good deal was said in the discussion of the point of order this morning, and also by the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] in the debate on the pending resolution in a semicriticism of the minority of the Special Committee on the Expenditures of the War Department in incorporating in the minority views certain statements of the War Department officials that had not been taken in the course of the evidence before the committee on the subject with which this resolution deals. This pretty clearly demonstrates that the evidence which we produced is conclusive of our contention that the majority report has misstated the facts in relation to the distribution of surplus food supplies.

I will state to the House the circumstances under which these communications were incorporated in our report. The whole evidence in this case was taken by subcommittee No. 4. As the House well knows, this special committee of 15 was divided into 5 subcommittees of 3 each, 2 Republicans and 1 Democrat being on each committee. All of this evidence was taken by the subcommittee. Twelve members of this committee had never heard a word of the evidence, and I do not believe had ever read a line of it.

On last Thursday this resolution was presented to the full committee with the report of the majority, at a time when the minority member of the subcommittee No. 4, who had heard a portion of the evidence, was absent in New York at the bedside of a sick son. We heard the resolution read. We felt that it meant nothing, that it was another evidence of Republican incapacity and inefficiency to deal with the great problems of the day, and then we heard the report read. We had not been present at the taking of the evidence, but we knew the report was bristling with misstatements of facts and of misrepresentations of the attitude of the Secretary of War and of the War Department in reference to these food supplies.

I called the attention of the committee to that fact. The next day I prepared a letter and presented it to the chairman of the committee; the letter has been read to the House. I pointed out to these gentlemen the errors of fact in this report and gave a list of the witnesses whom we asked to be summoned, the list being headed by the Secretary of War, whose position in reference to this food supply was attacked and misrepresented in this report. We stated to the committee that if they did not open this matter and allow us to produce the evidence to show, as we can show, that the statements in the report were incorrect, we would be compelled to go to the War Department, get the evidence, and file it with the minority views. No one dissented. We were left distinctly under the impression that the committee agreed that we had that right and consented to our right to exercise it.

Then, upon a statement by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] that as the report had been given to the newspapers to reopen the hearings would make the committee ridiculous, our request that the Secretary of War and other officials might be heard was denied. I replied to the statement of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] that to open the hearings by the committee would not make it quite so ridiculous as having the errors and misrepresentations contained in it exposed upon the floor. I am satisfied that my prediction has come true. It might be stated parenthetically that the report had not been filed in the House and was not filed until yesterday. I do not believe that the right of a high official of this Government to be heard upon a matter about which he was being criticized has ever before been denied by a committee of this House. This course stamps this committee with a partisanship that it will never outlive. [Applause.]

Following up that action of the committee we prepared our report, obtained these letters and communications from the officials of the War Department, as we had stated to the whole committee we would do and as we thought they had agreed we should do, and embodied them in our report. And with that understanding in his mind Mr. GRAHAM asked for unanimous consent yesterday that our report be accepted and filed along with the minority report. I do not understand the parliamentary ethics under which these gentlemen are acting when they attempt to exclude these statements from the minority report. We have simply put into that report that which the Republican members of the committee had never heard and would not hear—evidence from the Secretary of War, going down to lesser employees of that department, who have to deal with the surplus supplies of war foodstuffs, that would have contradicted practically every statement of importance made in the report of the majority. [Applause on Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, I am in favor, and the minority of this committee are in favor, of putting on the market for the benefit of the consumers of this country the surplus food supplies of the War Department as quickly as possible and in the most satisfactory way to get the surplus supplies into the hands of the consuming people of the country. The Secretary of War is in favor of that, and I challenge any man, however bitter his partisan Republicanism may be, to put his finger upon one word ever uttered by the Secretary of War that contradicts the statement that that is to-day and has been his policy ever since the armistice was signed. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The officials of the War Department generally are in favor of it, and I would have thought that the majority members of this committee were in favor of a similar policy. I still think they must be, but a reading and study of the resolution which they have brought into this House would lead one to believe either that they are not in favor of getting these surplus food supplies to the people or that they have been very derelict in their duty in studying and understanding the questions relating to these food supplies. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Let us see what is the situation. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] talks about a conference here with the meat men and a conference yonder with the vegetable canners. But I call attention to the fact that none of these conferences resulted in the suggestions made by the meat men being accepted, and for only a limited time were the suggestions of the canners the ruling policy of the War Department. I call attention to the fact that notwithstanding the War Department in the discharge of its duty to consider every interest in this country conferred freely with the canners, both of meat and vegetables, the policy that the department has pursued has been solely in the interest of the Government and of the consumers of the country. The meat men made certain suggestions. They were rejected. A policy was adopted in the interest of the Government and in the interest of the consumers. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

After the armistice we had on hand the largest supply of foodstuffs ever gathered together by any organization in the history of the world. It was pouring in every day. Immediately the officials of the War Department began to cancel contracts, where there was authority to cancel them. A great many of them were canceled, and soon after that, upon the direction of Gen. March, it was determined to take an inventory of the food supplies that were scattered about at 225 different warehouses and posts in the country. Ten thousand men were employed and put to work the last day of December, 1918, to make a physical count of food supplies on hand. In about 10 days they completed it and sent their inventories to Washington. Then began the work of classifying these food supplies, of determining how much was needed for the support of the Army and how much should be declared a surplus. With the limited number of men the department had to work on this stupendous job, it did take months. A small quantity of supplies were declared surplus in February and March and sold, but the bulk of it was declared surplus, the meats on the 5th of May and the canned vegetables on the 23d of May, and from that time on sales have been made in large quantities to the consumers in this country. The first plan adopted by the War Department was to advertise the articles for sale in the newspapers and receive sealed competitive bids for them, sale being made to the highest bidder.

Recently 1,572 bids have been received for canned goods, and many of these bids have been accepted, and those goods have been sold to the bidders at 80 per cent of the cost, and they will soon go out to the consumers. But owing to the large supply of foodstuffs in this declaration of surplus the War Department did not feel that they were going to the consumers rapidly enough, so on the 3d day of July the Secretary of War directed an order to be issued authorizing municipalities in the country to buy in carload lots meats at 80 per cent of the cost and vegetables at cost, to be sold by the municipalities to the citizens at what the goods cost the municipalities.

This report of the majority says that that order abrogated the other methods of sale of these goods. These gentlemen who issued the order, who have charge of distribution under that order, would have told them, if they had asked, that it was in addition to the method then in vogue for the sale of these foodstuffs. Under that arrangement a number of municipalities in this country bought large quantities of these surplus foods and sold them to their people at cost, and they were in as perfect condition, I am told by the people who bought some of them, as any meat ever bought by anyone from any market upon the face of the earth. While these gentlemen are thanking God for one thing and another, let them not forget to render thanks for the fact that at the end of this war the meat that the War Department accumulated was sound and good enough for anybody to eat and not embalmed beef, such as the Republican administration had at the end of the Spanish-American War. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It developed that some of the municipalities under their charters could not purchase foodstuffs to be sold to their citizens.

And so the Secretary of War last week enlarged that order and provided that any group of patriotic citizens in any city in this country whose standing was approved by the mayor of their city could purchase those goods in carload lots on 10 days' time, to be sold to the citizens of that city at cost. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And under that arrangement a great number of the cities of this country are now negotiating for meats and canned goods and sugar and anything that happens to be surplus supplies of the War Department. So they are selling to-day through the ordinary channels of trade, accepting competitive bids from anybody who desires to buy, the surplus they have on hand. In addition to that they are letting any city of this Nation which desires to do it buy carload lots of these goods and sell them to their citizens at cost and give that city ten days' time; and, thirdly, where the cities can not or will not buy for sale to their citizens, or where there is danger of profiteers stopping the cities by injunction, the War Department is providing that any group of patriotic citizens whose responsibility is vouched for by the mayor of those cities can buy those goods in carload lots on the same terms as the cities and sell them to the consumers in those cities at cost. That is what the War Department is doing to-day. Is not that getting these goods to the consumers? Is that keeping the goods away from the American consumer? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. I will.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Is there anything in the resolution presented that would even suggest any better way of supplying the people direct in a majority of cases?

Mr. FLOOD. I said a few minutes ago that a study of that resolution would lead an impartial student to believe that these gentlemen, the majority, were not in favor of getting these surplus war supplies to the consumers, because, as the gentleman from Texas says, they make no suggestion by which these supplies can be gotten into the hands of the consumer. My construction of that resolution is that if the Secretary of War followed the suggestion of that resolution he would feel himself prohibited from selling to municipalities, selling to groups of persons in cities, and selling through the ordinary channels of commerce, because that resolution provides that the War Department shall sell directly to the people of the United States, which I think means the consumers of this country. If that is not what the resolution means, then it simply requests the Secretary of War to do what he is doing now and has been doing for some time.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does the gentleman recall that when the Army appropriation bill was before us we endeavored to get the War Department to explain its policies in the disposition of these goods and all that we could get was that they had offered for sale to the Salvation Army some canned stuff and they had offered to some Jewish organization the sale of some bacon. [Laughter.]

Mr. FLOOD. I recall that when the Army appropriation bill——

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. Was before the committee the chairman of that committee, Mr. KAHN, of California, asked Mr. Hare some questions with reference to the disposition of these food supplies, and Mr. Hare asked Mr. KAHN's advice as to what course the Government should pursue in the disposition of these food supplies, and Mr. KAHN's advice to him was that it was the duty of the War Department to protect the Treasury of the United States and they ought to sell those goods wherever they could get the best price for them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. FIELDS. If the gentleman from New York will recall in the hearings on the Army appropriation bill the statement was made that they were advertising in the newspapers throughout the country for bidders for surplus supplies at that time.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. May I make a further inquiry——

Mr. FLOOD. I object to the gentleman using any more of my time. I can not yield. I have answered the gentleman's question.

Mr. MAGEE. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. FLOOD. I will.

Mr. MAGEE. The gentleman stated in reference to the sale of goods to municipalities. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not know that a municipality in the State of New York, under its charter, has no power to purchase these goods from the War Department?

Mr. FLOOD. I will say to the gentleman that the Secretary of War is much more attentive to the citizens of New York than the gentleman is, and, he realizing that fact, issued an order last week providing that any group of patriotic citizens in any city in New York could put up the money or have 10 days' time within which to pay for carload lots of these goods, take them to the cities, sell them to their citizens, the consumers of that place, at cost. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The Secretary of War is taking care of your interests, if you are not keeping up with it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MAGEE. Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. No; I can not yield now. I have not much time. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to my friends there is more politics than patriotism in this resolution. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I am not prepared to vote against any resolution that may help to get these products to the consumers, but I want to call your attention to the fact that the committee which reported this resolution was appointed under a resolution passed by this House on the 4th day of June.

We all thought it had a high and patriotic purpose, but, Mr. Speaker, when that committee began to work there was in constant attendance upon its sessions a Mr. George Hill. His presence there created some suspicion, and he was asked what his mission there was, and he said that he was being employed by the National Republican Committee to get out publicity articles in reference to the hearing before this committee. The first one that we saw was an interview given out by the distinguished and able chairman that indicted the administration for all sorts of crimes, and, among others, was the charge that he had, with the aid of the Council of National Defense and the advisory commission, begun to prepare the country for war when it was thought war was inevitable.

He criticized the administration for getting ready for this great war beforehand. But out amiable chairman has been so roughly dealt with by the press of this country, Republican as well as Democratic, that I do not believe he cares to recall that interview or Mr. Hill's part in its propaganda any more. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I want to insert here a statement by Mr. G. B. Clarkson, of the Council of National Defense, in reply to Mr. GRAHAM's interview:

My examination the other day before Mr. Graham's committee showed at the outset a tendency on the part of a majority of the committee to disclose that the administration had taken no preparedness steps before entering the war, whereas the truth was that, owing to the almost providential presence of the Council of National Defense created by Congress itself eight months before, a great many far-sighted plans had been initiated by the council acting alone and on the advice of its advisory commission.

The advisory commission of seven men was throughout the war, by the way, composed of at least three and probably four Republicans, as was the huge majority of the personnel of the council's subcommittees.

The council minutes, which I furnished to Mr. GRAHAM'S committee, with the hearty consent of Secretary Baker, chairman of the council, and which I voluntarily supplemented with those of the advisory commission, disclosed beyond any question that the council had in the most constructive way looked sharply ahead into the immediate future to the end of preparing the country for war.

It is my deliberate judgment that if the council, utilizing the greatest experts in the leading industries and utilizing them in a wholly nonpartisan way, had not taken its forehanded steps, America would not have laid in time the foundation for mobilizing its industrial resources which made possible the winning of the war.

The council minutes having made exposition of these facts to Mr. GRAHAM, he addressed himself to the council's system of procuring supplies for the War Department. That matter was all thrashed out long since before the Senate Military Affairs Committee, and the intimations against members of the council's committee on supplies died of their own weight at the end of the hearings more than a year ago.

Council committee members under the stress of an unprecedented emergency were undoubtedly in some cases placed in the apparent position of doing business with themselves, but that was never actually the fact, and not a scintilla of wrongdoing was ever disclosed, and it is believed that the law throughout was complied with.

In the committee on supplies alone 45,000 contracts, involving $800,000,000, were arranged for by the council in 200 days at an overhead cost of but $20,000. After the council withdrew from this particular field in January, 1918, the closeness and economy of its buying methods was demonstrated by the rise in price of many commodities for whose purchase it had arranged for the War Department. Through the experts under Mr. Baruch handling raw materials, minerals, and metals, it is estimated that the council saved the Government more than $3,000,000,000, as against prewar prices, in prices that it procured for iron and steel products.

In no instance and at no time did a member of the Council of National Defense organization actually close contracts. That was always done by the executive departments themselves, just as the activities of the council were always subject to review by the executive departments. Since this was so and since the committee members had no power whatever to sign contracts, it is difficult to see wherein the law was violated.

The fact of the matter is that the council found itself with a huge job thrust on its hands, and it set about to perform the task as best it could. The form of organization was not immediately and probably never was ideal, but we were at war and there was no time to quibble over technicalities or precedents. The job was one which called for immediate action, and with an improvised auxiliary structure the council sought to give the military departments the best and most expert assistance it could provide from civilian life in the problems of production and supply until those departments had time to make their own organization. The council's primary purpose and work, it should be pointed out, was to increase sources of supply and at the same time to assist the industries of the country in preparing understandingly for the strain that was to be put upon them.

It was the obvious and the elementary thing for the council to call to its aid the civilian whose business experience had given him a thorough grasp of the problem involved. If the really big men in industry were to be secured, obviously they must be men who were engaged in large affairs at the time. It may be said that this gave an opportunity for favoritism and personal gain through the presence in the council's organization of men engaged in active business, but the task had to be done and some one had to be trusted to do it. The real facts prove that the council's trust was not abused.

The only alternative to the plan pursued would have been to hire executive officers from the industries at salaries proportionate to the remuneration which they received in private life, instead of securing the heads of the industries for nothing. Its difficulties from the standpoint of expense and time are too obvious to need comment, however; and, aside from the question of efficiency, the plan would have lacked completely the splendid moral effect presented to the country by the voluntary contribution of time and tireless effort given by the leaders of industry who came to Washington to fill in the breach in the greatest national emergency that we have ever known. It is very doubtful if the same results could have been achieved in the pressure of the early war days through any other method than this one of voluntary cooperation.

As to the operating expenses of the council, it gives me a good deal of pleasure to point out that from its preliminary organization, in the late winter of 1916, up to May 1, 1919, its expenditures were but $1,500,000. This included carrying the War Industries Board for nearly a year and the expenditure of $225,000 for the erection of its building. It made the preliminary mobilization of industry from the date of our entrance into the war to July 1, 1917, at the almost grotesquely small expenditure of $127,000. It is hard to believe that there is anything in the history of government to surpass that record of economical business administration of a Federal agency.

Mr. Speaker, this is the second attempt to make politics out of the work of this committee. It is a less creditable attempt because a bold attempt is made to pervert the facts that are dealt with.

Mr. OLIVER. Does not the gentleman recall that the second attempt, perhaps, was as to the records of the soldiers absolutely spoiling in water, and afterwards it was shown that the records were intact and in absolutely good condition?

Mr. FLOOD. I do not believe that got beyond the committee room.

Mr. OLIVER. It was in the papers.

Mr. FLOOD. I did not see it. I heard it in the committee room and afterwards learned that it was much ado about nothing.

This is an attempt to make a false issue. If I had the time I could take up this report item by item and statement by statement and show you that there was no foundation for the allegations made in the report. The majority are trying to raise a false issue, not justified by the attitude of the War Department and not justified by the evidence taken in connection with these surplus food supplies. I do not presume to say that the gentlemen who make the issue know that it is false. I hope they do not. And if they do not, it is a great reflection upon their industry in the investigation they have undertaken. This debate will enlighten them and prove to the House and the country that it is a false issue, with not a solitary inch of solid earth upon which to rest the foot of any man who makes it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FLOOD. For a question.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman spoke about a council having been formed in the fall of 1916, when it was seen that war was inevitable. Was this council formed before the Democrats had decided upon their slogan of "He kept us out of war"?

Mr. FLOOD. It was formed after the people of this country had gone to the polls and by a substantial vote reelected Woodrow Wilson President of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. I will.

Mr. HASTINGS. Was the Secretary of War ever invited before this expenditure committee?

Mr. FLOOD. We tried to get them to invite him, but they would not do it. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] talked about having the high officials. I wrote to the chairman of this committee and requested and urged him to invite the Secretary of War there to testify, and they voted it down, every Republican vote being against it.

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman does not mean that this fair, nonpartisan investigating committee refused and declined to invite the Secretary of War, but had sitting by its side a representative of the Republican National Committee all the time?

Mr. FLOOD. That is exactly what took place.

Mr. UPSHAW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. UPSHAW. Inasmuch as this was an investigation of the War Department, and you have just brought out the startling and unheard-of fact that the committee refused to bring before them the head of the War Department while having present the Republican publicity man, does it not seem that our friends on the opposite side were almost as anxious to get partisan political campaign "thunder" out to the public as they are to get food out to the "pee-pull"? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. FLOOD. That is the sole purpose of the report. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] has called attention to the burning of thousands of cans of vegetables over in Baltimore. We could have shown him, if he had just given us the opportunity, if he had just let us bring the evidence there, that those were canned goods that had been rejected by this Government and turned back to the canners, and the loss was that of the canners and not of the Government. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Our reports show, and our evidence sustains it, that these canned vegetables spoil, if they are going to spoil, in 90 days, and so the Government takes a guaranty of six months, and if in that six months they were shown not to be good they were turned back to the canners, and they must be destroyed, because under Democratic auspices we passed a law prohibiting rotten food being sold by anyone and fed to the American people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BLACK. These goods were what are known as "swells" and are really unfit for food consumption?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. I can not yield; I have not the time.

I only want to refer to one or two small misstatements in this report.

The statement is made that millions of pounds of fish are in this surplus. I have ascertained that there is absolutely no fish. The salmon they had on hand did not come up to Government specifications, and so was turned back to the packers. There were a few codfish on hand, which have been sold. There is a sugar surplus, which is being distributed to the consumers to-day, principally to the American farmers, that they may do their domestic canning and preserving, and the sugar is going to them now because there is a sugar shortage in the country.

Mr. BAER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. BAER. How do they get those to the farmers now? What is the plan? Is it necessary for us to put that in the resolution?

Mr. FLOOD. Not a bit of it. There are only a few of these food supplies that the farmers want, sugar being the principal one, and the Government has arranged for the distribution of the 56,000,000 pounds of surplus sugar so the farmers can get their share.

Mr. BAER. The gentleman complained a moment ago that there was no plan in this resolution.

Mr. FLOOD. I said the War Department had a plan and was operating under it. It is distributing these food supplies under that plan, and you come along with a resolution that asks it to do something that they are already doing, or if not that then requests the department to stop using the method of distribution they have in operation and does not provide for any other.

Mr. BAER. I understood the gentleman to state that he was going to vote for this resolution.

Mr. FLOOD. I never said I was going to vote for this resolution. I stated the kind of resolution that I would not vote against.

The statement in the report that the inactivity of the Government in the disposition of these food supplies was and is the result of a well-defined policy of the Secretary of War to withhold them from the domestic market and to protect the interests from which these products had been purchased, with the ultimate intention of disposing of them abroad, so far as circumstances would permit, is absolutely without foundation, as is shown by the Secretary's letter, in which he clearly defines his policy and shows that at no time did he entertain such purpose as indicated in the report.

The statement that the delay in selling these food supplies resulted in the spoiling of millions of pounds of ham and bacon, with a great loss to the Government, is not in accord with the facts. No ham and bacon spoiled. One million five hundred thousand pounds of ham stored at Norfolk, Va., deteriorated to some extent, and was sold for 20 cents a pound when the market price was 35 cents a pound. It was feared that bacon for which no storage had been provided would deteriorate in Baltimore, and this was sold at a somewhat reduced price.

The contention that the Government suffered great loss by spoiling or deterioration of these foodstuffs is fully answered by the statement made by Maj. Mercer, that to date sales of surplus food have been made aggregating $26,000,000, which have brought the Government 85.7 per cent of their cost. Obviously this return could not have been made if the greater part or a very considerable part of it had deteriorated.

In connection with the suggested loss to the Government from the sale of canned vegetables, as a result of the order of Gen. R. E. Wood, it is shown that approximately one-third of the surplus of canned corn, peas, and stringless beans was sold at a return to the Government of 80 per cent of their cost or better, and that the market price of these vegetables to-day is higher than it was in January or February.

The facts in connection with the statement that there are millions of pounds of milk and tons of coffee and tea, as surplus, are as follows:

The surplus of milk consists of 680,000 cans only.

There is no surplus coffee and tea in the Army at the present time.

In connection with the statement that of the food supplies sold by the War Department, a large part of which was spoiled and unfit for general market, I refer you to the statement previously made—that a net return of 85.7 per cent of its original cost has been realized for the Government in the sale. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, there are a great many things that I would like to deal with in this report, but I have not time. However, I do want to call attention to the fact that the statement was made in it that only $12,000,000 worth of foodstuffs have been sold, whereas the fact is that $26,000,000 of these foodstuffs had been sold up to last Saturday night, and that is out of a total, as set forth in the report of the majority, of $120,000,000. Over one-fifth has been sold since this surplus was ascertained and declared. And it is going on at a much more rapid rate now since the municipalities can buy and since groups of citizens in municipalities can buy for sale to their citizens.

I favored the resolution creating this special committee to investigate the expenditures in the War Department. I believed that there were people who had volunteered their services or who had been called to the aid of the War Department who used their positions not for the benefit of their country but for their own profit. I felt that there might be some who performed their duties inefficiently or who were guilty of corruption, and that these facts should be known to the public so far as possible, and these officials punished. I am glad to say that up to this time very few facts have been developed showing that such a state of affairs existed. [Applause on Democratic side.]

I am unalterably opposed, and I believe the people of this country are opposed, to a manufactured state of facts, manufactured for political purposes with the intention of detracting from the splendid reputation made during this war by our Secretary of War. I do not believe these attacks can possibly injure him. Newton D. Baker devoted himself to the tremendous duties appertaining to his responsible position with a patriotism, ability, industry, and devotion to duty that have rarely been surpassed in the annals of our public service. His niche in the history of this war is secure. These detractors can not lower it. In this country and abroad he is regarded as one of America's great War Secretaries, and the fact that his splendid work did much to enable our armies to accomplish the glorious results they did on the battle fields of Europe is recognized, appreciated, and applauded by fair men the world over. [Applause on Democratic side.]

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Virginia want to yield any more time now?

Mr. FLOOD. I would rather the gentleman would go on, if he will.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. My idea was to keep it as nearly equally divided as possible. I think the gentleman talked half an hour.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TEMPLE). The gentleman from California is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Speaker, in advance I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Speaker, I approach the discussion of this subject with a consciousness that to a degree anything I may say is discounted by the fact that I am subject to the suspicion that I have a political motive in my attitude upon this question. You gentlemen on the other side approach the presentation of this question subject to the same suspicion. I believe the situation here presented to the country to-day demonstrates that Congress made a mistake when it appointed this investigating committee instead of appointing a nonpartisan committee, whose usefulness to the country would not be destroyed by its partisanship. The course pursued after the war of 1898 should have been followed, and this Great War should have been investigated by a nonpartisan committee. By giving the country the impression that everything that is done is inspired by a partisan purpose, this committee is rapidly destroying its usefulness to the country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, the question here is a question of facts. The intelligent judgment of the American people is not going to be based on what the Republican members of this committee say or on what the Democratic members say, but it is going to be based upon the intrinsic merit of the facts established. With this in mind, I want to present to you some facts in reference to the allegations made in the majority report now before the House.

In the first place, it is declared that for six months from the 30th day of November, 1918, when a survey of surpluses was ordered, "no action was taken" by the War Department to have a surplus of supplies declared. That statement is absolutely unsustained by the facts. What was done? The very day after that order was made 178 men were summoned for the purpose of forming an organization for taking an inventory. On the 17th day of December the members of that organization were sent to every zone in this country, 16 different zones, and they began taking an inventory, the greatest inventory ever taken in the history of this world. It involved nearly $2,000,000,000 worth of property. It took the services of 10,000 people to complete it. On the 26th day of March, 1919, that committee returned an inventory of the meat supply, after other inventories had been rendered. That inventory was revised and was finally adopted on the 5th day of May, 1919, and after that the matter of selling meat was open; meat was subject to sale by the director of sales.

Now, I want to call your attention to certain difficulties that stood in the way of the determination of the amount of the surplus and what was done to reduce the surplus. In the first place, on the 7th day of November, four days before the armistice was declared, the War Department sent telegrams throughout the country ordering production for war purposes to cease, anticipating the armistice that came four days later.

Thousands of contracts were canceled following the armistice, and the amount of supplies to be furnished under those contracts had to await adjustment at a later date. A large percentage of the supplies for the Army were commandeered on the basis of a percentage of factory output, and an inventory could not be taken until the amount of such output was determined.

Another uncertainty was due to the fact that thousands of informal contracts had to be validated, and the amount of the property that the Government had received could not be determined until there was an adjustment by the validation committee. The surplus was reduced by sales to other departments, $145,000,000 worth of property being sold to one department.

The shipments of meats to the Army on the other side did not cease until about the 1st of February, when Gen. Pershing ordered them held up. It was said here that the meat was turned into the possession of the United States as early as 1917. The fact is that the meat which it is charged spoiled at Norfolk was shipped there in January, February, and March of this year.

The taking of this inventory required the repiling of vast stores. In addition to that, in making an inventory for offering this property to the country for sale more definite descriptions were frequently required than had been necessary for the Army to make for its ordinary purposes.

Another element of uncertainty was that three times during the taking of inventories the estimated size of the Army changed. First the estimate was that the size of the Army next January would be 1,000,000 men. Next it was decided that the Army should be decreased to 500,000 men, and in June this year the size of the Army was reduced to 325,000 by Congress. Every reduction that was made caused a new estimate of requirements and an increase of the surplus. Had the Army remained at the first estimate there would not be any surplus of the goods here in question. It was only when Congress made the change in June that the full and correct inventory of the surplus now involved could be finally presented.

The statement is made in the majority report that "millions of pounds" of ham and bacon have spoiled. There is no specific evidence in the whole record to show that there has been a single pound of bacon spoiled. There is evidence of deterioration, and there are two specific instances of deterioration. One is as to 2,000,000 pounds of bacon at the city of Baltimore. The director of sales sold it for 28§ cents per pound. Where is the buyer in the market in these United States who is willing to pay over 28 cents a pound for spoiled bacon? As a matter of fact, when the Government submitted bids to dealers of the country, in some instances only 20 cents was offered for bacon that was in good condition.

As to the ham at Norfolk, the other instance of deterioration, that ham was ordered overseas. It was shipped to Norfolk January, February, and March. Later came an order revoking the shipment. It was found to be deteriorated by mold, but not seriously, and it was sold at 20 cents a pound, less than 1,500,000 pounds.

The complete answer to this charge is that out of the first $12,000,000 received from the sale of food products, including this meat alleged to have spoiled, the Government received over 85 per cent of its cost.

In the testimony reference is made to some bacon at Old Hickory, but that bacon was not in the possession of the Army. It was in the possession of a contractor. The reference is made to the canned goods burned at Baltimore. Those were goods that proved to be defectively canned, and they were burned at the expense of the canners. That is the evidence of "millions of pounds" of bacon spoiled.

The policy of the Secretary of War is discussed at some length in his report. It is said that the well-defined policy of the Secretary of War was to withhold these goods from the domestic market and to dispose of them abroad, so far as the circumstances would permit.

Mr. AYRES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEA of California. I would rather not, because my time is limited. The total sales of surplus property of the department in America aggregate nearly $209,000,000 received by the Government since the armistice was declared. Of the food products outside of the Food Administration, 700,000 pounds of butter sold to the British, 480,000 pounds of bacon sent to Holland, and 60,000,000 pounds of flour are practically all that were sold to the foreign market, and all the other food products were sold here.

How about the complaint that $22,000,000 worth of meat products were sent to Europe by Mr. Hoover? What is the fact in reference to that circumstance? The fact is this, that the United States Congress donated $100,000,000 for the purpose of giving relief to the starving civilians of Europe. They had to have food from America; and Mr. Hoover, instead of going over to Europe or to a foreign market and spending our money in a foreign land, spent it in America. We kept our money. We took our own supplies and saved that $22,000,000 to the American people and the American producer. [Applause.]

Now, how about the foreign market? When did America learn to despise a foreign market? Why, every sensible business man in America courts the foreign market. What is the fact in reference to the sale of meat? Since the 1st day of January over 1,000,000,000 pounds of meat have been sent to the foreign markets through the port of New York. Mr. KAHN, before the Military Affairs Committee, placed his hands upon the situation in reference to this question of sale.

He immediately analyzed the situation and made these two suggestions: In the first place, it was the duty of the responsible officers of this Government to sell these surplus products at the best prices obtainable, and in the second place it was their duty to have due regard to the rights of the business people of America. At the conclusion of the war there was a surplus of nearly $2,000,000,000 worth of goods. No man who had any real concern for the industrial welfare of America, or for the laboring men of America, or for the markets of America, or for the retailers of America would have advised that $2,000,000,000 worth of goods be forced on the American market.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA of California. Will the gentleman wait until I get through?

To have forced that surplus on the American market would have simply paralyzed business.

The problem of readjustment that confronted the country at the termination of the war was appalling. Industrial plants, working to the limit on military supplies, found themselves without orders; 3,000,000 men were immediately to return from war to peaceful pursuits; merchants were stocked with goods at war prices; the one great financial problem was to stabilize prices. Rapidly tumbling prices meant panic, disorganization, unemployment, and ruin.

Going through the war with less bank failures than in peace times and readjustment to peace conditions without a panic must ever be rated as one of the greatest accomplishments of the administration of our Government during these abnormal times.

Look at the situation in reference to canned vegetables and apply the same principle to other lines of industry, because the method of the Government shown by the evidence in reference to the canning industry is practically the same as to all other lines of industry. Here was the situation in reference to the canners: Last December, when the Wood order withholding canned vegetables from the market was issued, was at the close of the packing season. The pack was complete for the year. The United States had the largest supply it had ever had in its history. Over 400,000,000 pounds of tomatoes were in the hands of the dealers of this country, besides the retailers' stock. Less than one-fifth of that amount was in the hands of the canners.

Now, what took place during the war? The Government sent representatives to the meetings of the Canners' Association and urged them to get the largest possible production. The Government commandeered their products. The Government fixed their prices. Then what was the duty of the Government to these business men after the war was over? I say that the most elementary principles of good faith and common honesty and business judgment demanded that the United States should not put these articles on the market at a forced sale. It is absolutely apparent that the only legitimate course that could be followed was to place these articles on the market so that they could be gradually absorbed when there was a consumptive demand for the articles.

What happened as to the Wood order? That order was revoked many weeks ago, and these goods were offered to the people of the United States. If you will look at the record in this case you will find that Mr. Gerber wanted to explain to this committee that the Wood order was revoked, and he was denied the right to put that testimony in the record. Read it for yourselves.

What is the purpose, what can this committee hope to attain in the end by closing its eyes and ears to important, reliable testimony that would place an entirely different face upon the facts involved in this investigation? [Applause.] The country is suspicious that this committee is partisan in its purposes. Gentlemen, I believe you are making a great mistake. I may have a partisan motive. I may be warped in my judgment. I realize that. You are just as patriotic as I am. But I believe that the thing we ought to do for the sake of the country is to forget party bias, have confidence in achieving most by doing the best, getting at the facts of this case, and revealing them, instead of trying to capitalize every situation for political purposes. [Applause.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA of California. I will, if I get through in time.

Now, here is another situation to which I want to call your attention in justification of the Wood order. The canners went into conference with the War Department and gave their reasons why these canned goods should not be placed upon the market.

One reason they suggested was that it was then at the beginning of the season when contracts would be made with the farmers for planting for 1919. They said if you place tomatoes, for instance, on a forced sale now you will demoralize a market already shaky, discourage planting, and decrease the acreage, and the result will be that you will destroy the market of this winter and give the people a short crop and excessive prices next winter.

The Government took the course to stabilize prices and encourage the acreage, and yet the reports of the Agricultural Department made the 15th of this month indicate that, notwithstanding what was done by the Government to help, this year will have 30 per cent less acreage than last year. So that shows there was a legitimate reason for the Wood order. [Applause.]

On the 17th of March an order was made adding canned peas, corn, squash, and beans to the ration lists of the Army, so that this surplus might be used by our soldiers as part of their regular diet. This order added nothing to the quantity of vegetables to be furnished the soldier, but simply increased the variety of the ration. The report states that this order would have caused the Government to lose "millions of dollars" and caused the American people to lose "a large quantity of food."

As this order neither increased nor diminished the food supply of the Nation and provided for the use of the food on hand instead of going into the market to buy other vegetables, the fallacy of the contention is apparent. The philosophic wisdom of the suggestion equals that of the passenger who crossed a swollen river in a rowboat loaded to within 4 inches of the water's edge. He said, "If the river had been 4 inches higher, the boat would have sure gone down."

Instead of being evidence of extravagance, the order indicated common-sense economy.

The report further charges that on the 11th of this month the director of sales issued a publicity statement declaring that meat and vegetables "shall be purchased only by municipalities." If this statement were true there would be just cause for complaint against the methods of handling food sales. However, the statement is without the slightest foundation and contrary to the well-established facts. The evidence taken by the committee responsible for this report showed completed sales of foodstuffs aggregating over $12,000,000, practically all, if not all, of which was sold other than to municipalities. No responsible officer made the slightest suggestion that the municipal-sale system was to eliminate the other methods of sale being followed, or that it was intended to be anything but an additional method of placing these surplus foods in the hands of the people. It was hoped that the municipal authorities of the country or civic organizations might give the small consumer the benefit of a retail distributing system which it was impractical for the Government to establish on its own account.

In response to advertisements circulated throughout the country in May and June, 1,572 individuals and firms submitted bids to be opened on the 20th of June. The classification of these bids is practically completed, and a large number of them will be accepted at once. Over $26,000,000 worth of foodstuffs have been sold up to this date. Over $2,000,000 were sold before the 1st of May, and over $6,000,000 by the 14th of June. The initial difficulties and delays in the sales plan were practically overcome in May. The plans are now working out. Mr. Hare, the director of sales, testified that he will dispose of these surplus foodstuffs within three months.

Mr. Hare has had charge of the sales. Of him and his work in this connection the gentleman from Nebraska bears witness in the record in these words: "I think you have done great work in this department, and I am delighted that you are to have charge of it"—page 26. And in conclusion let me say that the reader of this record in the future may wisely conclude that the political enemies of the Secretary of War have, perhaps unintentionally, paid a tribute to his worth. They have not impugned his motives; they have deferred to his intelligence to provide a plan for the disposal of these goods and left its execution to his discretion.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 17 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MACGREGOR].

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I do not think there is any partisan purpose in this report which is now brought before this House. It is for the purpose of compelling the War Department, that has entered into a conspiracy with the packers of the country, to place with the people, so that they can get possession of it, this large quantity of foodstuff that is being withheld from the market. [Applause.] That is the purpose of this report; that is all we are trying to get at.

It is a matter that should go to the heart of every citizen of this country, and especially to the Members of this body. They should join together, hand in hand, to the end that this bureaucratic administration we are now enduring shall be brought to light and made to serve the interests of the people rather than the special interests.

I think the people of this country have become tired of this method of government, and that they want to have placed in control of the Government men who are filled with an ardent desire to serve the interests of the people. It is a crying shame that the very people who are placed in power should be men who seek in every possible and devious way to circumvent the wishes, desires, and interests of the people. That is what this administration is doing at the present time.

I want to call your attention, preliminary to my remarks and in view of the fact that this great amount of foodstuff is held by the War Department away from the people, to the situation that exists with reference to foodstuffs in this country of ours. In the great storage warehouses of the country at the present time are contained vast quantities of foodstuffs. On July 1, 1918, there were 146,000,000 pounds of frozen beef. On July 1, 1919, there were 160,000,000 pounds of beef. There was 31.6 per cent increase of cured beef July 1, 1919, over July 1, 1918, and 199.9 per cent increase of frozen lamb. There was 467 per cent increase of broilers and 341 per cent increase in roasters, and all along the line in these warehouses in this country are contained vast stores of foodstuffs in greater quantities than ever before, and I think we should inquire about that proposition, but it is startling when taken in connection with the vast amount of food which the War Department evidently desires to keep away from the people.

Yesterday I procured a report of the retail prices of food. At the present time in the line of groceries what would cost you in December, 1914, $1.75, in July, 1919, costs you $3.14. In beef products what would cost you in December, 1914, $1.52 would now cost $2.94. In pork products in 1914 what would cost $2.42, in July, 1919, would cost $5.92. In dairy products what would cost in December, 1914, $1.11 will now cost you $1.91, and in vegetables what would cost you in December, 1914, 47 cents now costs $1.70.

Comparison of retail prices of foods during December, 1914, December, 1915, December, 1916, December, 1917, December, 1918, December 1919.

Now, what has the War Department got on hand? I do not think that proposition has been very clearly brought to your minds. In corned beef they have $24,000,000 worth; in bacon, $23,600,000 worth; in hashed corned beef, $10,000,000 worth; and in roast beef, $20,500,000 worth; in poultry, $20,000,000 worth; and in vegetables, approximately $23,000,000 worth.

The statement of meats, in pounds, is as follows:

	Pounds.
Bacon	45, 000, 000
Roast beef	38, 000, 000
Corned beef	36, 000, 000
Corned-beef hash	20, 000, 000
Total	139, 000, 000

The quantity of canned goods is about 200,000,000 cans, but the surplus in foodstuffs is constantly increasing.

We have not, so far as I know, been furnished with any statement as to the actual quantities on hand.

I have made a comparison between the estimated quantity of canned goods declared surplus and the entire canning product of the country in 1918 as to several items:

	Cans.
Corn:
1918 pack	281, 324, 440
Surplus, War Department	31, 804, 644
Peas:
1918 pack	261, 557, 328

Tomatoes:

Surplus, War Department	84, 016, 334

Gen. March came upon the stand and gave a very vivid picture of the vast amount of foodstuffs we had when the armistice was declared. The general said:

So that eight months ahead of the armistice, on November 11, 1918, we were working on a program which contemplated laying down in March, 1919, an army of 80 divisions in France and 18 at home, which was about a million more than we had on November 11, when we cut it off and stopped it. But the buying going on in September, October, and November was not at all for those months but for the months ahead, for the spring campaign; so, on the day when the armistice was signed, and when I shut down everything in the United States, the storehouses all along the seacoast were filled with supplies, and trains were filled with supplies of foodstuffs making for the seacoast to go across the water, and food products in course of delivery all the way along back. When the armistice was signed we stopped trains and held trains filled with food products a long time, until we could get storage for them, and we encouraged contractors to store stuff and hold it for us until we could dispose of it. We had a three months' supply on November 11, which was not based on the strength of the Army as of that date, but based on the spring drive of the next year. We were buying supplies and laying in supplies, not for an army of more than 3,000,000 men, but for an army of more than 5,000,000 men.

So at the time of the signing of the armistice this immense supply of foodstuffs was proceeding on its way eight months ahead of time, so as to keep an ever-moving supply going to our men at the front. That was chopped off suddenly, and this immense stock of foodstuffs was left here, with the Army constantly being demobilized and supplies constantly becoming greater. On November 30, 19 days after the armistice, Gen. March issued a general order declaring a surplus of food supplies, and it was not until May 5, 1919, that actual sales occurred, according to the statement made by the War Department.

A statement has been made with reference to the policy of the War Department in disposing of these goods to the municipalities, but that statement is unfounded in respect to the willingness and disposition on the part of the War Department to dispose of the goods to the general public. They well knew the goods could not be placed with the municipalities because the municipalities did not have the power under their charters to take the goods, and it is only after this investigation started, when they saw the testimony that was presented, that they came before the public and stated that the goods could be sold directly to the public. I observe that no one who has made any statement here has said anything to the contrary. It is true that after they have seen the position they are in before the public they commence to cover up, and the whole testimony here that has been expressed in this so-called "views of the minority" is an attempt to cover up a wrong perpetrated on the people. The Secretary of War has had ample opportunity to express his desire to come before the committee. We called the men who were in authority, as has been stated—Gen. March, Chief of Staff of the Army; Gen. Rogers, Quartermaster General; Col. Davis, director of storage; and Mr. Hare, director of sales. They have stated what the facts are. The Secretary of War must have known what their statements were. Why did he not come, then, and ask to have a hearing before the committee, if he desired to make any statement to the contrary, and not wait until he knew the matter was coming before this body, to be then put before the public, before making any such request? It is very easy to go out and get testimony after the thing is over and fix it up so that it will appear fair on the surface, and most of the statements made by the gentlemen who spoke this morning are matters extraneous to the record and not before the court.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It appears from statements made here to-day that the War Department is marketing a good deal of this stuff. Does the committee approve of the method they have been pursuing?

Mr. MACGREGOR. We have not heard of any marketing except this plan to dispose of the foodstuffs to municipalities.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Does the committee approve of that method?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Hare stated that he did not think that would be very effective.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Does the committee approve of the method the War Department has adopted?

Mr. MACGREGOR. It is not effective.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virignia. If the committee does not approve of it, has the committee any alternative method to offer?

Mr. MACGREGOR. We have—selling directly to the public. We have provided in this resolution for the War Department to originate some plan of disposing of it directly to the people.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. You have not originated anything, but you have put it up to the War Department to originate a plan.

Mr. MACGREGOR. I do not know that that is the duty of the committee.

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, the gentleman wants the Secretary of War to go around and peddle this stuff to each house. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman consider it feasible for the Government to sell by retail directly to the individual consumer?

Mr. MACGREGOR. I have expressed no opinion along that line. I have an opinion of my own as to how it should be done. It could be done very easily, the same as in France, through cooperative organization in the various cities.

Mr. HULINGS. I would suggest to the gentleman that he permit the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] to answer that question.

Mr. FLOOD. The gentleman has stated, I believe, that he did not approve of the system of selling through the municipalities, because Mr. Hare said it would not be effective. Does the gentleman approve of the system recommended by the Secretary of War since Mr. Hare left for France, which is to sell to a group of citizens in every city whose financial standings are approved of?

Mr. MACGREGOR. I anticipate what the gentleman is going to ask. I shall approve of that, but he had not gotten that scheme until these facts came out.

Mr. FLOOD. Oh, yes; but that report was not filed until yesterday.

Mr. BAER. The gentleman would have approved of that if he had started that some six months ago.

Mr. MACGREGOR. The Secretary of War had abundant opportunity to know what testimony had been offered before the committee, and announced that policy after the facts had been disclosed.

I wish I had time to go into the question of the canners. When Gen. Rogers came back from France in February and became Quartermaster General of the Army he intended to dispose of these goods to the public.

He announced this intention, and immediately the president of the National Canners' Association came to Washington and protested against doing this, because an agreement had previously been made by Gen. Wood, director of purchase and storage, on December 6, 1918, in a letter addressed to Frank

E. Gorrell, secretary of the National Canners' Association, in which he stated:

You are further advised that it is not intended to offer the surplus that the Army owns to the domestic trade during the present season.

Gen. Rogers testified:

They called my attention to this letter, and on the strength of their calling my attention to it and verifying the fact that this letter had been written by Gen. Wood and had the approval of the Secretary of War I, of course, reversed the order that the supplies should be put on the market.

Not being able to carry out his purpose of disposing of the surplus to the people, advice was asked of a committee of the National Canners' Association as to the method of disposal, and on March 15, 1919, a letter was written by Frank Gerber, the president of the Canners' Association, to Gen. Rogers, containing the statement:

The committee hopes that consideration may be given to the possibility of making canned peas, corn, tomatoes, and salmon an issued ration for the Army instead of a sales article, which we understood to be the present arrangement.

The advice of the committee of canners was followed, and on March 24, 1919, an order was issued as follows:

[Circular No. 140.]

FORCED ISSUE OF CANNED GOODS.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 24, 1919.

Effective April 1, 1919, and thereafter until further orders, the following percentages of canned vegetables, where available or where they can be made available, will be issued in lieu of the garrison ration authorized by paragraph 1205, Army Regulations; namely, canned tomatoes 20 per cent, canned corn 10 per cent, canned peas or canned string beans 10 per cent, canned pumpkin or canned squash 2½ per cent. (432.2, A. G. O.)

By order of the Secretary of War:

FRANK MCINTYRE,
Major General, Acting Chief of Staff.

Official:
J. T. KERR,
The Adjutant General.

Col. Davis testifying upon this subject said:

Mr. REAVIS. You were trying to relieve the canner of any competition from surplus products which the Army had by unnecessarily putting it on the ration list of the soldier, and their consuming it, so that it would not be sold?

Col. DAVIS. Exactly, yes. In other words, we were trying to eat it up in the Army.

Col. Davis further testified:

As to the fact of any surplus being dumped in this country, it did not mean that we were not going to continue our efforts to sell some of our goods abroad. It would take us, with the strength of the Army that we had at that time, it would take a long while to use the entire amount, and it was intended to show these people that there would be no surplus so far as they were concerned to harass the conditions in the United States.

Gen. Rogers testified as follows:

Mr. REAVIS. So that we come to the point that the American public was deprived of the opportunity of purchasing hundreds of millions of canned vegetables by an agreement of Gen. Wood with the canners, is that true?

Gen. ROGERS. That is practically true; yes, sir.

Mr. REAVIS. And that was carried out by you because you had been advised that it had met with the approval of the Secretary of War?

Gen. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. Hare, the director of sales, certainly was in a position to have some idea with reference to the policy of the department, and he stated that he thought it a fair inference that these goods were added to the ration list of the soldier not because the soldier needed them, but because the War Department wanted to protect the canners from competition that would result from a sale of the millions of cans of vegetables that it had on hand.

It will be noted that the soldier was not to get any more to eat by this arrangement, but he was to be used as a means of getting the surplus of canned vegetables out of the way.

Much more of the testimony could be quoted to substantiate the fact that the War Department has been acting in concert with the packers and canners to help them maintain the price of foodstuffs and to increase their profits.

Is there any reason that should lead our Government to increase the profits of these concerns? The average net profit on investment made by canners was 9 per cent in 1916 and 32 per cent in 1917.

The largest contributors to the National Canners' Association in 1918 were Armour & Co. and Libby, McNeil & Libby. Armour & Co. has become the largest jobber of canned goods in the United States. Their sales increased from about $6,500,000 in 1916 to nearly $16,000,000 in 1917. Swift & Co. controls Libby, McNeil & Libby, and that concern is the second largest packer of canned goods in the United States.

In view of the fact that the National Canners' Association has claimed to have been very patriotic and that it rendered great service during the war period, all honor should be given to them for the service rendered, but when it comes to the matter of profits to the canning industry in general a reference to the report of the Federal Trade Commission on canned goods of May 15, 1918, will show:

The increase in profit in 1917 deserves particular attention in view of the fact that the regulations of the Food Administration were inaugurated in that year.

The prices for the Army purchases were fixed after most futures had been sold, and were higher than future prices, though lower than some of the later spot prices.

The ruling of November, 1917, which allowed the canner to base his price on cost, enabled him to make a large profit because even a normal percentage on such an increased cost amounted to a considerable sum.

All over this broad country of ours there is going up the demand that something be done to relieve the people from the appalling cost of foodstuffs. They are looking to their Government to relieve them from the oppressor and the profiteer. They certainly have a right to expect that those who have been placed in positions of power and influence shall use their best efforts to protect them and adopt all possible methods to relieve conditions of distress. What adequate words of condemnation can be used when it is found that the executive branch of our Government is conniving and conspiring with the profiteers to prevent the placing upon the market of vast stores of foodstuffs; that the executive branch of the Government preferred that good substantial food should decay and become of no value rather than permit it to come into competition with the goods of those whose aim and purpose was to keep up the price; a Government that would rather send it to foreign peoples to consume than have it consumed by its own people; would rather throw it into the sea, or force the soldier to eat it, so that it would be consumed, or allow it to rot, than get into the mouths of those who had by self-sacrifice and deprivation furnished the means to purchase these very foodstuffs?

Mr. FLOOD. Does the gentleman wish me to consume some of my time?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DOREMUS]. [Applause.]

Mr. DOREMUS. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I desire briefly to review some testimony that was taken by subcommittee No. 4. Before doing so I desire to read into the RECORD a statement made by Col. Davis, director of storage, on the question of the agreement that was made between Gen. Wood and the Canners' Association. So much has been said about the agreement that I deem it due to the House that it have in its possession the full facts regarding the circumstances that prevailed at the time that agreement was made. Here is the testimony of Col. Davis:

Col. DAVIS. In order that you may thoroughly understand the action of Gen. Wood it is necessary that you should know something in regard to the general situation pertaining to the canning of vegetables and which were the reasons advanced by Mr. Gerber at this conference at which I was present with Gen. Rogers, and which were presumably the reasons for the action of Gen. Wood and the approval of the Secretary of War. Canned vegetables are sold by the canners to the jobbers, and the contracts are made by the canners with the jobbers and wholesalers each year along in January and February, before the ground is plowed in which to plant the vegetables which are to be canned. These contracts between the canner and the jobber are banked by the canner with his local bank. You understand that the great bulk of the canning industry of the country is in the hands of very small organizations; they are not large corporations, but are small individual companies or people, as a rule, with small capital. These contracts which they make in January and February with the jobbers and wholesalers form a considerable portion of the capital which they must have in order to finance their year's work. As I say, they are banked as collateral, and they draw against that for the rehabilitation of their equipment and their preparation for the canning work of the season. The canner, then, on his part makes a contract with the farmer in his locality to supply him so many bushels of tomatoes and so many bushels of corn and peas and the various other things he is going to pack. This contract which the farmer makes with the canner is also banked, and the farmer draws against that as collateral for the purchase of his seed, for the purchase of his implements, and so on, for the succeeding year. So that these contracts which are made in January and February between the canner and the wholesaler are a very important element in the working out of this new season's work on the part of the farmer and the canner and all the way back.

Due to the fact that the country knew that there was this enormous surplus of canned goods which was likely to be dumped by the Government on the country, the whole situation as far as canning and planting was concerned was at a standstill. The wholesalers could get no bids for their stocks from the retailers, and, as you know, last year a very considerable increment was given to the household production of canned and preserved foods. The Food Commission encouraged home industry in the canning trade, as you will remember, so that the demand for canned goods on the part of the consumer of the retailer was very much reduced. Therefore the retailer, with this shadow of an enormous surplus hanging over him, would not buy from the wholesaler, and the wholesaler would not make any contract with the canners, and the result was, as Mr. Gerber stated in March or the latter part of April in this conference at which I was present, that whereas under ordinary circumstances contracts at that date would be fully completed, yet, due to the agitation which had arisen on the possibility of this surplus being thrown on the market, there was hardly a contract in existence between the canners and the wholesalers for a sale of this year's goods.

The consequence was that the farmers were getting no contracts from the canners, and that fields were lying idle and would lie idle this summer which ordinarily would be planted in products that would go into the canning industry and at a time when the world was going to need every article of food that it could possibly get. This was the argument which had been advanced to Gen. Wood and to Mr. Thorne, and which was the basis of the action which Gen. Wood took in agreeing not to put this surplus on the market until the products of this year's crops had been harvested and canned.

I simply call attention to this testimony for the purpose of permitting the House to have the facts which surrounded the situation at the time Gen. Wood made the agreement with the Canners' Association. The reckless disregard of facts disclosed in the majority report is probably without a parallel in the history of committee procedure in this House. The misrepresentation that has gone to the country as to the condition of the surplus Army food products has embarrassed the department and delayed their sale to the public. After trying to convince the country to the best of their ability that these foods are spoiled and rapidly deteriorating the majority of the committee come blandly into this House with a request that the Secretary of War proceed to sell them direct to the private consumer. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It has been stated that this is not a political report. I pass no judgment upon that at this time, but I want some Member of this House, upon either side, to tell me what service this committee is performing to the country when it tries to convince the consuming public that these goods are spoiled and rotten and rapidly deteriorating, and then come forward here with the request that the Secretary of War sell them direct to the consumer. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The majority of the committee has played into the hands of the food profiteers of the country as effectually as though the thing had been deliberately planned.

The majority report is water on the wheel of every anarchist in the land. While there are those in our midst who would destroy this Government they are not numerically strong. By no act of ours should we strengthen their hands or augment their numbers.

Whenever we indulge in serious charges against the conduct of the Government that are unfounded in fact we furnish grist for the mill of every Bolshevik, every I. W. W., and every other discordant element in our society. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The majority report bears upon its face unmistakable evidence of the unseemly haste with which it was prepared. It abounds with charges that a more complete investigation would have disclosed to have been untrue and bristles with accusations at variance with the testimony taken. Let us briefly analyze these charges. The majority report states: "The inactivity of the Government in the disposition of these food products was and is the result of the well-defined policy of the Secretary of War to withhold them from the domestic market and to protect the interests from which these products had been purchased, with the ultimate intention of disposing of them abroad, so far as the circumstances would permit."

The testimony taken by the subcommittee effectually disposes of this charge. On page 20, No. 1, of the testimony, Mr. REAVIS, chairman of the subcommittee, inserted in the record a statement of the director of sales as to the surplus canned meats of the Army June 3, 1919.

Now, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] has quoted from this report, and he has taken from it such parts as he thought would establish the case which he is trying to make against the War Department. Let me call attention, gentlemen of the House, to some things contained in this report. Now, this is the report of the director of sales, Mr. Hare, whom the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. REAVIS] has eulogized when he was upon the stand, and said that he was proud that he was connected with the Government. Now, what did Mr. Hare say?

> The general question was discussed as to how this canned meat could be marketed in this country to the best advantage. The department had no organization to retail this large supply to individual consumers, and the packers' opinion was therefore asked as to what was the best method to dispose of it.

Also:

> The question of the disposal of these canned meats in this country was discussed with the Salvation Army; Red Cross; Farmers' Union, who distribute food products through cooperative stores; the Central Purchasing Committee of New York City, which does the purchasing of all charitable, penal, and hospital institutions in the city of New York; Austin Nichols & Co., of Brooklyn, and R. C. Williams & Co., of New York City, two of the largest wholesale grocery houses in the country. Col. Baker, representing the Salvation Army, stated that they might be able to buy a limited amount of the canned meats provided a satisfactory price were named, as they were obliged to sell at a very low price. The Red Cross have no distributing means; the Farmers' Union stated that they did not care to purchase any of it, and advised strongly that it be sold for export. The Central Purchasing Committee of New York City stated that they purchase only fresh meats, and unless a considerable change was made in their dietary regulations they would not be able to purchase it. Austin, Nichols and R. C. Williams & Co. stated that they would be interested in a small quantity at a price for export. The matter was also taken up with A. B. Rodway & Co., exporters of canned-food products, of New York City, and Nogan Garrison & Co., merchants, representatives of groceries and canned meats in New York City, who stated that they would be interested in small amounts for export solely, and that no market, in their opinion, existed for this type of canned meat in this country.

I also quote from the report of the director of sales, as follows:

> We are now circularizing approximately 20,000 State, municipal, and charitable institutions, asking them to bid on this surplus meat, and we may be able to dispose of a certain amount of it in this way. We are also circularizing all the dealers, wholesale and retail grocers, and other dealers in food products who may be interested, and this sale is being advertised in all daily papers in States where the meat is stored and in trade papers, appealing to produce men, wholesale grocers, hotel men, and large dealers in foodstuffs.

I also quote from the report of the director of sales of June 3, 1919, as follows:

> We are also seeing if arrangements can not be made through which some of this canned meat may be offered direct to the public at the warehouses where it is stored in Chicago, Columbus, Schenectady, New Cumberland (Pa.), Newport News, Baltimore, Omaha, New Orleans, Boston, San Antonio, New York, St. Louis, El Paso, Atlanta, and San Francisco.

In the report of the director of sales he also states:

> It must be remembered that all of this canned meat is considered perishable, i. e., that under the storage conditions maintained by the Army it is doubtful that it will remain marketable for a longer period than nine months. I also want to draw your attention to the fact that once a can is opened it spoils very rapidly, which would make it rather difficult for the average small household to make use of the larger size cans which the Army has for disposal.

The report of the director of sales concludes as follows:

> It seems advisable, therefore, that we continue our present efforts to market as much of this surplus as possible in this country at the best price obtainable and sell the remainder for export. It must be borne in mind, however, that if a low price is established here for domestic sales it will make it very difficult to secure a higher price for the same class of canned meats from exporters.

This statement of the director of sales as to surplus canned meats was made June 3, and it is obvious that the various steps taken to dispose of the surplus in this country were taken before that date. Notwithstanding this undisputed testimony, the chairman of the subcommittee, who had the statement inserted in the hearings, states in the majority report that it was and is the well-defined policy of the Secretary of War to withhold these products from the domestic market and to protect the interests from which these products had been purchased, with the ultimate intention of disposing of them abroad.

On page 16 of the testimony Mr. Hare testifies as follows:

> We sent out some 25,000 offers for bids, taking two examples. For instance, in Boston we sent out, if my recollection serves me, some 400 or 500 offers for bids and got only 2 requests. In New York we sent out some 800 or 900 offers for bids and got 4 requests, and so it went on around the country. We threw all the bids out as they were all too low. Capt. Clement, of the Surplus Property Division, is now trying to negotiate sales to highest bidders. I should like to state that the policy governing the sales organizations is to get the highest price we can get for surplus goods for the benefit of the Government Treasury.

Another statement in the majority report that is directly contradicted by the testimony reads as follows:

> On July 11 of the present year, and after the War Expenditures Committee was appointed, the director of sales issued to the press a publicity statement with reference to the sale of meats and vegetables. This statement provides that meat and vegetables shall be purchased only by municipalities.

The testimony I have already quoted, and there is much more in the record, proves clearly that it was not the intention of the director of sales to dispose of these surplus food products to municipalities only, but that they were trying to sell to all classes of purchasers in this country.

Referring to the order directing that the surplus of canned vegetables be fed to the soldiers, the report says:

> This order would have resulted in a loss to the Government of millions of dollars to be derived from the sale of this surplus, as well as depriving the American people of a large quantity of food.

As a matter of fact clearly disclosed by the testimony, the order could not result in the loss of millions of dollars to the Government or deprive the American people of a large quantity of food. The vegetable ration per soldier per day—see testimony of Col. Davis, No. 2, pages 50–52—is a pound and a quarter. This ration was a pound and a quarter per day before the order was issued, and it was a pound and a quarter after it was issued. There is not a child in America who does not know that that order would leave just as much food in the hands of the people as there was before it was issued and that the Government could lose no money by reason of it.

Gentlemen, there is not a line, a word, or a scintilla of evidence taken by subcommittee No. 4 that substantiates the charge that it was the plan of the War Department to sell these supplies to municipalities only. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If there is, I call now upon the chairman of subcommittee No. 4 to point it out. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield to me? Unfortunately I was engaged and did not hear the last remark.

Mr. DOREMUS. I made the statement that there is not a word or a line of testimony taken by the gentleman's committee that substantiates the charge that it was the plan of the War Department to sell these supplies to municipalities only, and if there is I ask the gentleman now to point it out to the House. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. REAVIS. If I could get the time, I would do it in a holy minute. I understood the gentleman's time had expired. If he has additional time and will yield it to me, I will point it out.

Mr. FLOOD. I can not yield additional time.

Mr. DOREMUS. I will be glad if the gentleman will give me five minutes of his time.

Mr. REAVIS. I have not any time, unfortunately. I wish I had.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, how does the time stand?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Thirty-eight minutes remain on each side.

Mr. DOREMUS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] may have five minutes in which to point out any part of the testimony taken which substantiates the charges of the committee report that it was the intention of the War Department to dispose of this product to municipalities only.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Nebraska have five minutes for the purpose he mentions.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I am not going to object. I want to know if this is to come out of the regular time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If additional time is granted by unanimous consent, it would not come out of the time granted by the rule. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, in order that I may know just what service I can be to the gentleman from Michigan I would like to get the Reporter to give me his language in which he asked unanimous consent that I should have five minutes for some purpose. What does the gentleman want me to answer? He states that he asked unanimous consent that I might have five minutes to justify some portion of the report. What is it?

Mr. DOREMUS. To justify that portion of your report where you declare explicitly that the plan of the War Department, promulgated in July, was to sell to municipalities only. That is the exact language of your report. Point out the evidence to substantiate that charge.

Mr. REAVIS. There are a good many things, directly and indirectly, which show that to be the intention of the War Department. There was never any disposition on the part of the War Department, as shown by the testimony of Gen. Rogers, Mr. Hare, Col. Davis, and the other gentlemen whose names I can not for the moment recall, to do anything but prevent the sale of these food products on the American market. In the testimony of Gen. Rogers, found in volume 5, pages 309 and 310, with reference to the sale of these food products——

Mr. DOREMUS. Is that the testimony that has not yet been printed?

Mr. REAVIS. It has not yet been printed, for the reason that Mr. Rogers has not furnished the exhibits which must go in the testimony when printed; but this testimony the minority Members have had access to at all times. On page 309 I asked Gen. Rogers the following questions:

Mr. REAVIS. What I am trying to get at is that if you had followed your original intention the surplus canned vegetables would have gone to the American public, would they not?

Gen. ROGERS. There is no question about that.

Mr. REAVIS. And you did not follow your original intention because of the agreement of Gen. R. E. Wood, quartermaster——

Gen. ROGERS (interposing). Acting quartermaster.

Mr. REAVIS (continuing). With the canners?

Gen. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. REAVIS. So that we come to the point that the American public was deprived of the opportunity to purchase hundreds of millions of canned vegetables by an agreement of R. E. Wood with the canners; is that true?

Gen. ROGERS. That is practically true; yes, sir.

Mr. REAVIS. And that was carried out by you because you had been advised that it had met with the approval of the Secretary of War?

Gen. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Following that up, you come to other portions of the testimony which show that at the very meeting of which you have just been reading, published on June 3, there was an agreement at that time between the packers' representatives, who were the only civilians present, and the officials of the War Department that found expression in a cable, which you gentlemen read, that was sent immediately upon the adjournment of this meeting to Hoover to sell the meat products abroad. Now, you have got your canned vegetables, which Rogers said it was the purpose of the Secretary of War under his order not to sell on the domestic market, and you have your meat products, which under the advice of the packers they were trying to sell abroad.

Do not interrupt me. I refuse to yield.

Mr. DOREMUS. I have not interrupted the gentleman.

Mr. REAVIS. The gentleman looks so fierce when he stands there——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be further extended five minutes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. For the purpose of answering the question of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DOREMUS].

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I think it should be confined to answering that question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Nebraska be further extended five minutes for the purpose of answering the question. Is there objection?

Mr. FLOOD. Reserving the right to object, I feel that the gentleman from Nebraska probably does not understand the question.

Mr. REAVIS. I understand the question. I am getting to it. These gentlemen started this. Let me finish it.

Mr. FLOOD. The question was asked in reference to an order of July 11——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I object, unless the gentleman will answer the question and not talk about other matters.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. REAVIS. I refuse to yield.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FLOOD. I reserved the right to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair called for objections and no objection was made.

Mr. FLOOD. I wanted to state that I had no objection to the gentleman from Nebraska proceeding, but——

Mr. KNUTSON. No objection was made, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No objection was made, but the Chair will put the question again. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, the point I am getting to is this: After it was exposed by this special committee that it was the policy of the War Department to sell this stuff abroad, for the first time from the War Department came a publicity notice issued on July 3, reiterated on July 11, that they were going to permit municipalities to buy this stuff. They must have known, because everybody else knows it, that 90 per cent of the municipalities are deprived of the right to buy it by their charters, and the only thing, the only entity, the only person, that the War Department in that publicity notice gave the right to purchase this stuff was the only entity which under the law could not purchase it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I want to say to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] that right down in his own district—I think it is in his district——

Mr. FLOOD. It is in my State——

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Clinedinst, with whom he went to the Secretary of War the other day, representing a labor union that wanted this stuff, wanted to buy it for the purposes of the people within the union—and if I am not right the gentleman can contradict me—having a credit of $100,000 to buy it. Is not that true?

Mr. FLOOD. One hundred and ninety thousand dollars.

Mr. REAVIS. Yes; and yet when they came to buy it the only way they could buy it was to have the mayor of Newport News make an order for it.

Mr. FLOOD. Indorse it.

Mr. REAVIS. Now, then, if there is any general purpose on the part of the War Department to sell to anyone besides municipalities, why did the labor union have to buy through the municipality? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FLOOD. I will answer that question.

Mr. REAVIS. How much time have I, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has three minutes.

Mr. DOREMUS and Mr. FLOOD rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. REAVIS. I will yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. FLOOD. They put that order through the mayor of that town prior to the time that this order was enlarged by the Secretary of War authorizing any group of citizens or a municipality whose financial ability was indorsed by the mayor to buy for the citizens of that municipality.

Mr. REAVIS. Let me say one word further, then. If there has been an order enlarging the right to purchase, it has come since the 3d of July and since the purposes of this department were exposed by this committee. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DOREMUS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REAVIS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DOREMUS. The gentleman has now been allowed 10 minutes in which to answer the question that I propounded to him. Here is his statement in the majority report——

Mr. REAVIS. The gentleman gives me too much credit. It is a statement of the committee.

Mr. DOREMUS. It is the statement contained in the majority report, and, as I understand it, the gentleman prepared it. This statement provides that meat and vegetables shall be purchased only by municipalities—by municipalities only. That is the statement, and they were to have 10 days in which to make payment to the Government. Now, I ask you again to point to a scintilla of testimony to substantiate that statement. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. REAVIS. The very statement that I hold in my hand now, dated July 11, and the copy previously issued on July 3, gives permission to nobody but municipalities in that statement to buy. [Applause on the Republican side.] Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert this statement in the RECORD.

Mr. FLOOD. It does not take away the right of all others to buy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to insert the statement in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the statement referred to:

JULY 11, 1919.

The War Department authorizes publication of the following statement from the office of the director of sales:

The director of sales announces the prices at which the surplus stocks of canned and cured meats held by the War Department are offered to municipalities throughout the country to be retailed to the general public through markets controlled by municipalities. The canned vegetables available to towns and cities will be sold to the municipalities at their invoice cost to the Government. Since these goods were produced by hundreds of different canners at varying prices, the prices which will be quoted to municipalities may vary slightly in the several zones. Quotations on the vegetables may be obtained from the surplus property officer at each of the 13 zone supply offices.

The prices for the canned and cured meats, which are approximately 20 per cent below the cost of these commodities to the Government, are uniform throughout the 13 zones in which the surplus stocks of meats are located. They are as follows:

Beef, corned:
No. 1 cans	per dozen	$3.60
No. 2 cans	do	6.96
6-pound cans	do	24.00
Beef, roast:
No. 1 cans	do	3.48
1-pound cans	do	4.92
2-pound cans	do	7.92
6-pound cans	do	26.40
Hash, corned beef:
1-pound cans	do	2.76
2-pound cans	do	4.80
Bacon:
In crates	per pound	.34
12-pound tins	do	.36

As has been announced, this subsistence is offered to municipalities in not less than carload lots, but at those warehouses at which stocks of vegetables and meats are stored a municipality will be permitted to purchase a mixed carload of either vegetables or meats, or both vegetables and meats. The prices quoted are f. o. b. location. The War Department can not pay freight charges or transport the goods. The responsibility for such detail must be assumed by the municipality.

To make these food supplies as accessible as possible to the general public, the War Department will permit municipalities to purchase the surplus stocks and defer payment until they shall have been disposed of, provided this extension of credit shall not exceed a period of 10 days after the goods shall actually have been delivered to the municipality.

The War Department will negotiate only with a properly accredited official of a municipality for the sale of this subsistence. It will not concern itself with the manner in which the municipality, having obtained the goods, shall offer it to the public further than to stipulate that the municipality shall sell at cost. The municipal government is at liberty to conduct the sale of the foodstuffs under the direction of municipal officials or civic bodies to whom it may delegate authority.

Municipalities desiring to take advantage of the War Department's offer are requested to negotiate directly with the surplus property officer at the nearest of the zone supply offices, which are located in the following cities: Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Newport News, Atlanta, Chicago, St. Louis, New Orleans, Fort Sam Houston, El Paso, Omaha, and San Francisco. These surplus property offices have been instructed by the War Department to make sales to municipalities under the conditions prescribed by the War Department and are supplied with complete information concerning the commodities available in each of the zones and the actual prices at which they may be disposed of.

Mr. DOREMUS. Does the gentleman from Nebraska still insist that under that publicity statement sales must be limited to municipalities alone?

Mr. REAVIS. "The gentleman from Nebraska" insists upon this, that the department had never indicated before that publicity statement that anybody could buy except for export trade.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. REAVIS. I wish somebody would give me five minutes more.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I am going a step further, a step that I would have gone if I had had more time this morning. Look at page 76 of volume 2 as another evidence of the policy of this department to keep from the American people the right to consume and use the very things that they purchased at great sacrifice with their own money. It does not refer particularly to food, but it refers to a general policy, and is a part of it in this case. It is a letter written by J. B. Irving for the Chief of the Surplus Property Division to Mr. Frank Eldridge Webb in New York on the subject of underwear and hosiery, in response to a letter from Mr. Webb, who wanted to buy the product. Here is the letter showing, as I say, that there is some general policy:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
PURCHASE, STORAGE AND TRAFFIC DIVISION,
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF STORAGE,
Washington, June 5, 1919.

From: Surplus Property Division, Office of the Director of Storage, Munitions Building, Washington, D. C.
To: Frank Eldridge Webb, Grand Central Terminal, New York, N. Y.
Subject: Underwear and hosiery.

1. Acknowledgment is made of your letter of June 2 on the above subject.

2. Advice is given that at the present moment no definite policy has been formulated on the disposition of these items. We are in active consultation with the knit-goods association, and have not yet decided to offer any of these items for sale under sealed bids in the domestic market. If this policy is consummated later on, you will have an opportunity to bid.

3. In the meantime this office has endeavored to interest many exporters in the sale of this property in foreign markets. If you are interested in this aspect of the situation, suggestion is made that you examine the stocks at Philadelphia and submit an offer.

By authority of the Director of Purchase and Storage.

J. B. IRVING,
For Chief Surplus Property Division.

You will observe he says, "We are in active consultation with the knit-goods association" that sold them. [Applause on the Republican side.] There they absolutely decline to accept a bid unless it is a bid for export, where the American people could not get control of the property.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REAVIS. I will.

Mr. KNUTSON. They refused absolutely to consider a bid for home consumption?

Mr. REAVIS. They had refused to consider any bid for general supply for home consumption until this special committee on the investigation of the War Department exposed their policy. They are anxious enough to sell now. [Applause on the Republican side.] Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman yields back three minutes.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DOREMUS] may have 10 minutes in which to reply to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan may have 10 minutes in which to reply to the gentleman from Nebraska. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DOREMUS] made this challenge and invited this controversy, and the time was yielded by his side.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. By unanimous consent.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I will consent to five minutes. If the gentleman will take that, I will consent. Otherwise I will have to object.

Mr. FLOOD. In view of the statement of the gentleman from Illinois, I modify my request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman modifies his request, and asks that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DOREMUS] may proceed for five minutes, to reply to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOREMUS. Mr. Speaker, I do not think I will require over one minute, unless I am interrupted. Of course, every Member of this House understands thoroughly that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] has not answered the question that I asked him, and that he has not attempted to answer it. [Applause.] Now, I quote again from the majority report prepared by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS]:

On July 11 of the present year, and after the War Expenditures Committee was appointed, the director of sales issued to the press a publicity statement with reference to the sale of meats and vegetables. This statement provides that meat and vegetables shall be purchased only by municipalities.

Now, if he means anything by that language, he means that the sale by the Government is limited to municipalities, to the exclusion of everybody else. Can there be any question about that being the proper interpretation? That is the statement I asked the gentleman from Nebraska about, and I called upon him to point to one scintilla of testimony taken by his committee to substantiate that statement, and he has failed to do it. [Applause.] Now, unless the gentleman from Nebraska desires to ask another question, I am through. [Applause.]

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield nine minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. JEFFERIS].

Mr. JEFFERIS. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, it is very evident that the report of the majority has made certain definite and specific charges. It is also evident to everyone who sits here that these charges have been met by the minority Members with numerous excuses and explanations that do not satisfy a thinking mind. My friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA], says that the people of the country are suspicious of the Republican Members of this investigating committee. If they are suspicious I have not up to this time ascertained that fact; but I do know that last November the people of this country were suspicious of the Democratic majority in this House and of the administration, and that accounts for the presence of the Republican majority in this House to-day. [Applause.]

My friend from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] told us in his eloquent speech that last week—nearly eight months after the armistice—the Secretary of War had decided to throw open the opportunity to buy these food products to any body of patriotic gentlemen of any city who might cooperate and put their funds together to purchase these supplies in the name of cities from the War Department. Great God! Did it take eight months for him to devise such a plan as that? If so, if it took eight months to do that, it is a complete refutation of the claim that he had any such policy before last week. If it takes eight months to develop such a policy as that, one conceived after this committee began its investigation, we can not know how much time it would have required for him to have invented any such policy if this committee had not been investigating these facts.

Gentlemen, the minority charge that the majority report contains misstatements of fact, whereas it is the minority report that is misleading. On page 7 of the minority report, in the letter of my friend the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD], it is stated:

6. I note the report says there are millions of cans of surplus fish. My information is there is no surplus of fish. All canned salmon has been turned back to the canners at cost to the Government. The reason for this was the fact that this salmon did not come up to Government specifications and consequently the War Department compelled the canners to take it back at the price the Government paid for it.

The minority report says specifically that the Government has no canned salmon; that it has already been turned back to the canners at the price which the Government paid for it. Is that true? Is the minority report true? If so, then the canners have had the benefit of the use of the Government's money, whatever benefit there was in that, during all this time. But the fact is that the Government has not turned the salmon back to the canners. I happened to know that in the city of Omaha, from whence I come, there is stored a large amount of canned salmon in the possession and control of the War Department, and which was shipped there from the Pacific coast. And the other day I got in communication with my home city through the kindness of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS], chairman of the subcommittee, and who obtained from Gen. Rogers the right to inspect the canned salmon stored in Omaha, and which the minority report says has been turned back to the canners at the price the Government paid for it, and which the minority claim did not come up to Government specifications.

This morning, as the sun rose over the city of Washington, I received this telegram from men whom I know, reputable men engaged in the wholesale grocery business in the central portion of our country and who had made an inspection of 850,000 cans of salmon yesterday afternoon in the city of Omaha. They wired me as follows:

OMAHA, NEBR., July 29, 1919.

Hon. ALBERT W. JEFFERIS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Your letter received. The sender, in company with Mr. Hughes, of Hughes Co., Mr. Keogh, of Paxton & Gallagher, Mr. Murphy, of McCord-Brady, inspected salmon. Found same wholesales good and fit for food. The above wholesale grocers offer the Government $10 per case on all red salmon, $6.80 per case on all pink salmon f. o. b. Omaha, Government warehouse, net cash. This offer good only for immediate acceptance and immediate delivery. Omaha entirely out salmon. Wholesale grocers can distribute right now to advantage, same time relieve food shortage. We understand above prices considerable in excess of what Government paid packers. The very fact three largest wholesale grocers in Omaha willing to buy this salmon is conclusive proof and evidence salmon absolutely mercantile. Examination shows about 600,000 cans pink salmon, 250,000 cans red salmon, both grades packed 48 cans to the case. We understand new salmon now in transit from Alaska. We believe Government's best interest sell this salmon immediately. Let the salmon go into consumption. The above parties bidding on this salmon are responsible wholesale grocers, not speculators.

NEWMAN BROKERAGE CO.,
M. B. NEWMAN, President.

Now, if this be true, why send this salmon back to the canners, who canned it last year? The Government has had its money in it. If this canned salmon has been kept stored at the Government's expense and is to be sent back to the canners at this time, when the market is barren, upon the false claim that it is not up to the Government requirements, and thus permit the canners to have this year's crop and last year's crop also, that they may dictate the price to the American people—if that is the purpose, it is to my mind one of the greatest outrages that could be perpetrated upon a free people, even in the name of democracy. [Applause.]

As a matter of fact, if I am correctly informed, the price offered by the wholesale grocers of Omaha for this salmon is far above the price paid by the Government for it. A sale of it to the grocers for consumption by the people at this time would relieve the food situation in the central portion of our country to some extent, permit the Government to get its money out of the salmon, and possibly prevent the raising of the price for the salmon crop of the present year.

Why should the salmon, in which the War Department has invested the people's money, be turned back to the salmon canners? Did the War Department accept salmon which was not up to requirements or has it deteriorated because of long storage? Why store salmon not up to requirements? Why invest the people's money in such an enterprise and eight months after the armistice turn it back to the canners?

The truth is as stated by the wholesale grocers who inspected it yesterday. The salmon to-day is wholesome, entirely fit for human consumption, but the administration forces of our Government, by way of excuse to turn the salmon back to the canners instead of selling it for food purposes, are attempting to put forth the claim that the salmon does not come up to Government requirements. Have the Government requirements changed since the salmon was accepted or has the salmon changed since it was stored or have conditions so changed that it is now necessary to stabilize the business of the canners of salmon by permitting them to either destroy last year's crop of salmon or add it to their present holdings, and thus control the price of salmon for the coming year? These are pertinent questions, and the American people are on guard. The consumers of America will never tolerate any copartnership between the salmon packers and the administrative branch of our Government, which has for its purpose the maintenance of the high cost of living so as to stabilize the market prices for the salmon packers [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DONOVAN].

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, those of us who were fortunate enough to be here early this morning and to hear our revered and respected Chaplain offer the prayer and give it earnest thought might well take the text and apply it to the situation confronting us here to-day. He prayed that we might dispel pessimism, that we might inculcate and grasp optimism, that we might in these times be fair men and do for the country and the world some real good.

I believe that is the spirit in which this question should be approached. There is, in my mind, no question that this House is united in the main proposition; that we want this vast supply of merchandise disposed of as quickly, as profitably, and as expeditiously as possible; that we all want the American people to have the advantage of it and by so doing reduce as far as possible the intolerable standard of the high cost of living. The problem is not a partisan one; it is an economic one.

At this time I desire to make a statement in explanation of the absence of my name with that of my colleague from the minority report, which appears in this morning's issue of the RECORD. Having been granted unanimous consent for 10 days' leave of absence, owing to illness in my family, and having therewith arrived at my country home, some hundreds of miles distant, I was necessarily precluded from attesting my name to the minority report. I therefore take this opportunity of declaring my approval of the same, and if I had been available would have attested my signature thereto.

I am opposed to the resolution of the majority and the committee report supporting the same. I object to its adoption, for the reason that giving it the most generous construction and favorable consideration it must necessarily be placed in that detestable class of "whereas" resolutions that simply suggest but do not affirm or construct, and does not purport to be as well as, or better than, the War Department is now doing.

In my judgment, the problem which to-day confronts us for solution is twofold:

(a) Has the War Department employed and is it now employing sane, reasonable, expeditious, and businesslike methods in preparing, inventorying, and declaring a correct surplus and in marketing its tremendous volume of foodstuffs?

(b) Does and will the resolution now under consideration suggest, offer, or direct a more complete, efficient, practicable, and expeditious plan than that which the War Department is now employing?

The subject now in compass in this resolution and all testimony taken in support thereof was within the jurisdiction of subcommittee No. 4—Quartermaster Corps. As the minority member of that subcommittee I will address myself to the testimony with the view of enlightening the House, with the hope that its conclusion will be the same as mine—judging solely from the evidence—that the War Department has been most efficient and in the interest of the American people in its administration of this most important trust.

The Government's war machine was constructed solely as a "go-ahead" proposition. It was planned and expected that not until July 1, 1919, would the World War be terminated, at which time our troops would march into Berlin as conquerors. It was a straightaway mechanism with no reverse gear or brakes, solely with one purpose—that of going ahead and smashing forever German autocracy.

To accomplish this the Government planned having 5,000,000 men in France by that time, and every purchase of clothing, munitions, and foodstuffs was based on that estimate. A strategic program planned by our very efficient General Staff, in cooperation with Gen. Pershing, provided that at all times during hostilities the Pershing army was to have a 90-day surplus of food supplies—45 days' supply at the base in France, 30 days' supply at the zone nearest the battle line, and 15 days' supply in the front-line trenches.

The purpose of this precaution and masterful arrangement was in event of submarining or destroying of our transports in transit to France our forces in France would have a sufficient supply of foodstuffs to sustain them until the transport system could be rehabilitated. The War Department found that to keep this surplus constantly in France it was necessary to consume some eight months from the inland cities and zones where the commodities were purchased in transporting them to the seaboard in America and until they finally reached their destination in France. Consistent with this policy and because of the custom of the department to make purchases and contracts some months in advance of delivery, supplies were continually coming in and being shipped across.

The War Department was advised by Gen. Pershing that during the battles of the Argonne Forest and at Chateau-Thierry he found that the use of ham and bacon as a ration in the trenches and approximate zones was impracticable, for the reason that the fires needed in the cooking of them made attractive marks for the enemy airplanes in attacking our forces, and he asked that canned meats, such as roast beef and corned beef, which did not necessitate cooking, be supplied in their stead.

When the armistice was signed in November, 1918, we had an Army of 3,700,000 men; contracts had been placed for an Army of 5,000,000 men, and though the War Department ordered the contracts canceled, notwithstanding the supplies kept coming into the department.

There was commandeered for the use of the Army 40 per cent of the food products of America. It was the most gigantic aggregation and variety of these products that this country, and perhaps that any country, had ever seen in control of a nation. There were 80,000 articles of such commodities listed under the supervision of the Purchase, Storage, and Traffic Division, and were distributed in 40 different camps and cities of the country.

The policy of the War Department was in accordance with its promise to Gen. Pershing to ship supplies without delay. To readily handle the shipment of these commodities from the seaboard the War Department, owing to the shortage and lack of experienced material in man power, was at times obliged, much against its will, to be content with inexperienced and untrained help in its receiving and transshipment departments.

On November 11, 1918, there were 3,700,000 men to feed. The department assumed that the maximum speed in demobilization, judging from results then accomplished, would result in about 1,500,000 men in the Army by July 1, 1919. It was estimated we would have to feed 3,700,000 men, the total number, to November 11 and 1,500,000 men to June 30, making on an average of about 2,300,000 men to be fed.

Criticism has been made that the War Department did not sufficiently early declare a surplus of food products, and the majority report overreaches itself in its undertaking to support this contention. It has been stated that authority for declaring a surplus was made 19 days after the armistice was signed, and that the order was promulgated by the General Staff through its Chief of Staff, and that more than seven months elapsed before the food products were offered for sale to the people; further, that the selling of the foodstuffs was not inaugurated until after the appointment of the committee which has reported out the resolution now under consideration. The fact is, as disclosed in the testimony of Gen. March, Chief of Staff, page 94, that surpluses were declared on baked beans from February 17 to May 20, on stringless beans from March 11 to July 7, corn from February 17 to July 7, peas February 12 to May 20, and tomatoes March 19 to July 7; and the first certified declaration of meat surplus was declared March 26, 1919.

The War Department was beset with unusual and trying conditions in declaring an exact surplus, because it submitted to Congress on January 15, 1919, its estimate for an army of 1,500,000 and was not certain whether the provisions of the armistice would be carried out by Germany, and it will be recalled that the date of its enactment was repeatedly extended.

The department could not fix a definite surplus for this reason, for the inventorying done in March was for these and other reasons found to be inaccurate and had to be rejected and a new inventory taken, which finally resulted in a declaration of surplus declared, which even then was not final, owing to the constant demobilizing of our forces, which proportionately from day to day increased the surplus by the men being cut off from the service.

Sales have been made not only to municipalities but to groups of individuals whose financial standing warranted such sales. The department has made all sales on an 80 per cent basis of the cost.

Much has been said about the Secretary of War. I supposed that if we were going to ask a man's opinion as to what his policy is, that we would ask it of the man himself if he were available. Gen. March said that the Secretary wanted these things reported and Col. Davis said that Gen. Meskin, of Chicago, the regular officer in charge of the meat supply, who knew about it and was an expert, could declare a surplus; and it was thought we might go over and visit him. The hearing will disclose that Mr. REAVIS intimated that, and I, at least, thought that would be done and that we would have the advantage of his information. I thought that if we wanted to know the policy of the Secretary of War, that if the chairman of the committee did not think well enough to ask him that the opportunity might be given me to do so. But I was foreclosed of that right. I was disappointed that the Secretary of War was not allowed to testify and give his own statement as to his policy not to export but to sell these products directly to the American people. Every witness who was asked—Hare, Rogers, and Davis—what was the policy of the Secretary of War as to exporting said so far as he knew he is opposed to it; that the theory he has and the desire he has is to sell these goods for the best profit, wherever obtainable.

A vast amount of ham and bacon was sold in Baltimore, and it was claimed here that it had deteriorated. The evidence is that Mr. Hare sold the ham in Baltimore for 28½ cents per pound, which had cost 40 cents. The record will also disclose that he rejected bids which were only 40 or 50 per cent of the cost. He made for the Government by the delay and evidently the ham had not materially deteriorated.

Now the Canners' Association ought to be explained; and how it is made up. To hear the name—"Canners' Association"—one would be inclined to think of a momentous commercial enterprise. The Canners' Association is a nonstock corporation. It is a mutual association of canners of this country, but not of all of them. There are 4,000 canners in this great country. One thousand of them belong to the Canners' Association. They pay dues, which are nominal, and employ on an average 17 laborers in each of the establishments. It is a poor organization. It is an altruistic organization to the extent that the proposition is to increase and better the canning industry. It sets no price. Let me tell you, gentlemen, that the price paid here through the placing of orders with the Canners' Association was made by the Government through the Food Administration. It was really a case where the buyer set the price and not the seller. This association maintains, in connection with the Harvard Medical School, a laboratory on which it expends $25,000 a year, obtained by subscription of the members of from $5 to $2,500, for the benefit of the American people and in order that canned products may be pure and unadulterated and free from poison ingredients. Surely that is altruistic. The president of the Canners' Association, Mr. Frank Gerber, receives no salary. He gives unselfishly of his time. He impressed me greatly as a straightforward and honorable man.

Much has been said here as to the added rations of the soldier. "Added," it says. The ration was not added, and if the gentleman will refer to an order issued in March, 1919, by the Chief of Staff he will see that the rations were issued in lieu of the garrison ration, and if he will look to the ration schedule as put in effect by Gen. March, No. 1405, it is permitted to substitute canned rations for fresh vegetables, and it has been done time and time again. Now, if he will further inquire, he will find that the fact is this: That it was testified that a Maj. McDonald, an old commissary sergeant, who was caterer at West Point, who knows what the soldiers need and what they want, and also is regarded as an exemplar in that line, not being aware of the letter sent by Mr. Gerber, of the Canners' Association, to Gen. Wood, made this suggestion because fresh vegetables were difficult to procure, and, further, that the company messes were buying out of their own pockets these same products that were now included in this ration. It was not an added ration. It was in lieu of, and that order stands there and can be seen.

Col. Davis, a West Pointer, 32 years in the service and a man of unquestioned integrity, has testified to the fact that the purpose in keeping the sale of canned goods off the markets was to stabilize them and give the farmers a chance to plant their spring crops; the canners to prepare their fall pack and the American people to be saved from a food panic, which would follow if these millions of cans of vegetables were allowed to be thrown on the market and glut it.

From a résumé of the evidence I have presented it will be seen that the War Department has taken every precaution to conserve the interest of the Government, and has made sales by which they have obtained 80 per cent of the cost of the goods. That, in point of fact, the municipalities which have purchased the supplies having 10 days in which to pay for same have been permitted to act as distributing agent, directly delivering supplies to the consuming public, taking its money in payment thereof, and at the expiration of 10 days remitting it to the Government. The War Department is, therefore, in fact, selling these foodstuffs direct to the consumer, and is to be congratulated on its Secretary of War, who has demonstrated his ability as a great executive, in his contribution in directing the American Army in this Great War, and in his like ability in husbanding, distributing, and directing the sale of the surplus of these vast products. The resolution under consideration in no way offers or suggests to define a policy of carrying on this great work, and fails of its own weight for its obscurity and insufficiency. [Applause.]

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield nine minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE].

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am admonished from what I have heard here this afternoon that when it comes to party politics we are rather strange individuals. If, as an American, I would say that I am proud of the magnificent record of our War Department in assembling an army as it did, transporting it across the sea, and if I spoke of the magnificent record of those boys as they went over the enemy trenches and brought victory to the old Stars and Stripes, or if I should speak of the many good, patriotic citizens of this country who came to Washington to assist our Government in that great hour of trial, I would be referred to as a patriot and a statesman; but if I should happen to call attention to the thousands of cars and automobiles that are standing out in the sunshine and the storm between here and Baltimore, or if I should call attention to the millions of dollars' worth of deteriorating foodstuffs now in the hands of the War Department, and if I should, perchance, call attention to the fact that there were men who came to Washington with flags on the lapels of their coats and attached themselves to the War Department under the guise of patriotism and out of their services made great profits and whose unconscionable profits in some instances have been shown by the excess-profits tax they paid, then I would be referred to as a partisan.

Mr. Speaker, as one man on this committee—I am a Republican—I signed the majority report because I believed that, while it may not be exactly true in every word so far as the grammatical construction is concerned, it points to serious facts that are confronting the American people to-day, and it is strange, indeed, to see our friends across the aisle, who have stood ever since I can remember as the particular champions of the consumers of this country, forced into a position where they are undertaking to defend the activities of "big business." [Applause on the Republican side.]

As a Republican, I believe in "big business." I believe when "big business" is properly handled it is to the advantage of the consuming public of America, and I have never been against that. But, Mr. Speaker, when big business will undertake to set the prices that our Government shall pay for the things to feed our soldier boys and after they have filled their pockets with gold, as shown by the diamonds worn by their families and the excess-profits taxes that they pay, and then when the war is over and our Government undertakes to dispose of the surplus we find those men gathered in the room of the Secretary of War undertaking to dictate to him the policy that he shall pursue in getting rid of this surplus stock in order that it may not disturb their business, it behooves the people to awaken from their slumber. I have got only a few minutes, and I want to say this in conclusion, my friends, the high cost of living is only an incident. The amount of food concerned in this is but a mere bagatelle, but the thing we want to take note of—and that is why men will support this resolution—is the fact that whenever the American people discover that their Government has so degenerated from a Nation of freemen that the officials of our Government are taking their orders from, and are subservient to, the great combinations and interests of this country our land is in danger. There is a sure and just way to handle such problems, and if not so handled and the rights of all the people considered there is but one final alternative, and that is the frenzy of the mob. May God guide us away from such an end. May wisdom prevail, is my hope.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, how many speakers has the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I have two.

Mr. FLOOD. I have only one.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. How much time remains for each side, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Eighteen minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York is recognized for eight minutes.

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Speaker, at the outset I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to inject any personalities into my remarks. I have nothing but the kindliest feeling for everybody concerned. I am intensely interested in this question, because I think that the high cost of living is one of the most important questions, if not the most important question, facing the country to-day, and I think that the chairman of subcommittee No. 4, the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS], has rendered a great public service in bringing this question to the attention of the House and of the country. [Applause.]

There can be no doubt of the facts. My Democratic friends stand here and plead guilty to the charge upon the evidence, judging from the speeches they have made here in the House to-day. The fact is that since the date when the armistice was signed, November 11, 1918, the evidence shows that they have disposed of only $12,000,000 worth of these products. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] states that the amount is more. But it does not make any difference whether it is $12,000,000 or $26,000,000 worth. The fact is that there is still on hand $120,000,000 worth of canned meats and canned vegetables.

If it has taken the Democratic administration about eight months to dispose of $12,000,000 worth of these products, how long will it take this active administration to dispose of $120,000,000 more? [Applause on the Republican side.] I figure that they will be at it about 10 years.

How do they propose to get rid of them? They say now that they are in favor of the resolution. The evidence shows that one way proposed is to feed these canned products to the soldiers, to give them canned goods for breakfast, for luncheon, and for dinner. That is one way that they suggest to get rid of them. In addition to that, they think they can export some of them.

Now, the War Department has not changed its mind. The War Department has been proved in this case to be in conspiracy with the canners and packers of this country. [Applause on the Republican side.] Gentlemen on the other side of the aisle know that just as well as I do, and you know that the American people will not stand for it; that the tremendous force of public opinion will compel you to act, and place these commodities, these food products, bought with the money of the people, where they belong, within the reach of the consumers of this country. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I took up this question with the office of the director of sales upon the request of the Syracuse Chamber of Commerce. They notified me that they would sell only to a municipality. I sent the chamber that information. The officials of the city took it up. They found that the city had no power under its charter to purchase these commodities. Upon this question of power I have a concise opinion of Corporation Counsel Hancock, of Syracuse, one of the best lawyers in the State of New York, which I will place in the RECORD in order that you may read it:

JULY 18, 1919.

Hon. WALTER R. STONE, Mayor.

DEAR SIR: You have referred to me for my opinion a letter received by you under date of July 17 from Vincent P. Connolly, surplus property officer, relative to the plan of disposition to municipalities of surplus canned goods in storage at the Army reserve depot, South Schenectady, N. Y.

This plan contemplates that the city should assume some legal responsibility for the purchase price of surplus canned goods owned by the Federal Government and which the Federal Government has offered to sell to municipalities.

Under the constitution of the State of New York the moneys of the city can be expended only for city purposes in the legal significance of that term.

Cities are created by the legislature of the State and have only such powers as are expressly or by necessary implication delegated to them by the legislature.

The only powers delegated to a city to traffic in food products have been conferred by chapter 813, Laws of 1918, section 14, which reads as follows:

"PURCHASE AND SALE OF FOOD AND FUEL BY MUNICIPALITIES.

"Any municipality in this State may, in case of an actual or anticipated emergency on account of a deprivation of necessaries, by reason of excessive charges or otherwise, purchase food and fuel with municipal funds or on municipal credit and provide storage for and sell the same to its inhabitants in such manner and through such agencies as it may determine, but before the exercise of any such power or authority by any municipality it shall have the consent in writing from the food commission to exercise such power. The mayor, if any, and the governing body or bodies of any such municipality shall file with the State food commission a resolution and certificate stating that such a necessity has arisen in said municipality and otherwise satisfy the State food commission that such a necessity exists. The State food commission shall act upon the application as, in its judgment, the public interest requires and may prescribe such regulations and restrictions as it deems wise."

It is my opinion that no moneys of the city can be legally expended for the purchase of food products for the purpose of resale, and that this is true irrespective of whether they are bought from the Federal Government or whether they are bought at full value or at considerably less than full value.

Furthermore, no moneys of the city can be expended except such as have been specifically appropriated in the budget adopted at the beginning of the city's fiscal year.

Therefore even if the city had the legal power to purchase food products, it would be impossible to legally finance the purchase thereof out of current funds. The only provision permitting the issue of temporary bonds or certificates of indebtedness is that which I have already quoted and which, as I have stated, has no application to the present situation.

Yours, very truly,

STEWART F. HANCOCK.

I requested the corporation counsel to give me his views upon the feasibility of the plan. I have a communication from him which I think you will find very interesting reading, and I will put that in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

SYRACUSE, July 26, 1919.

Hon. WALTER W. MAGEE,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: From a practical standpoint, the proposition of the Federal Government to dispose of surplus meat and vegetable products by selling to municipalities for resale directly to the consumer, as we understand the proposition, is open to a great many objections under the law, for the reasons which I have explained in a memorandum furnished by me to Mayor Stone, a copy of which I am inclosing herewith. The city can not legally obligate itself for the purchase of food products for the purpose of resale. It would be necessary if the city entered into a contract for the purchase of food products that the cost be underwritten by private citizens or such an organization as the chamber of commerce. This expedient would absolve the responsible officers of the city from any financial liability, because although they might exceed their legal authority and become personally liable if they entered into such a contract, the liability, as a matter of fact, would amount to nothing if the city was guaranteed against any loss or damage by responsible private citizens.

It follows from what I have said that the proposition offered by the Government must be one which commends itself to business men. Otherwise a city can not obtain their cooperation.

The proposition made by the Government, as we understand it, thus far falls short of being a business proposition, because—

(a) Many of the goods are packed in a manner not readily adapted for domestic use. For example, bacon in 12-pound tins.

(b) There is no guaranty that the goods are in proper condition and no provision for return of such goods as may be unfit for use.

(c) There has been a definite statement that the cities would be compelled to pay freight from shipping point, but no definite statement as to whether this means freight from New Orleans, San Francisco, or New York. In other words, a city might make a contract with the Government and find the cost to exceed very greatly its expectations, because of the fact that the goods might be shipped from some distant point.

(d) The bulk of the commodities thus far offered to the city of Syracuse consists of canned roast beef and canned hash. All of the soldiers whom we talked with say that canned roast beef is not palatable; that the soldiers would not eat it; and that the city officer trying to sell canned roast beef would subject himself to grave danger of personal violence. Other persons assert that no housewife would buy canned hash, as she considers it her sacred prerogative to make hash out of left overs, and never perpetrates hash on her family except as an expedient to make use of food materials which would not otherwise be used. They also assert that private consumers do not buy canned meats or canned vegetables in the summer, and at this period of the year most persons are using fresh meats and vegetables.

(e) On many of the products offered the Government is not making a price as low as similar goods can be bought from wholesale grocers under a guaranty that the goods are in proper condition and with provision for return of such goods as may be spoiled.

It is entirely possible that we misapprehend the real intention and purpose of the Federal Government. If so, it is not due to the fact that we have been indifferent, but to the fact that we have not gotten in touch with the representative of the Federal Government who really knows what the Government's plan is.

I think that I can safely say that all of our city governments are patriotic and are generally interested in reducing the cost of living. I have no doubt that they all would be willing to cooperate with the Federal Government provided a proposition could be offered to them which would be within their legal powers to accept and which would hold out some reasonable assurance of saving money to the consumer.

Yours, very truly,

S. F. HANCOCK,
Corporation Counsel.

But I want to give you gentlemen, my Democratic friends, some good advice, if you will take it kindly. I tell you that you are on the wrong track. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The people know that this Democratic administration is not an administration of the people, by the people, and for the people. They know that it is an administration of the Democratic Party, by the Democratic Party, and for the Democratic Party. [Applause on the Republican side.] That is the reason why the country has sent down here a Republican Congress. You want to get down out of the clouds and get your feet on the earth and keep them there.

I want to tell you that this administration is a close corporation, mainly concerned in perpetuating itself in power. It will not deal with an individual. An individual can not buy anything of this administration. It will sell airplanes to manufacturers at 10 per cent of cost to the Government, but if you have a flier in your district, or a young man who wants to fly, he can not purchase an airplane from this administration for love or money.

It is the same way with automobiles. They will not sell an automobile to an individual, although they have thousands of them. My Democratic friends can make more excuses within the shortest space of time for not doing something in the public interest than any men with whom I ever came in contact. [Applause.] They will tell you that the law prohibits them from selling automobiles to the public and that they are required to distribute them to the departments, so many thousands to the Post Office Department, so many thousands to the hospitals, so many to the Navy Department, so many to the Surgeon General's office, so many thousands of motor trucks to the Department of Agriculture, but they will not sell any to the farmers for use in marketing farm products, and so forth. The only automobile that they will sell to the public is a damaged one. If they have one with the axle broken, with two wheels blown up, with the top knocked off, or with one side smashed in, they intimate that they will offer that machine to the public to be sold at public auction to the highest bidder, but that is the only kind of an automobile that an individual can buy of this administration.

These foodstuffs must be sold at once. Director Hare has testified that they are deteriorating and that they should be sold within three months. You should move at once. If you have no plan, you should adopt one. I think that in matters of this kind the only reasonable way would be for the Democrats and the Republicans to meet in conference, to get together, to try and get upon some common ground, and then act in cooperation for the interest of the country. [Applause.] That would be my way. But the trouble with this administration is that it will not play anywhere except in its own back yard. That is the trouble with it. If you do not agree with this administration, it will start in to get everybody by the ears and keep everybody by the ears and in hot water all the time. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Twenty minutes.

Mr. FLOOD. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE] said a few moments ago that this was an administration of the Democratic Party, by the Democratic Party, for the Democratic Party, I wondered what sort of thought swept through the mind of my honored friend the chairman of this select committee [Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois] when he recalled the statement given out by him some few days ago criticizing the advisory board of the Council of Industrial Defense, every member of which, save one, was a lifelong Republican. [Laughter and applause.]

The gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE] is vitally interested in reducing the cost of living, and he proposes to do that, as I understand, in a very large measure by placing automobiles on the market. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. GARRETT. I can not.

Mr. BAER. They are very vitally important to the farmers to distribute food to the table.

Mr. GARRETT. I arose primarily to discuss this resolution and not the report, but I do wish to say a few words generally.

All serious men appreciate, I am sure, that the period immediately following the cessation of hostilities was one of intense strain. There was uncertainty in all lines of activity. I do not refer to the big interests of the country alone. I refer to the ordinary citizens everywhere throughout the Republic. Every thoughtful man in this country was wondering what was to come next. And let me say now, Mr. Speaker, that if the War Department had proceeded as the line of argument made upon the Republican side of the House to-day indicates they would have had that department proceed, and had dumped upon the market all the surplus that had been accumulated as a necessity of war, and had broken the market, as inevitably it must have done—if they had thrown it on the market at low prices, and you can not reduce the cost of living unless you sell at lower than the market price—if that had been done and the market had broken and this country had been driven into a panic, as it inevitably would have been, what would have been your attitude, gentlemen on the Republican side? I will tell you what would have been your attitude. You would have been here seeking to impeach officially the Secretary of War. [Applause.]

Now, I do desire to discuss the resolution, because it has not been discussed. What is the resolution?

Be it resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, requested to place on sale, without delay, the surplus food products in the hands or under the control of the War Department now stored in the United States, under such plan as will safeguard the interests of the Government and insure an opportunity to the people of the United States to purchase the same directly from the Government.

Mr. Speaker, the mountain labored and brought forth a mouse. [Laughter.]

My honored friend the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] said this morning in his very eloquent address that he could be indicted for what he thought of the War Department. Let me say to my friend from Nebraska that if this resolution, proposed by the majority, represents the sum total of his intelligence, which it does not, he need have no fear of conviction. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

What have you done? What have you offered? You assail the administration, you denounce it as being in league with the interests, you seek to crucify it before the public, and then say that you resolve that that same administration be requested to do so-and-so. Where is your boasted capacity? [Applause on the Democratic side.] The administration in which you do not confide, you say—why not suggest a plan of your own? What does the resolution amount to? It means, if I construe it correctly, that you request the department to change the policy and plan now in force, and if this resolution should be passed as a law and become binding, the department could not under that law sell a can of peas or a pound of meat except directly to the consumer. Is that what is desired? If so, then, knowing that it will require an extensive organization, knowing that the department has no funds with which to organize a retail arrangement in this country, you certainly should be willing to say that you will cooperate to the extent of furnishing a fund essential to carry out such plan. Therefore an amendment will be offered requesting the Committee on Appropriations to bring in an appropriation that will be essential, or express its readiness to do so, if this should be made the policy of the Government.

Not only that—I am trying to appeal to the intelligent judgment of men. If such a system is organized, and you undertake to change the plan and have these goods distributed throughout the country under that system, and you confine it alone to that system, you know and we all know that there are quantities of this food that will not be disposed of, that can not be disposed of, to the advantage of the Government or in justice to the Government, and therefore I feel that this House, in passing a resolution expressing its judgment, ought at least to be willing to say that you do not wish the Government to sustain loss on account of these foods, that you can not distribute in this manner, and therefore will be willing to accept an amendment which will be offered that will leave to the discretion of the department the disposition of these particular things that can not be disposed of without vast waste under a system of retail dealing. That is a matter which I submit must address itself to the intelligence and the good sense of every man, if you intend to pass such a resolution at all.

So far as I am personally concerned, I have no hesitation in saying that I do not regard the resolution as necessary. On the contrary, I regard it as wholly unnecessary. If it is regarded as necessary on that side of the Chamber to do something along those lines, it seems to me that you ought to come before the Congress of the United States and before the people of the United States with a law, not a resolution simply requesting the administration which you denounce. What sort of an absurdity is that?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. As I understand this resolution, it is not a joint resolution?

Mr. GARRETT. No; it is a simple House resolution.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And does not contemplate that any law shall be enacted?

Mr. GARRETT. No.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman answer one further question, that I may have the information? Is there anything in the record to indicate that a majority of the committee have in mind any definite plan to be observed by the department in disposing of this food?

Mr. GARRETT. Not in any record, either public or private. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Then the majority of the committee is leaving the entire matter where it has rested heretofore, and that is within the discretion of the War Department?

Mr. GARRETT. Percisely; but they have had an opportunity to talk. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the gentlemen on the Republican side feel good over to-day's labor or not. I think I have never in the same length of time done quite so much drudgery work as I have during the last three days and nights since this matter was thrust before the full committee. While I am not very anxious about work, yet I do not mind it when I am working on something, but to have to devote my time, and for the House of Representatives, composed of, ordinarily, the pick of the communities which they represent, to spend an entire day leading up to a resolution as utterly meaningless, as thoroughly absurd, as unspeakably silly, as this proposition, seems to me a travesty on American statesmanship. [Applause on Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Gladly.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Are we to seriously understand that the execution of this resolution, if it is adopted, is to be left to these department people, who have been described here to-day as malefactors?

Mr. GARRETT. It so states.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes; for a question.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, the gentleman from Virginia knows very well——

Mr. GARRETT. I yielded for a question.

Mr. MADDEN. I am going to ask a question. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] knows very well, and I assume the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] also knows, that whether they be malefactors or not we have to leave the execution of things that have to be done to the men who are in the administrative departments.

Mr. GARRETT. Not at all, not at all, on this proposition. The Congress could create by passage of a joint resolution a commission and take it out of the hands of these people and let the commissioners administer these $120,000,000 worth of foodstuffs, which would be about a dollar apiece for every man, woman, and child in the United States.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman from Tennessee must know very well that if we were to pass a law on this subject and send it up to the President, no matter how meritorious it was he would veto it.

Mr. GARRETT. Fortunately the President will not have to take up his time with any veto of such a thing as this. [Laughter and applause on Democratic side.] I will say to the gentleman that it is creditable to his party, and that is about the only credit I know of in this whole business, that they did not make this a joint resolution.

Mr. MADDEN. I think the gentleman and the President and the Secretary of War and all the rest of the gentlemen who have been applauding what the gentleman has just said will find that the passage of this resolution will result in the sale of the commodities we are talking about, and they will get into the hands of the consuming public.

Mr. GARRETT. Why, they are selling them now. You are only asking for a change in plan.

Mr. KNUTSON. How long since have they been selling them?

Mr. FLOOD. Since February.

Mr. McCULLOCH. The gentleman does not seriously contend that the resolution——

Mr. GARRETT. This is not a very serious day, but what is the question?

Mr. McCULLOCH. The gentleman will not seriously contend, will he, that this resolution, if passed, will not express the intention of Congress that this food should be put upon the market? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GARRETT. I suppose it will be the expression of the intention of those who vote for it.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Does the gentleman, then, contend that the War Department will disregard the intention of Congress as here expressed?

Mr. GARRETT. I make no contention whatever about that. I do not know.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The Congress is not asked to pass this resolution.

Mr. FLOOD. This is a simple House resolution.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman asked me a question——

Mr. McCULLOCH. That is a little difficult, and the gentleman has not attempted to answer it.

Mr. GARRETT. Oh, yes; I did. I answered it. I said I did not know.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Apropos of what the gentleman says, can it be stated that this resolution expresses any intention of Congress, or even of this House, leaving the plan altogether in the air?

Mr. GARRETT. Well, it expresses some sort of intention, but I will say to the gentleman that I do not know myself what it is. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of my time. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has one minute remaining.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman from Virginia going to yield any more time?

Mr. FLOOD. I think not.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the simple question before this House, stripped of all sophistry, is whether this House should go on record now and express its opinion that in its judgment it is the proper thing that the Secretary of War should at once sell these goods directly to the American people. That is the question. There is no doubt in any reasonable man's mind who has read this record that the policy of the War Department has been studiously one to avoid putting these goods on the market. [Applause on the Republican side.] I have heard no attempted defense. I can show you half a dozen, yes, a dozen, places in this record where the evidence shows that Secretary Baker himself said that this was his policy and the evidence is in the record. I do not want to take the time now to show you, but in Mr. Baker's letter that is incorporated in the minority report he says it is his policy, although he modifies it to some extent from the foregoing conversations that he had with Mr. Thorne, who had been acting as Quartermaster General.

He now says it is his policy to-day to sell first to the other departments of the Government if he can, then to the person or company who sold the goods to the Government, and finally, when forced to, to the public. As, for instance, the other day a sale of food was conducted in this locality supposedly direct to the people of the District. But I observed from the papers that after they had given the Department of Agriculture and the Department of the Interior and the other departments of the Government what canned meats they wanted there were just three cans remaining to be sold to the suffering population of the District of Columbia—three cans. [Applause on the Republican side.] Why, eight months and a half have elapsed, gentlemen of the House, since this War Department knew of this great excess supply of food in this country, and during that eight and a half months if a studious effort had been devised to keep it off the market they could not have devised a better effort than they have. Now, to-day we are simply asking the Members of the House to express their opinion to the Secretary of War that these things ought to be sold.

They ask, What good will this resolution do? I will tell you, gentlemen of the House, if this resolution is passed by an overwhelming majority of this House Secretary Newton D. Baker will sit up and take notice. [Applause on the Republican side.] It will go out to the people of the country, and a storm will be raised in this country, and Secretary Baker and those who are responsible for this thing will see that speedily this food gets to the people. They say, "We have no money to do it with." Why, gentlemen, let me call your attention to the fact that in the Army bill which was passed by this Congress for the year ending June 30, 1920, there is an item of a million dollars that is given as a contingent fund that is available for the Secretary of War. The next item is page 11 of the appropriation bill. I want you to notice what it permits to be done:

> For such other necessary expenses incident to the purchase, test, care, preservation, issue, sale, and accounting for subsistence for supplies for the Army, $62,526,466.

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I have not the time and I can not yield. Let me tell you something else. In the last Army bill, the one before that, you will find on page 200 of the appropriation bill print which I have here, an appropriation of $830,000,000 for this same identical purpose, and all of these vast sums of money are now available to the Secretary of War if he wants to use them. Let me read you something else. Then I want you gentlemen here to observe this. It is not the fault of Mr. Newton D. Baker alone that this thing is being done. The fault rests with a higher authority. It rests with the President of the United States. Let me call your attention to something else. In the last Army appropriation bill is this item:

> That the President be, and he hereby is, authorized, through the head of any executive department, to sell, upon such terms as the head of such department shall deem expedient, to any person, partnership, association, corporation, or any other department of the Government, or to any foreign State or Government, engaged in war against any Government with which the United States is at war, any war supplies, material, and equipment, and any by-products thereof.

And then it goes on and appropriates a vast sum of money for these and other purposes.

And that law has been in effect for a year. Why has not the thing been done? I ask you now here, gentlemen of the House, how long we shall wait and how long we shall trifle about this thing? The time for words has passed and the time to do something has come. [Applause on the Republican side.] And unless we men on this side of the House force something to be done I say that nothing will be done in view of the expressed policy of the War Department, which is to keep these products off the market.

The fact is that the War Department has been confederating with the interests who have food to sell for the purpose of keeping the price up. In this connection it is interesting to note the language of the food administration act, approved August 10, 1917. It recites, in part:

> To prevent, locally or generally, * * * hoarding, injurious speculation, manipulations, and private controls.

Certain powers are given the President and severe penalties provided for. And yet the Government, by conniving with these food pirates, violates every intendment of this law.

This report will be followed by other reports on other subjects, of great, vast quantities of war supplies that have been gathered up to supply that Army of ours, from a needle to a thrashing machine, and which are being kept off the market, and which, if they can not be sold to other nations, are being junked or being sold back to the men who made them, and willfully, as an avowed policy of the Government, it is being carried out from start to finish. In my judgment it all comes back to the origination of this scheme.

I wish you would take the first volume of the report of the Council of National Defense and look and see who the men were who negotiated these sales to the Government of these canned goods. They are:

C. H. Bentley, director of the California Packing Corporation; W. F. Burrows, president of Libby, McNeil & Libby; E. B. Deming, president of Pacific-American Fisheries; L. S. Dow, secretary of H. J. Heinz Co.; H. C. Hemingway, president of H. C. Hemingway & Co.; John F. Montgomery, president of John Wildi Evaporated Milk Co.; I. C. Morgan, jr., of the Austin Canning Co.; George N. Numsen, president of Wm. Numsen & Son (Inc.); and W. C. Leitsch, president of Columbus Canning Co.

This committee was called the Cooperative Committee on Canned Goods of the Council of National Defense, and that bought this stuff. How in God's name does anybody expect they are to consent to its going back on the market after the war? They had all the machinery. They started with the war. The machinery was built up under the Advisory Committee of the Council of National Defense, and has operated continuously during this war. And now, gentlemen of the House, at this time, when the war is over, this same council has so enmeshed itself with the departments of our Government that to-day it steps into the office of the Secretary of War and says to him when he shall sell and when he shall not sell, and he listens. And it is up to us to see that something is done. At some time soon I shall have something further to say about the secret influences that surround this Government, but the short time I now have will not permit.

Now, gentlemen, this resolution ought to be passed, and passed in its present form. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GARRETT. May I have the attention of the gentleman a moment before the reading begins?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. DOREMUS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, along that line, I do not know whether there is any objection or not, but I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House have three legislative days in which to extend their remarks on this subject.

Mr. HEFLIN. All who have spoken?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. All Members.

Mr. KNUTSON. All Members. There are a lot of Members who could not get time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that all Members have three legislative days in which to extend their remarks on this subject.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does that mean the gentlemen who have spoken?

The SPEAKER. All Members of the House.

Mr. CONNALLY. Then I object.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, has unanimous consent been granted to those who spoke?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. REAVIS. I ask unanimous consent that all of those who spoke on this report and resolution may be given three legislative days to extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that all those who have spoken on this report and resolution may be given three legislative days in which to extend their remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question before the reading begins. The gentleman knows the minority report suggests two amendments, but finally we give it in the form it would read if those amendments be agreed to. I would like to ask, if it be satisfactory to the gentleman, to permit the reading of the entire resolution and then offer the following resolution that the minority proposes as a substitute, so as to obviate two amendments. I make that suggestion in the interest of time.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Unless there is some objection of which I do not know, I will agree to that.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, requested to place on sale, without delay, the surplus food products in the hands of or under the control of the War Department now stored in the United States, under such plan as will safeguard the interests of the Government and insure an opportunity to the people of the United States to purchase the same directly from the Government.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment by way of substitute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment by way of substitute, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That does not preclude any other amendment that may be offered?

The SPEAKER. Of course not.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARRETT as a substitute:

"Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States of America, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to place on sale, without delay, under such plan as will safeguard the interests of the Government and insure an opportunity to the people of the United States to purchase the same direct from the Government, such part of the surplus food products in the hands or under the control of the War Department now stored in the United States as is reasonably capable of being so distributed and sold, and the Committee on Appropriations of the House is requested to ascertain, without delay, and report to the House the sum necessary for the development of such plan."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I will.

Mr. WALSH. I will direct the gentleman's attention to the fact that, this being a House resolution, the language should be in accordance with the precedents—"Resolved, That the Secretary of War," and so forth. That would apply to the phraseology of the committee's resolution as well. The language should read, "Resolved, That the Secretary of War be," and so forth.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman from Massachusetts is correct about that. Of course, what we have in the proposed minority amendment did not touch upon the language in the majority resolution. I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment which I offered so as to strike out "Be it," and then it will read, "Resolved by the House."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to modify it.

Mr. GARRETT. Then I will modify it by taking out the words "Be it," in the beginning, and also the words "by the House of Representatives of the United States of America," so that it will read, "Resolved, That," and so forth.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to modify the original resolution by striking out the words "Be it" and capitalizing the word "Resolved."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to amend the original resolution.

Mr. GARRETT. That ought properly to come in at another time, but I will yield to the gentleman for that purpose, only I do not want to surrender the floor.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois: Strike out the first two words in the resolution, "Be it," and capitalize the word "resolved," so that it will read, "Resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States of America," etc.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the Clerk has not reported it as it was intended.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I think the words "United States of America" ought also to be stricken out, and I ask unanimous consent to do so.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the modification?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I want to understand the situation. I have an amendment to add to the original resolution. If the substitute of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] is adopted, would that change the entire situation?

The SPEAKER. It would.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I would like to offer an amendment to perfect the text.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman is entitled to offer a perfecting amendment.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I wish to offer an amendment to perfect the original resolution.

Mr. GARRETT. If the gentleman states that he has a perfecting amendment, he is entitled as a matter of right to offer that. But he is not entitled to the floor.

Mr. CRISP. He can not take the gentleman from Tennessee off the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct. The gentleman from Tennessee is still entitled to the floor.

Mr. GARRETT. I am going to yield the floor long enough to let the gentleman have his amendment read for information.

The SPEAKER. It can be reported, and then it will be pending. It will be reported not simply for information but it can be pending.

Mr. GARRETT. That will not cut me off?

The SPEAKER. Certainly not. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: After the word "Government," in the last line, strike out the period, insert a comma and the following: "And such plan shall include utilizing the Parcels Post Service."

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I think that is subject to a point of order in all probability.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I desire to reserve a point of order on it.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on my amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves the previous question on the amendment he has offered.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT. On that, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 114, nays 160, answered "present" 1, not voting 155, as follows:

Mr. BARBOUR. I think I arrived just after my name was called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "yea."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name was called?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No; I was not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] has offered an amendment which has been reported.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I have offered my amendment providing for the utilization of the Parcel Post System in the distribution of these surplus food products solely in order to carry out the purpose of this resolution.

I consider that this committee has rendered a public service in bringing the facts to the attention of the country and Congress. I believe a still greater public service can be performed if the definite suggestion of the use of a great public agency for the work desired is incorporated in the resolution adopted.

Mr. Speaker, the food problem is a real danger question in America. There is more Red menace in the retail food prices to-day than in all the Bolshevik meetings that can be held in this country.

At this moment great warehouses in 200 cities are bursting with food supplies and other commodities. They are in the hands of the War Department, because the people patriotically voted the money for expected war needs.

At the same time reports come in from every part of the country that the prices on these very articles are skyrocketing until the staples of life must be regarded as luxuries in many homes.

There has been a delay for eight months which to my mind is inexcusable. Every man should have known that there would be a vast surplus of supplies when an Army that was planned to be 5,000,000 on the 1st of this July was really an Army of but 1,000,000.

However, the one thing in which I am interested is action now. There has been too much delay, but what are we going to do about it?

There have been two plans brought out in the testimony before the committee. One is to sell these products in carload lots to municipalities. Ninety per cent of the municipalities are not able to adopt this plan owing to provisions in their charters. Even if all were able to adopt it the plan would not give a chance to half the people of this country who live outside the cities which could handle such an order.

Washington City tried out that plan and about all it proved was that these goods are high class and satisfactory to the people. But thousands of persons never had a chance to buy and were thus dissatisfied and had a feeling that they were treated unjustly. With even the finest kind of volunteer workers giving their time gladly in this service, there were misunderstandings about payment of money which hurt the success of the plan.

Mr. FLOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I can not yield, I am sorry to say, as I only have a few minutes.

The other plan, suggested by Mr. Hare, director of sales, was to organize a vast retail selling force in every city in the country. I submit that such a scheme would involve enormous expense, which would have to be defrayed by appropriations of Congress. It would mean doubling the prices paid by the Government for these products. It would mean a sheer waste of great sums of money.

Why should anyone wish to build up a great new distributing organization for these products when we already have one built to do exactly this service in the Parcel Post System?

The Post Office Department is the people's system of distribution. When President Andrew Jackson recommended its establishment he said that it would serve the same function for the country that the veins and arteries serve for the human body.

In serving as the public agency for the distribution of these foodstuffs, so sorely needed in all parts of this country, the Postal Service will be performing the very function forecast by the President.

In the past three years the fact that the post office is the direct connecting link between the people and their National Government has been recognized many times.

The proclamations of the President have been sent by the State Department to the post offices, to be posted there for the information of the citizenship of America.

The War Department and the Navy Department have organized recruiting campaigns in every community in America through the post offices, and Congress itself has authorized the payment of money for every recruit secured by a postmaster.

The Treasury Department sent its announcements to the postmasters to be bulletined for the information of the public, and the postal employees were direct agents in selling war-savings stamps and bonds.

The Labor Department has gone to the public through the postmasters in its employment work.

The Agricultural Department sends its information concerning marketing, gardening, and so forth, to the postmasters of America so that the entire citizenship may be informed of latest developments and plans.

The Food and Fuel Administrations send their orders and regulations to the public by the use of the post-office machinery.

The Civil Service Commission gives notice of its positions and requirements by bulletins in the post offices of America.

The fact is that the use of the Post Office Service in such a task as this which confronts us now is the only sensible course possible. The use of any other organization is the sheerest folly.

The problem is simply that of getting foodstuffs to the consumer direct, of emptying these bursting warehouses and placing their contents in the homes of the people of America.

In preparing for meeting that problem through the postal machinery, Congress has already spent $610,000 of the people's money. We spent $10,000 in 1917 for an investigation of the conditions which brought about bread riots and an effort to learn whether the use of postal connection between producer and consumer would reduce the high cost of living.

We appropriated for 1918 $300,000 for the express purpose of experimenting in direct communication between the producer of foodstuffs and the consumer of them by means of a motor-vehicle service. For 1919 we have appropriated the same sum for the same purpose.

Now, does any gentleman here believe that the people of America will tolerate the complete overthrow of all the work done through these expenditures of public funds? Will this Congress admit that that money has been thrown away, absolutely wasted, by now permitting the creation of some new, specially created, expensive organization for the accomplishment of a task for which the Postal Service is fully prepared?

The fact is that this $610,000 has been the best money ever spent by this Government—unless this Congress should now make it the most useless expenditure of money possible.

Mr. Speaker, the surplus food products shown in the hearings of this committee are, in part, 173,723,336 cans of vegetables and 141,000,000 pounds of meat products.

These seem like tremendous figures, and with the other surplus products do make quantities which no organization except the parcels post can handle.

But do you realize that there were handled during the last fiscal year 2,250,000,000 parcel-post packages of all sizes and containing every commodity under the sun? Do you realize that there were handled 187,500,000 packages every month and 6,250,000 every day?

Why, the increase alone during the last fiscal year over the year preceding amounted to 62,500,000 packages a month. There would not be that many packages in the surplus of vegetables and meat products as tabulated in the hearings.

Postmaster Chance, of the Washington post office, in answer to an inquiry as to whether the local post office could handle its share of these surplus products, replied that it would be only one-fourth of the task which devolves on his office every Christmas. I believe the same statement is true for every other post office.

Mr. Speaker, my plan for handling this great surplus and getting it direct to the people is this: There are 54,084 postmasters in this country to-day. Each one could inform the people of his community, through printed matter furnished by the War Department, of these supplies and the price to be paid. He would act as agent for the consumers, buying nothing and selling nothing. He could group these orders and forward the bulk order to the nearest warehouse. The goods could be shipped from the warehouse to the post office from which the order came, and there distributed to the consumers.

This organization also includes 43,109 rural carriers, 35,200 city carriers, 46,207 clerks, and 19,968 railway mail clerks. Such a personnel would not be staggered by this task of public service, and the entire surplus could be handled in two months' time without any breakdown of the organization whatever.

Mr. Speaker, I earnestly believe that this is the only way to handle this great problem. The people are at bay before the high cost of living. The purchase of these foods by the War Department has sent food prices up. It is now a sacred duty to get these foods to the people and, if possible, bring the prices down to what they would have been.

I believe this action will bring prices down, and I want to see prices brought down. I am not worried about food traffickers, who see markets wobbling and quotations dropping through such action. I want to see this shock and still others given until there is an improvement in prices from the viewpoint of the consumer. The consumers make up the community, and their rights are paramount. The very first right of all is to have the right to buy the things upon which life depend at a reasonable price.

Let us use the public agency of the parcel post in distributing these products direct to the people, and show that the American Government has in its own agencies the means of meeting and mastering this task which now confronts it. [Applause.]

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I reserved a point of order on this amendment, and I now make the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That the amendment is not germane to this resolution.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I would like to be heard on that.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The original resolution is a simple expression of the judgment of the House, and reads as follows:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to place on sale, without delay, the surplus food products in the hands or under the control of the War Department now stored in the United States, under such plan as will safeguard the interests of the Government and insure an opportunity to the people of the United States to purchase the same directly from the Government.

The resolution is simply an expression of judgment and leaves entirely to the executive officer the way in which it shall be executed. However, the amendment is as follows:

And such plans shall include utilizing the Parcel Post Service.

It thereby says to the Secretary of War that our opinion is that he should do so and so, but if he does it he must do it in this way, directing a particular method of execution. I do not believe that can be done; I do not believe that that sort of appendix can be attached to a resolution that simply expresses an opinion and does not mark out any way of executing it.

I call the Speaker's attention to section 5804 of Hinds' Precedents, volume 5:

On February 14, 1882, Mr. Godlove S. Orth, of Indiana, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported adversely this resolution:

"Resolved, That the President of the United States, if not incompatible with the public service, be requested to communicate to this House all correspondence with the British Government on file in the State Department with reference to the case of D. H. O'Connor, a citizen of the United States, now imprisoned in Ireland."

Mr. Orth's motion to lay this resolution on the table having been decided in the negative, Mr. S. S. Cox, of New York, submitted the following amendment in the nature of a substitute:

"That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to obtain for D. H. O'Connor and other American citizens now imprisoned under a suspension of the habeas corpus by the British Government in Ireland, without trial, conviction, or sentence, a speedy and fair trial or a prompt release."

After debate, the Speaker said:

* * * * * * *

"The Chair is not called upon to decide that question, and only refers to it incidentally in determining whether this amendment is in order to a resolution of inquiry which has certain privileges under the rules of the House. The amendment proposed is to change the whole character of the pending resolution, which is a simple resolution of inquiry, and makes it a resolution of instruction to the President of the United States. The Chair thinks it is not germane and not in order."

That is not strictly in point, but I think it indicates the line of argument that is followed in these matters. I do not believe that if this House proceeds to instruct the Secretary of War how he shall execute this order in part at least, that it is a proper amendment to a resolution that simply expresses the opinion of the House upon the subject.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. The original resolution provides:

That the Secretary of War is requested to place on sale under such plans as will safeguard the interests of the Government—

And so forth.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers to amend by adding—and such plans shall include utilizing the parcels post.

The original resolution provides a general plan, and the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania adds or includes a specific plan. It is a rule that a general proposition can be amended by a specific one, and the Chair thinks that this amendment is clearly in order.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to the amendment. I have listened now for a whole day to these political speeches going back and forth, and here comes a proposition now that really has some sense in it. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULINGS. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. ASWELL. Why not include aeroplane transportation in this amendment?

Mr. HULINGS. I do not understand the question. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] has very clearly shown that the Government already has a fine method by which the distribution of the foodstuffs can be carried out, and that is simply by taking up the Postal Department, which is already in operation. I am quite sure that the Chair is entirely correct in this ruling, and I believe it proper to suggest to the Secretary of War that he formulate a plan which shall include the parcel-post method of distribution. It is appropriate indeed for us to suggest that he include the plan that is presented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I believe that if the House will consider the amendment for a moment they will adopt it.

All the machinery for handling millions of parcels is already in operation, covering more than 50,000 post offices, and could, with very little trouble and expense be arranged so that the purchaser could give his order and his money to the postmaster, who could forward the order, and by return mail the buyer would get his goods.

Mr. Speaker, whether this amendment carries or not, the real purpose of the amendment—its only purpose—is to bring to the attention of the country the fact that the Secretary of War has withheld these food products in the interest of the packers and refiners. The packers understand. When eggs are scarce the price is high. In the plentiful season the surplus goes into cold storage and prices remain high. Smart dealers destroy the surplus potato crop rather than break the price by putting them on the market. And if the great stores of foodstuffs can be kept in Government warehouses until they rot it will be all the easier to maintain high prices and sweat the public.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania demanded a division.

Mr. GARRETT (while the House was dividing). Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 155, nays 130, not voting 145, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter on the subject referred to. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, the following reveals clearly the outrageous demagogic politics of the Republicans of this House in offering this useless resolution:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
July 23, 1919.

Hon. JAMES B. ASWELL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Replying to your communication of June 28, delay in replying thereto has been occasioned by necessity of awaiting receipt of bids and abstracts thereof from all zones on letting of vegetables June 30.

Fifteen hundred and seventy-two bids were received from all parts of the country, which has caused considerable delay in making abstracts analyzing same, and preparing recommendations for awards.

Abstracts of bids show that probably a considerable quantity of the canned vegetables will be awarded at satisfactory prices, but that there will be a considerable surplus of practically all items left.

For your information we attach hereto copy of publicity statement regarding sale of these canned meats and vegetables to municipalities.

We might further state that sales to State and charitable institutions can be made along the same lines.

I will be very glad to receive your suggestions regarding the disposal of these commodities.

Just as soon as awards are approved and definite information regarding balance left on hand is ascertained you will be advised thereof.

Yours, very truly,

C. W. HARE,
Director of Sales.
By E. C. MORSE,
First Assistant Director of Sales.

JULY 11, 1919.

The War Department authorizes publication of the following statement from the office of the director of sales.

The director of sales announces the prices at which the surplus stocks of canned and cured meats held by the War Department are offered to municipalities throughout the country to be retailed to the general public through markets controlled by municipalities. The canned vegetables available to towns and cities will be sold to the municipalities at their invoice cost to the Government. Since these goods were produced by hundreds of different canners at varying prices, the prices which will be quoted to municipalities may vary slightly in the several zones. Quotations on the vegetables may be obtained from the surplus-property officer at each of the 13 zone supply offices.

The prices for the canned and cured meats, which are approximately 20 per cent below the cost of these commodities to the Government, are uniform throughout the 13 zones in which the surplus stocks of meats are located. They are as follows:

Beef, corned:
No. 1 cans	per dozen	$3.60
No. 2 cans	do	6.96
6-pound cans	do	24.00
Beef, roast:
No. 1 cans	do	3.48
1-pound cans	do	4.92
2-pound cans	do	7.92
6-pound cans	do	26.40
Hash, corned beef:
1-pound cans	do	2.76
2-pound cans	do	4.80
Bacon:
In crates	per pound	.34
In 12-pound tins	do	.36

As has been announced, this subsistence is offered to municipalities in not less than carload lots, but at those warehouses at which stocks of vegetables and meats are stored a municipality will be permitted to purcase a mixed carload of either vegetables or meats, or both vegetables and meats. The prices quoted are f. o. b. location. The War Department can not pay freight charges or transport the goods. The responsibility for such detail must be assumed by the municipality.

To make these food supplies as accessible as possible to the general public, the War Department will permit municipalities to purchase the surplus stocks and defer payment until they shall have been disposed of, provided this extension of credit shall not exceed a period of 10 days after the goods shall actually have been delivered to the municipality.

The War Department will negotiate only with a properly accredited official of a municipality for the sale of this subsistence. It will not concern itself with the manner in which the municipality, having obtained the goods, shall offer it to the public, further than to stipulate that the municipality shall sell at cost. The municipal government is at liberty to conduct the sale of the foodstuffs under the direction of municipal officials or civic bodies to whom it may delegate authority.

Municipalities desiring to take advantage of the War Department's offer are requested to negotiate directly with the surplus property officer at the nearest of the zone supply offices, which are located in the following cities: Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Newport News, Atlanta, Chicago, St. Louis, New Orleans, Fort Sam Houston, El Paso, Omaha, and San Francisco. These surplus property offices have been instructed by the War Department to make sales to municipalities under the conditions prescribed by the War Department, and are supplied with complete information concerning the commodities available in each of the zones and the actual prices at which they may be disposed of.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 7 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Wednesday, July 30, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, July 30, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, our Father in heaven, for the men of vision, whom Thou hast, from time to time, raised up in the world's history, took the initiative in their own hands, inaugurated great reforms, bringing order out of chaos, making life a thing of joy.

Hence our hearts go out in gratitude to-day for the wise and sane men of Virginia, who 300 years ago established on this continent the first legislative body ever assembled, and laid the foundation of a government of the people, by the people, for the people; and we thank Thee that this legislative body will honor itself by signal notice of the House of Burgesses from which sprang great reforms and laid the foundation of the United States of America, which we pray may live and be an inspiration to all the world for free and independent governments; and glory and praise be Thine, in the name of Him who died that truth might live. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. RAKER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RAKER. By direction of the Committee on the Public Lands——

The SPEAKER. To-day is Calendar Wednesday, and the Chair can not recognize the gentleman. The Clerk will call the roll of committees.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll of committees.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington (when the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization was called). Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up bills on the calendar from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington calls up a bill, which the Clerk will report.

DEPORTATION OF UNDESIRABLE ALIENS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I desire to call up the bill H. R. 6750, to deport certain undesirable aliens and deny readmission to those deported; and prior to the House resolving itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, I desire to ask unanimous consent that general debate be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that, in the consideration of the bill that he calls up, general debate allowed under the rule be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to indulge in general debate, but I may want 10 or 15 minutes during the progress of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will try to provide that. I will say to the House generally that this bill is short and carries eight amendments, and in the consideration of those amendments I think all the debate necessary can be had.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The policy will be liberal?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is this bill about?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It is a bill to deport certain undesirable aliens. It is well understood that out of 7,000 aliens taken up under Federal warrants about 4,000 were interned.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Where?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. At Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., and in the internment camp in Utah. Out of that 4,000, 2,000 have been permitted to return to their own homes and about 1,500 are under parole, and there now remain 500 alien enemies to be set free or to be deported if legislation therefor is provided.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will ask the gentleman if he does not think it will be better for him to take up 30 minutes in general debate to explain this bill before we tackle the amendments, and give somebody else 30 minutes?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will be glad to do that, but I thought if we had an understanding in the House that we would not use two hours in general debate, I would then be very glad to permit enough debate in the consideration of the amendments to enable everybody to understand the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman understands as well as I do or anybody else who knows what happens in this House, that some gentleman starts in on five minutes and he can not finish in five minutes and wants five minutes more, and some other gentleman who has gotten in bad humor about something or other objects, and it seems to me it would be better to take 30 minutes on each side for general debate and cut out the other hour.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Washington ask that the debate be limited to 30 minutes to a side?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. One-half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Washington and one-half by this side?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. I suggest that if they do not need it, it need not be used.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] will take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved the House into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6750, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6750, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6750) to deport certain undesirable aliens and to deny readmission to those deported.

Be it enacted, etc., That aliens of the following classes, in addition to those for whose expulsion from the United States provision is made in the existing law, shall, upon the warrant of the Secretary of Labor, be taken into his custody and deported in the manner provided in sections 19 and 20 of the act of February 5, 1917, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States," to wit:

(1) All aliens who are now or may hereafter be interned under section 4067 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and the proclamations issued by the President in pursuance of said section under date of April 6, 1917, November 16, 1917, December 11, 1917, and April 19, 1918, respectively, the fact of whose internment shall be certified by the Attorney General to the Secretary of Labor, and who shall be held by the Secretary of Labor to be undesirable residents of the United States.

(2) All aliens who since August 1, 1914, have been or may hereafter be convicted of any offense committed against any of the following laws of the United States, the judgment on such conviction having become final, namely:

(a) An act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917, or the amendment thereof approved May 16, 1918;

(b) An act entitled "An act to prohibit the manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession in time of war of explosives, providing regulations for the safe manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession of the same, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917;

(c) An act entitled "An act to prevent in time of war departure from and entry into the United States contrary to the public safety," approved May 22, 1918;

(d) An act entitled "An act to punish the willful injury or destruction of war material or of war premises or utilities used in connection with war material, and for other purposes," approved April 20, 1918;

(e) An act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, or any amendment thereof or supplement thereto;

(f) An act entitled "An act to punish persons who make threats against the President of the United States," approved February 14, 1917;

(g) An act entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917, or any amendment thereof;

(h) Also section 6 of the Penal Code of the United States;

(i) All conspiracies under section 37 of said Penal Code to commit any offense against the United States under the foregoing laws of the United States.

(3) All aliens who have been or may hereafter be convicted of any offense against section 13 of the said Penal Code committed during the period of August 1, 1914, to April 6, 1917, or of a conspiracy occurring within said period to commit an offense under said section 13, or of any offense committed during said period against the Sherman antitrust law, in aid of a belligerent in the European war.

SEC. 2. That the fact that such aliens were ordered interned or were convicted of any of such offenses shall be deemed to be prima facie evidence that said aliens are undesirable aliens, and in every case in which any such alien is ordered expelled or excluded from the United States under the provisions of this act the decisions of the Secretary of Labor shall be final.

SEC. 3. That in addition to the aliens who are by law now excluded from admission into the United States all persons who shall be expelled under any of the provisions of this act shall also be excluded from readmission.

With committee amendments as follows:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "States," insert the words "if the Secretary of Labor, after hearing, finds that such aliens are undesirable residents of the United States."

On page 2, line 4, after the word "now," strike out the words "or may hereafter be."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. PLATT, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 78. Joint resolution to permit the payment of obligations entered into by the War Department prior to July 11, 1919.

DEPORTATION OF UNDESIRABLE ALIENS.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] for 30 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I believe that the purposes of this bill can be easily understood from the reading of it, and I believe all will recognize the necessity for its immediate passage if it is to be passed at all.

The principal necessity is to provide for the deportation of about 500 interned alien enemies who are at Camp Oglethorpe, in Georgia, and Camp Logan, in Utah. Those 500 remain from about 4,000 alien enemies who were interned during the progress of the war. The report shows that about 7,000 were taken up under presidential warrants. A large number of those were paroled. Later those paroles were canceled and those men are now free. Another large number, in excess of 2,000, were permitted to return to Germany. Those were principally sailors on interned ships. The paroling process has proceeded until quite recently and the Department of Justice is now canceling those paroles, leaving the men free. There remain about 500, representing the worst types of those taken up during the war as alien enemies. In these cases the Department of Justice has statements as to their acts and desires that the men be taken in custody by the Department of Labor and proceedings begun against them for the purpose of deporting them. You will see by reading the bill that every man is to have his hearing.

It has been necessary to make some amendments to the bill at the last moment, in order to make it perfectly clear with regard to the hearings for those who were simply interned and hearings for those convicted. At the right time I will undertake to explain, or members of the committee will undertake to explain, the amendments and the acts passed by Congress for the deportation of those convicted of enemy conduct during the war.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman states that the bill provides for a hearing in each case?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Is that hearing before the Secretary, or some bureau official, or is it before a court?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That hearing is exactly the same procedure as is now had in all deportation cases. In such cases as may result from this act each man will be entitled to show, if possible, that he is not an undesirable resident of the United States.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That showing must be made to the Secretary or some of his officials?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The final decision rests with the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As the bill was originally presented, before these amendments were inserted by the committee, it provided that all aliens now or hereafter interned might be deported.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The mere fact of internment was taken to be sufficient evidence that the man was an alien enemy and ought to be deported, and that was about all that would have to be determined.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will say to the gentleman that the committee after full reflection struck out the words providing that internment shall be prima facie evidence.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield me some time before the conclusion of the general debate?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes. Now, unless there are some further questions, I think there is no further statement that I desire to make, except this: As all Members know, the House is about to go into a recess, and I fully agree with the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that the Members of the House need a recess. I should like to say that in addition to this bill, which two departments of the Government think is necessary to be passed, the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization have two other small bills that might be quickly passed after they have been read and the Committee of the Whole understand them. So that while the members of the committee have no desire whatever to suppress debate, I hope that the discussion to-day will not run to the general problems of immigration. Those are great problems, and the members of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization hope that when Congress resumes its sessions they may bring in an omnibus immigration bill with provisions covering many of the problems now confronting the country. [Applause.]

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Will the Chair advise me when I have used five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, this bill is, as we think, very plain. It has practically two purposes. It gives the Secretary of Labor the right to deport those specified in the bill, of the two classes named, and that the Secretary of Labor, after hearing, if he finds that the aliens are undesirable residents of the United States, may order them deported, and his decision is final, as under the immigration law at the present time.

Some one asked about hearings. In the cases under the first subdivision, as well as in the cases under the second subdivision, the Secretary reexamines the cases, and a full hearing is had by the Secretary of Labor of the entire record presented against the party whose deportation is sought, and that party is given an opportunity for a full hearing before the Secretary of Labor; but when the Secretary of Labor finally acts, that decision is final, and the party is deported. The first class of aliens are those who have been interned under the provisions of section 4067 of the Revised Statutes, under the proclamation of the President, persons who are now interned, alien enemies who were against this Government and whom the President believes should be interned, and who after examination by the Attorney General were interned.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman explain why the committee made that amendment to the bill?

Mr. RAKER. The amendment striking out the words "the fact of whose internment shall be certified by the Attorney General to the Secretary of Labor, who shall be held by the Secretary of Labor to be undesirable residents of the United States"?

Mr. DENISON. Yes. Why were those words stricken out?

Mr. RAKER. The Attorney General has records of the internments. After full consideration and consultation with the Department of Labor and the Attorney General's office, it was thought best to leave out that provision, as no certificate from the Attorney General would be necessary. In other words, the party is interned, is in custody, the knowledge is within the Department of Labor that the man is interned, and the Secretary takes up the case, notifies the party that he is going to proceed to deport him, and the party personally or with counsel has a right to a full hearing before the Secretary of Labor acts.

The certificate is provided for in the bill. The fact of his internment shall be certified by the Attorney General to the Secretary of Labor, and if he shall be found undesirable, and so forth.

Therefore the committee thought that the bill would be better and smoother to strike out lines 1, 2, and 3 of the amendment.

Mr. DENISON. Did not the committee think that if the man had been interned that was sufficient to show that he was an undesirable without leaving it to the Secretary of Labor?

Mr. RAKER. That matter was fully investigated by the committee, and I think rightfully, although at first I was inclined to think that the order for internment should put the man up for deportation. But we found that a number were interned at their own request because they were alien German subjects, and to avoid all complications they permitted themselves to be interned. And, in addition, there might be in the heat of war some man who might have been interned without just cause. We believed that in justice to every one, while the matter is now passed over, that the man before being deported should be given a full and fair opportunity to be heard, and if he can show an injustice to himself, that while he was an alien he was not an enemy of this country and ought not to be interned, he should have the opportunity to do so. Therefore we thought there should be a finding by the Secretary of the Interior of the fact that he should be deported.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does the gentleman have the data to show what number are affected in the second part of this division?

Mr. RAKER. I think there is only one, and it is a very serious case—one that went through the courts, and he was finally convicted. That provision has been framed for and we put it in to cover this man. He is a man of considerable property and has been interned and should now be deported.

The other amendments, particularly on page 4, striking out lines 1, 2, and 3, we thought that they had better be stricken out, because it is provided for in the rest of the bill. The same way as to the Sherman antitrust law. We designate it in better terms.

In section 2, instead of leaving the case prima facie, the fact that such alien was ordered interned and was convicted of such offense shall be deemed to be prima facie evidence that said aliens are undesirable, the record will be considered by the Department of Labor to be prima facie evidence. It was originally made conclusive, but the committee could not stand for that. That would not be fair, and after consultation and further hearings from the Attorney General's Office, as well as the Department of Labor, we struck it out and left the judgment to stand as it now stands in all courts and in any court proceedings where a judgment is introduced. We thought that was treating the alien fairly.

There are something over 500 aliens now interned, and the committee hope that this can be speedily passed and go to the Senate so that those who have not been deported can be deported at once. There are about 2,500 that have been deported and returned to Germany and some to Austria, and these 500 there are questions about. They should be deported. The most of them were real genuine enemies against this country, and they should be sent back to Germany, where they belong. The sooner that is done the better it will be, the less complication there will be, and it may save possible friction.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. What proportion of the 517 men in the internment camp are there after due investigation and conviction by the courts?

Mr. RAKER. I imagine about 90 per cent of them.

Mr. LAYTON. If that is the case, why should the judicial authority be transferred from the court to the Secretary of Labor?

Mr. RAKER. It is not; it is a proceeding under the immigration law of deportation, and the judgment of the Secretary is final. We make it applicable to this law; while the Secretary of Labor renders a final judgment, it can not be reviewed by the court, except on habeas corpus.

Mr. LAYTON. You are going to give them all a second trial?

Mr. RAKER. We give them an opportunity to be heard. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the bill as presented is an improvement over the bill in its original form. It so confines the power of deportation that it will apply only to those who have been actually convicted of offenses under the various war laws. In its original form the bill admitted of the deportation of a man who had simply been sent to an internment camp, a proceeding which I regard as very dangerous and destructive of the rights of man, because if a man had been sent to a camp, without anything to support his internment, except the suspicion of somebody who did not like him, it might place him wholly in the hands of another man or of some autocratic power which wanted to get rid of him, without justice and without humanity. In war time people are very much excited, and suspicion runs riot. The next-door neighbor may be unduly accused, and a hubbub may arise, ending in his being sent to an internment camp, without justice or warrant. Therefore I think it would be dangerous for a lawmaking body to provide that because a man has been sent to an internment camp without a hearing or conviction he should be sent out of the United States as an enemy of the country.

The phase of the bill to which I wish to refer, however, and which, I presume, will have further discussion later on with respect to other bills, is that which relates to the deportation of those aliens who have been seized during the war and whose property has been seized. A great many were seized during the war by the Alien Property Custodian or by the officers of the Department of Justice, and their property was seized from them, and that property has been "Americanized," so to speak—and I believe I am using a term that is familiar in the Alien Property Custodian's office when I say "Americanized."

We read in the newspapers that Americans expect to get back from Germany the property that was seized in Germany during the war. Hearings before the Ways and Means Committee indicated that we have large holdings in Germany, and that we propose, under the treaty and otherwise, that the Germans will in due course deliver back to the American owners that property which they have taken during the war. The same conditions do not seem to prevail with reference to the United States. At some other time when I have an opportunity I propose to go a little more into detail as to the manner in which German property in the United States has been seized under the law and under Executive order, and as to how it has been sold, sometimes at public and sometimes at private sales, and the proceeds converted to American use. I think I can show in due course that the treaty of Paris, which is now being discussed in another body, provides that no German national shall ever make claim, if the treaty goes through, for any property of his that was seized by these gentlemen in the United States, whether they proceeded under the law or otherwise.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have only 10 minutes, but I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JUUL. I merely want to know if the gentleman thinks that men who were guilty of no disloyal acts toward the Government of the United States should forfeit their property.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am just trying to state that what seems to be international morality is about to be respected by Germany and disregarded by the United States. That is a very broad statement, and of course the man who makes it takes chances with the hot-headed, but I was taught at my mother's knee the common dictates of honesty and morality, and I have not lost the notions then acquired, even since I have come to Congress. [Applause.] I have just made the observation that we are told that American property in Germany is to be restored to the American owners. It has been held in trust, so we have been told, but in the United States the German property seized by the Alien Property Custodian has been "Americanized," and some of the owners have been thrown into these internment camps, and under this bill the lips of those owners of German property in the United States will be sealed, and whoever has the property in the United States will have it. To have in this instance is to hold.

I did not mean to be uncivil to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JUUL], and I think I have answered his question, and I am glad he asked it. I expect in due course that there will be an investigation of the Alien Property Custodian's office. There ought to be. They have had big business and unlimited power.

Under the law and Executive orders they have employed hundreds of attorneys, hundreds of business men and bankers, hundreds of high-priced accountants—in all, they have had to do with a billion dollars' worth of property. We had on the witness stand in the dyestuff inquiry the present Alien Property Custodian, Mr. Francis P. Garvan, the successor of Mr. A. Mitchell Palmer, the present Attorney General of the United States. Mr. Garvan testified with regard to these things in a manner indicating the highest personal patriotism and philanthropy. There was not a minute when he did not hate every German who had a cent's worth of property in the United States. He was patriotic to the core, but meanwhile it was his business to seize the German property, and in many instances with every suspicion prevailing against every alien in the United States during the war, sending him to the internment camp at Oglethorpe and some to the camp out yonder in Utah.

Mr. Chairman, unless the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] will be good enough to give me five minutes more I can not tell this story as it should be told. It is a very important story. If I can not get the story in now, I beg of my colleagues, both Democrats and Republicans, to send at once to the Committee on Ways and Means and obtain the seven small volumes of hearings on the Longworth dyestuffs bill, take those hearings home to-night, and read them from cover to cover.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Washington grant me more time?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, each one of these interned aliens, if they are manufacturers, will have his hearing when this matter is taken up, and all these matters will come up. I regret that I can not yield any more time now.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the circumstances which made necessary the formulation of this bill and asking the House to pass it at this time grew out of a state of facts like this: After we had gone to war there were 6,300 alien enemies arrested under presidential warrant. That has no reference to those who were interned as seamen. Of these about 3,800 were released without being interned after investigation, and about 2,500 went into the internment camps. Since the armistice those who desired to return to their former countries, to Germany or Austria, were given the opportunity to do so, and since the armistice others have been paroled until at this time there are in these two camps at Fort Oglethorpe and Fort Douglas about 500 alien enemies, 80 per cent of whom the hearings show the Department of Justice regard as dangerous to the safety, the security, and the peace of the Nation. In addition to this there are about 150 who have been convicted under what are known as the war acts as enumerated here, and there is no existing law by which they may be deported. These alien enemies who are considered by the Department of Justice after due investigation to be dangerous to the peace, security, and safety of the country can not be deported under existing law, and if we fail to pass this act and the peace treaty is ratified, on the exchange of ratifications they must be released, however dangerous they may now be or have been to the safety and security of the United States.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Yes; just for a question.

Mr. JUUL. I want to know from the gentleman if there is any desire on the part of the United States Government to confiscate the property of any of these men whose fates are involved in this bill? I desire to know if it is a confiscation program, or is it merely an expulsion program?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. This bill has absolutely nothing to do with property. This bill seeks to deport from the United States every one of those aliens, whether he was a property owner or not, who is found to have been mixed up with the intrigues and with the plots against this country, who after having been given an opportunity to return to his country refused to do so. Now, as to what becomes of his property, the Committee on Immigration has nothing to do with that question, and this bill has nothing whatever to do with it.

Mr. JUUL. The bill is not aiding confiscation in any way?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. No; the bill is framed for the purpose of seeing that these alien enemies who have either already been convicted or who have been found to be dangerous alien enemies may be deported by the Department of Labor. Now, Mr. Chairman, my good friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has given a very severe criticism of the former Alien Property Custodian and of his acts during the progress of this war in seizing the property of alien enemies. In my judgment, whatever else may be said of Mr. Palmer, his loyalty and his genuine Americanism in seeking out and getting possession of every particle of alien enemy property in this country that might be used against the United States during this war should be highly commended by every American citizen. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I can not understand this earnest solicitude and regard for alien enemies who had come to this country and had the benefit of its laws and freedom to accumulate property here and then after we had gone to war sought to betray the United States and use that property for the benefit of the enemy. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, gentlemen of the committee, as I have said before, unless this act is passed now and these people are deported, these criminals—some of them I. W. W. and others concerning whom evidence is in existence to show their part in the pro-German propaganda in this country, of conspiracy to destroy the property of this country and murder American citizens—I say, unless this act is passed, so they may be deported before peace is finally concluded, they will be left here in this country. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania seems to be very much concerned that something may happen by which some German alien enemy may not have full property rights in this country. I am not very much concerned about the property. I agree with him, whatever is international law ought to be followed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. But I do not think we should let that go to the extent that the House of Representatives should take any step that might secure them in their safety in America and cut off the department from deporting them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will agree with the gentleman in everything he says about international rights and law and morals, but I want to ask the gentleman whether, if we were at war with Mexico, he would expect that the property of Americans in Mexico would be protected and preserved and returned to them following the war?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Yes; I should expect that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then why can the gentleman expect that rule to apply to Mexico and not apply to any other nation with whom we have war?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania this war is still with us in that there are a number of controversies that have not yet been settled in this country. Much of the criticism of Mr. Palmer comes from the very same sources that were intriguing against the United States and are now endeavoring to prevent his confirmation in the Senate. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In making that statement the gentleman uses the same argument Mr. Palmer does, and does it better. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that Mr. Palmer sent Mr. Bradley Palmer, an attorney of Boston, over to Paris with an amendment to the treaty providing that Germany or German nationals should have no claim whatever against any properties seized under order by any department or bureau of the United States?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. I am not so sure that it would be an act of international immorality if it should be necessary to hold that property and settle up the claims for our murdered citizens and for other criminal acts they committed against this country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Having heard the gentleman's statement and the applause of those who follow the gentleman in his patriotic utterances, I judge that evidently he and they both agree to the doctrine that when we seize a man's property and hold it in trust we have a right to convert it to our own use?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Nobody has made that statement.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is a fair inference.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. That has been circulated all over this country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Palmer endeavored and did succeed in getting in the peace treaty of Paris a provision to hold the property seized in the United States.

Mr. HULINGS. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Yes.

Mr. HULINGS. I wish to ask the gentleman if he knows whether property of American citizens residing during this war in Germany and who were conspiring to oppose the German arms is protected over there?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. I do not know. And I have not seen, on the other hand, any report that there were any Americans over there conspiring against them or endeavoring to commit the acts as alleged.

Mr. HEFLIN. During the progress of the war it was generally reported that they had confiscated the property of Americans in Germany.

Mr. HULINGS. So I understood.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. That property question has nothing to do with the passage of this bill. I wish to impress on the House this state of facts: That the hearings before the committee developed that 80 per cent of these interned alien enemies, about 300 of whom are down at Fort Oglethorpe and the others out at Fort Douglas, in Utah, are dangerous to the safety and peace of this country, and their records are such that they should not be permitted to remain here, and the only means by which we can deport them is to pass this legislation at this time. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] does not desire to use any more time in general debate, I will ask to have the bill read for amendment.

Mr. RAKER. I want to use a little more of my time. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BOX].

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I shall leave to the members of the committee who have served longer than I the explanation of the details of the bill before the committee. I want to take a little wider range in what I have to say than is covered by the bill itself.

We are dealing with the question of alien enemies. The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization is dealing with the question of aliens generally, and the country at large at this time is very much concerned with the various phases of the race question. This morning the discussion has developed a suggestion of a war with Mexico, not made seriously or with the expectation that such a war will soon be on us, but there has been much said about our policy in dealing with Mexico, and there has been some unfriendly and warlike talk. We have had enough said, I think, to call for the exercise of caution. I think America ought to be careful, I think that this House ought to be careful, in anything it says or does in connection with our relations with Mexico. We have had talk about intervention in that country. I have wondered what kind of intervention is in mind, whether it is the kind that is to last for one day or five days or a week, and leave our relations with that country in a state of irritation. I have wondered whether it will involve something like we have had in the Philippine Islands or that we had in Cuba. I have wondered how long such an intervention would last, how long it would take to pacify conditions there; what our relations with the rest of America would be; what would be the state of our relations with the other South American Republics after such an intervention; and then I have wondered, if it should go still further and amount to something more permanent and serious, how much our race problem would be complicated; how our already numerous and serious problems of that kind would be multiplied by the addition of many millions of ignorant Mexicans to those who are to live under our flag.

The West has a serious question. It is a race question; it is an immigration question. I might have said that the South has a race question, but that question, like the one in California, is a national one. We have a race question in the South and in the North as between the white and black races. Then we have the questions raised by the presence of numerous un-Americanized foreigners in the centers of population, mainly in the North. I as one not experienced in dealing with these nation-wide questions, these questions of momentous importance, suggest that in the heat of politics and partisanship, in the desire to criticize somebody, we do not set in motion influences that will bring consequences that we are not ready to accept. We do not want any more complications in our relations with foreign countries nor any more alien races among us.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, may I have leave to revise and extend my remarks?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk read in my time a letter from the Attorney General, printed in the hearings.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the communication referred to.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., May 27, 1919.

Hon. ALBERT JOHNSON,
Chairman Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, House of Representatives.

SIR: I respectfully direct your attention to the necessity for the passage of some legislation which will provide power for the deportation and exclusion from this country of those interned dangerous aliens whose presence here would constitute a menace in times of peace. My predecessor, Attorney General Gregory, and the Secretary of Labor, under date of February 5, addressed to your predecessor as chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization a joint letter urging action of this character; and in compliance with their request the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization subsequently reported to the House of Representatives for passage the bill H. R. 15098 framed in accordance with the views of the Attorney General and the Secretary of Labor. The bill, however, was not reached on the calendar and failed of passage. I inclose herewith for your perusal a copy of the joint letter addressed to your predecessor, together with a copy of the bill referred to.

Since February 5 the internment cases have been steadily reviewed, and there have been released on parole from the internment camps a considerable number of the least harmful alien enemies. Between five and seven hundred of those now in internment desire repatriation to Germany. Making allowance for this number there will still remain in the internment camps a considerable number—about 500 of whom, in my opinion, would constitute a menace to the safety of this country in times of peace. These are persons whose acts of hostility toward this Government during the war could not be reached by the criminal laws, but they were, nevertheless, genuinely dangerous to our safety. In addition to this group there are approximately 150 aliens who, during the war, have been convicted for violation of the espionage act, the sabotage act, and various other so-called war statutes. In the two groups of aliens last described there are many who acted as official spies of the Central Powers, bomb plotters, enemy soldiers and sailors, official propagandists, as well as a large number who have criminal records in this country of a serious character. In my judgment these people ought not to be allowed to remain here.

In the present state of the law there is no way in which these dangerous interned alien enemies can be deported. Unless Congress takes some action to provide for their deportation under suitable restrictions as to hearings, procedure, etc., they will be turned loose upon the country as soon as a treaty of peace is ratified.

It is my hope that the inclosed proposed bill or some other measure of a similar character may be introduced and given immediate consideration by your committee. In view of the seriousness of the emergency I desire to fulfill my responsibility toward the people of the country by respectfully asking that suitable action be taken by your committee as quickly as possible to protect the Nation in the premises.

Respectfully,

A. MITCHELL PALMER,
Attorney General.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the bill may now be read under the five-minute rule, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk read the bill for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That aliens of the following classes, in addition to those for whose expulsion from the United States provision is made in the existing law, shall, upon the warrant of the Secretary of Labor, be taken into his custody and deported in the manner provided in sections 19 and 20 of the act of February 5, 1917, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States," if the Secretary of Labor, after hearing, finds that such aliens are undesirable residents of the United States, to wit.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman I offer an amendment, on page 2, line 1, which I send to the Clerk's desk; that is, page 2, line 1, of the committee print of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 2, line 1, after the quotation mark, insert the words "if the Secretary of Labor, after hearing, finds that such aliens are undesirable residents of the United States."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRISP. As I understand it, this is a committee amendment. Therefore it is not necessary to offer it from the floor when the bill is read, because the Chair can direct that the committee amendments be read and voted on. I make that suggestion because I think it is unnecessary for the gentleman to offer it, inasmuch as it is a committee amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am very glad to have that helpful suggestion.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] has offered an amendment to this paragraph, and I presume it is a proper amendment. I want to ask the gentleman from Washington just what the process will be in regard to an alien about to be deported who claims property rights in the United States?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have this to say to the gentleman, that an alien interned as a dangerous enemy, who may be really dangerous or who may have been potentially dangerous, who is in custody of the Department of Justice now, will be taken over into the custody of the Secretary of Labor and be given an opportunity to present any facts he may have to show that he is a desirable resident of the United States. His property will not be touched by this bill one way or the other. He will have every opportunity to show that he did not mean anything by his mouthings or his machinations. In my opinion, unless he makes a mighty good showing he should be sent back where he belongs. His property will be adjudicated properly under international law.

Take, for example, the case of Dr. Muck. He was simply interned. He was interned, I believe, for declining to play our national anthem. That is all you see on the face of it. But if you go around and search beneath the surface of the record you will find Dr. Muck conspiring against the United States in many ways, and when the time came for him to accept an opportunity to go back voluntarily to his own country he declined to go. Perhaps the doctor thought Congress could not or would not pass a bill like this quick enough to deport him; but now, perhaps, he is fearful that we can enact such a bill as this, and he takes a notion that he wants to go to Switzerland; and if he is permitted to go voluntarily to Switzerland he will be free some time in the future to come back to the United States to play the part of hero—to go around the country playing the violin, leading the orchestra, slyly denouncing the United States and its people. I hope I have answered the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Washington has denounced the I. W. W.'s and the anarchists and has found fault with the pro-Germans, and I agree with him in all those particulars. But I ask him if he thinks it morally right, when you have seized a man's belongings, to say, "We will kick you out, but we will keep your property after we have kicked you out"?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think it is the highest duty of the country to kick out as promptly as possible all those who have conspired against us.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the gentleman is in favor of Germany keeping all American property now held in trust?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think the gentleman is stretching the question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am asking a plain, blunt question in regard to others whose property has been taken from them in the name of the Star-Spangled Banner, which Dr. Muck refused to play.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The property of inoffensive aliens will be taken care of.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The representative of the Attorney General's office was on the stand and had several cases that he finally brought into evidence, and here are two of them: "D. arrived in the United States in 1914." That was some time before the war. "He was a grain dealer for a German corporation." I suppose that was a great offense.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close at the end of five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Apparently, as we feel now, we are going to exclude all aliens from the United States. We do not want them to do business here. We do not want to do business in their countries. When peace is restored, apparently, we prefer not to deal with Germany at all directly, but we prefer to have England and France act for us in dealing with Germany. We will get the German goods, all right, but we will get them through England and France, and we will pay the fiddler when the time comes. But as to some of these horrible cases to which reference has been made by the Attorney General of the United States:

"D arrived in the United States in 1914."

There was not any war then. We were going back and forth between Germany and the United States without any trouble in 1914. "D." was a grain buyer for a German corporation. He was buying American grain to sell to a German corporation. That was a frightful crime that he was engaged in in 1914. He was taking the grain from the western farmers and selling it in Europe in 1914.

"He communicated with Germany through Scandinavian countries after the United States entered the war." Why, yes; there was a blockade and he could not get any word home, I presume, and communicated through Scandinavia. "He refused to give information as to his actions; was defiant and arrogant in his attitude before and since internment." I have no doubt he was a little mad at being sent down to the camp, but there you are. That is one case, and it stands up like a bugaboo in front of my friend from Washington, because he can see I. W. W.'s all around him, but this interned German in 1914 was buying grain out West, probably from the gentleman's State, and sending it abroad. He was sent to an internment camp and then would not tell everything after he got into the camp——

Mr. VAILE. At these hearings was there anything about the property which D. had, which is tied up, which he may lose or his friends my lose?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am coming to that in a moment. I was trying to show how easy it is to be afraid of everybody when you see an army of I. W. W.'s marching down on you, and when you think everybody will applaud from the galleries, and attack any man who dares to speak for common honesty or who dares to challenge some of the activities of this war bureau which had to deal with a billion dollars' worth of property, some of which was turned over to patriots, under private sales, in the United States.

I do not believe in covering up things in that way, and I do not believe in besmirching the truth and in running away because somebody wraps the American flag around his magnificent form and makes speeches about it, where the applause is loudest. There is too much of that. Old Dr. Johnson years ago said that "patriotism was the last refuge of a scoundrel." That axiom may be permissible with regard to some of these "patriots" in the United States who did not go to Europe and fight for $30 a month, but drew revenue from German corporations on this side of the water. They patriotically vote millions and millions for the relief of the peoples of other countries, but they do not worry much about the boys they sent over at $30 a month. The Alien Property Custodian would have this all passed up as patriotic, and his friends on the other side of the aisle yell when the mere suggestion is made that he went so far as to send an emissary to President Wilson at Paris to put the last nail in the coffin of German holdings in the United States, so that no claim should ever be raised against any act performed by the Alien Property Custodian or his clever assistant, Francis P. Garvan. I may give you more of this when the time comes. But read the dyestuff hearings and you will get the skimming of the surface.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. There are two amendments. Was the motion to close debate on both?

The CHAIRMAN. On the pending amendment. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 1, after the word "States," insert "if the Secretary of Labor, after hearing, finds that such aliens are undesirable residents of the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

(1) All aliens who are now or may hereafter be interned under section 4067 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and the proclamations issued by the President in pursuance of said section under date of April 6, 1917, November 16, 1917, December 11, 1917, and April 19, 1918, respectively, the fact of whose internment shall be certified by the Attorney General to the Secretary of Labor, and who shall be held by the Secretary of Labor to be undesirable residents of the United States.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 4, after the word "now," strike out the words "or may hereafter be."

In line 9, after the word "respectively," strike out the words "the fact of whose internment shall be certified by the Attorney General to the Secretary of Labor, and who shall be held by the Secretary of Labor to be undesirable residents of the United States."

Mr. RAKER. I desire to be heard in support of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California desire the amendments to be separated?

Mr. RAKER. No; I do not desire it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California desire to be heard on the amendment?

Mr. RAKER. In response to the statement made, the only thing provided in this bill is for the deportation of an alien German subject or Austrian alien who had violated our criminal laws and who had violated one of the Executive orders in regard to war conditions. Whether he was worth any money or not makes no difference; and how anyone on the floor of the House can go into a hysteria in favor of a man who has been a bomb thrower, who has been a sabotist, who has been a bomb plotter, who has committed crimes against the soldiers and sailors of our Republic, whether he has any property or not, is beyond my comprehension. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to ask a question for information. The Secretary of Labor under this legislation can not be reversed and, if he makes a mistake, can not be reviewed by any court on habeas corpus, can he? I am not sure about it, and I am asking for information.

Mr. RAKER. He can be reviewed on habeas corpus, but if the judgment is legal and no errors have been committed and he is within his jurisdiction, the judgment is final.

Mr. CANNON. Then, if the Secretary of Labor has made a mistake, and the court after full investigation so finds, the man would be permitted to stay in this country, would he?

Mr. RAKER. I will not say a mistake—if the Secretary of Labor has proceeded contrary to law and rendered a final judgment in opposition to law in the way of excluding valuable evidence or admitting improper evidence, or other proceeding, where an ordinary judgment would be void, the judgment can be reviewed on habeas corpus. And if the Secretary has proceeded illegally and improperly, it is the duty of the court to discharge the petitioner on habeas corpus. Otherwise the judgment is final.

Mr. CANNON. I do not want the gentleman to misunderstand me.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. If the Secretary of Labor finds this man should be returned to the country from which he came, if the court reviews the whole case, takes additional evidence, and finds that it was an error, can you reverse the findings of the Secretary of Labor?

Mr. RAKER. No. Upon habeas corpus you can only go into the record, where the Secretary of Labor has finally adjudicated, the same as in any other case. The law of habeas corpus can not review the proceedings to determine whether a mistake has been made or an error in admitting or excluding evidence. If the Secretary of Labor complies with the law, his judgment is final and is not to be reviewed.

Mr. CANNON. In other words, there is no appeal from the decision or judgment of the Secretary of Labor under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman's statement is correct; there is no appeal.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. HEFLIN. I want five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the amendment close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the assistant to the Attorney General, Mr. Creighton, when testifying before the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization with regard to some of these cases, said—and I want to show how important some of the cases are:

> The one we have called D. is the type of German business man who would like to live in the United States permanently, with frequent trips to Germany, purely for the sake of what business advantages he could gain. Very likely he would do all he could to promote German and other racial solidarity in this country.

A very broad suspicion that he might do that.

> He would have no sympathy with our institutions, and if there came any crisis he would be most likely to take an anti-American attitude.

Now, here was a case where the Department of Justice, which is presumed to deal with facts and with law, is willing to take suspicion as sufficient to intern and deport an alien——

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. The statement on page 12 of the hearings is in relation to a man who tried to get military information from the United States Army camp forwarded to Germany. If that was true about him he ought to be deported.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If you have proof of that, kick him out or shoot him. That is the answer. But get the proof. The gentleman from California stands over there and attempts to answer me.

Mr. RAKER. I am talking about the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman makes an appeal on the ground that he does not like bomb throwers. Neither do I. Has the gentleman done any more than I have to suppress the bomb throwers? I have voted all the money that the administration and the Department of Justice asked for to suppress bomb throwers. Has the Attorney General suppressed them? He has left Mr. Garvan, whom he proposes to appoint Assistant Attorney General for the purpose of detecting bomb throwers, in charge of the Alien Property Custodian office, and that gentleman is still president of the Chemical Foundation (Inc.), which was formed in the Alien Property Custodian's office. The gentleman from California tries to pull the wool over my eyes and of the House by the suggestion that he does not like anarchists and bomb throwers. Now, let me ask the gentleman a question. The gentleman knows something about the immigration laws; he and I were on the committee years ago. The gentleman from California then feared a Japanese invasion. He saw the Japanese coming over on the coast, just as he sees the German invasion now, after the war.

Mr. RAKER. I want to say to the gentleman that they were there then, and they are now increasing at the rate of 4,000 or 5,000 a year by birth in our State.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Very well. The gentleman will join me then, I hope, in passing certain tariff bills whereby we will hold him down.

Mr. RAKER. You can not hold him down with tariff bills. He breeds too fast.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But the gentleman knows, as a man experienced in immigration matters, that we have existing laws, and have had them for some time, lo, these many Congresses, to put every anarchist and every bomb thrower, every undesirable citizen, out of the country without any further legislation at this time. Does the gentleman deny that?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman denies it?

Mr. RAKER. We need this law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Get your administrative forces at work and put them down. You have all the law needed to put bomb throwers and anarchists out of the country now.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I regret to hear the voice of any Member of this House raised in opposition to this meritorious measure—this great American measure. I did not believe that any gentleman in the House would lift his voice against it. I am surprised at the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], who is possessed of such a bitter dislike for the able and faithful Attorney General of the United States, Mitchell Palmer, that he has permitted that, I fear, to warp his judgment and to poison his American system to the extent of putting him in opposition to the deportation of the enemies of our country. God of our fathers! Save the mark! These men who were here conspiring against the Republic, destroying property, blowing up munition plants, and murdering war workers when our boys were fighting at the front—doing everything in their power to paralyze the strong arm of our Government during the war against Germany. They are here now. I am in favor of deporting every one of them, and the sooner we send them out of the country the better. [Applause.] They are back of every disturbance in the country now. They had a hand in the recent race trouble in the city of Washington and they are operating in Chicago at this very hour. They are back of every devilish move in America that seeks to disturb the country that conquered Germany. [Applause.] That is what they are doing. I know that the gentleman does not speak for a majority of the Republicans on that side any more than he speaks for the Democrats on this side. One in a hill—let it be that way—when his vote is counted. My God, are we now, when Germany is fighting to the death the league of nations, doing all in her power to defeat its ratification by America so that she can be left free to make ready for another war—are we to leave her hellish agents here in America free to spread the poison of Bolshevism, of red-flagism, and anarchy, or are we going to stand erect, Americans to the core, united against these enemies of our country? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Chair will ask the Clerk to read subsection (2) down to section 2, and then we will take up individually the committee amendments.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

(2) All aliens who since August 1, 1914, have been or may hereafter be convicted of any offense committed against any of the following laws of the United States, the judgment on such conviction having become final, namely:

(a) An act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917, or the amendment thereof approved May 16, 1918;

(b) An act entitled "An act to prohibit the manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession in time of war of explosives, providing regulations for the safe manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession of the same, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917;

(c) An act entitled "An act to prevent in time of war departure from and entry into the United States contrary to the public safety," approved May 22, 1918;

(d) An act entitled "An act to punish the willful injury or destruction of war material or of war premises or utilities used in connection with war material, and for other purposes," approved April 20, 1918;

(e) An act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, or any amendment thereof or supplement thereto;

(f) An act entitled "An act to punish persons who make threats against the President of the United States," approved February 14, 1917;

(g) An act entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917, or any amendment thereof;

(h) Also section 6 of the Penal Code of the United States;

(i) All conspiracies under section 37 of said Penal Code to commit any offense against the United States under the foregoing laws of the United States.

(3) All aliens who have been or may hereafter be convicted of any offense against section 13 of the said Penal Code committed during the period of August 1, 1914, to April 6, 1917, or of a conspiracy occurring within said period to commit an offense under said section 13, or of any offense committed during said period against the Sherman anti-trust law in aid of a belligerent in the European war.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania (interrupting the reading). I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman did not understand the order of procedure.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This is being read by paragraphs.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Subsection (2) is being treated as a paragraph. Unanimous consent was asked and given.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that when line 3 was read, which ends with a semicolon, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] was recognized to offer an amendment, and we have been proceeding to amend, following the reading of a paragraph, regularly since that time.

The CHAIRMAN. At the beginning of the reading the Chair stated that this would be read down to the close of the section by unanimous consent. He asked if there was objection, and no objection was noted. The Clerk will proceed.

The Clerk concluded the reading.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 14 and 15, strike out the words "offense committed against any of the following laws of the United States" and insert the following in lieu thereof: "violation or conspiracy to violate any of the following acts or parts of acts."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. "God of our fathers!" [Laughter.] The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] is back. The House and the country will be delighted to know that fact. Had it not been for the intrusion by the gentleman from Pennsylvania of a few brief remarks on this more or less important bill the country would have been unaware, as would the White House also, of the return of our distinguished friend.

Mr. HEFLIN. Oh, I have been here observing the gentleman and his movements for a couple of weeks.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. "God of our fathers!" If I had known that [laughter]——

Mr. HEFLIN. The God of our fathers is far removed from the cause that the gentleman now espouses.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If I had known that—"God of our fathers!"—I would have given due notice so that a suitable audience might have been here this morning to hear the patriotic utterances of the gentleman who has been burning up the railroad ties throughout the cotton belt, smothering the exchanges with his eloquence. "God of our fathers!" Had I the voice and the power of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN]——

Mr. HEFLIN. I have been trying to smother out the alien enemies of the country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. "God of our fathers!" Then, with what words of eloquence would I have shivered the circumambient air and have sprung them on an unsuspecting audience—such words as would delight the cockles of the hearts of the constituents of the gentleman from Alabama—"God of our fathers!" But lo, alas, and alas, and again alas, I am incapable in this presence, where every American eye and every American voice is directed against the pro-German and his utterances—I am forbidden at this time from calling on the god of flamboyant bunk to come to my rescue, for I am yet suffering the pangs that come from the darts of the gentleman's redundancy and can not proceed further in this respect. "God of our fathers!"

I would that a distinguished citizen of this Nation, who, like the gentleman from Alabama, has been sojourning hence for a period not quite so long, might have heard this reaffirmation of intense patriotism that throbs and burns in the very heart of the eloquent gentleman from Alabama, but that gentleman is occupied with other duties, one of which is to have confirmed by another body, if possible, a little amendment to the treaty of nations that was slipped in by the counsel for the Alien Property Custodian, which provided that property seized in the United States shall stay seized, so that no claim by the owner can ever be made valid against him. Oh, if I had the mind and the thought and the oratorical flights of the gentleman from Alabama and could spring alive without notice to the defense of the administration as easily as he does I might refer to some of the reasons that actuated him in touring the southern tier in order that none of the votes and perhaps none of the editorial writers might slip away from the present occupant of the White House.

I am delighted that in this short debate, harmless as it began, the Leviathan of southern oratory should suddenly appear to defend the administration and the Attorney General of the United States, and that he proposes to take unto his bosom the Alien Property Custodian, who is also president of the Chemical Foundation (Inc.), in Delaware, with stock at $500,000——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. "God of our fathers!"

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. STEVENSON. I wish the gentleman would withhold that. I have not taken any time and I wish to say something about this bill and would like to have five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman withhold his request until he gets to the next amendment?

Mr. STEVENSON. This is the part of the bill to which I wish to direct my remarks.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. There are several more amendments.

Mr. STEVENSON. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that all debate be now closed. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 23, strike out the words "also section" and insert in lieu thereof the word "section," and in line 24 strike out the word "States" and insert the word "States" and a period.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I am very much in sympathy with the intention of this legislation, but it seems to me from a practical standpoint that everything on page 2, beginning with subdivision 2 on down to the end of section 2, is dangerously near being unconstitutional, if I may make the suggestion, in that in this they make the conviction for a crime already committed before the passage of this act an excuse for deporting. In other words, the proposition looks, as drawn, as if it is merely adding to the punishment which the criminal already convicted has to suffer for violating a law before this act is passed.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield for one observation?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLACK. If I understand the bill correctly, the violation of these several acts gives the Secretary of Labor jurisdiction to have hearings on this alien, and if after the hearing he decides that the alien is an undesirable alien he deports him. The mere fact that he commits a crime does not serve to call for deportation per se.

Mr. STEVENSON. Probably that is correct and possibly the idea and theory of this legislation. But I will call the gentleman's attention to the fact that it is adding an additional burden and penalty on a man who has been convicted because he has been convicted.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. In a minute; I want to finish what I was going to say. If you are going to add to the penalty directly or indirectly of an offense which was committed prior to the passage of an act which adds this penalty you create what is known as an ex post facto law that will not stand, according to my judgment. I do not care to set it up against everybody else's, but I have always exercised my own judgment. Another thing, you provide that the finding of the Secretary of Labor shall be final, and I understood the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] to say that no court can handle it. Now, how are you going to suspend the writ of habeas corpus? A man is arrested and it is undertaken that he is to be punished additionally because he was convicted of a crime two years before, and he is denied a right of entry to court. I understood the gentleman from California to say as much, and if that is the meaning of that clause I do not propose to vote for it. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. I think perhaps the gentleman is not thoroughly acquainted with our present immigration law.

Mr. STEVENSON. Well, I am not.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Our law already authorizes the deportation of an alien who has been convicted in this country of a crime involving moral turpitude.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. And there are some of those convictions and under the war acts there are others not of that character, and it was thought best to authorize the Secretary of Labor to deport them.

Mr. STEVENSON. That is exactly the question. That is a case under which a man is convicted under circumstances justifying deportation at the time of the conviction; that would clearly be all right. This law will not be invalid as to that, but it is admitted that there is a class that would not be subject to deportation merely because of the fact that they were convicted, and now we make it a deportable offense and thereto add to the punishment ex post facto——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time has been limited by unanimous consent. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 1, strike out all of the language in lines 1, 2, and 3.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close at the end of five minutes.

Mr. RAKER. I do not yield for that, but I will in a moment.

I wish to say to the gentleman from South Carolina that the writ of habeas corpus would lie, but on the writ of habeas corpus you can not investigate what the Secretary of Labor did, whether he committed any error or not, as long as he complied with and kept within the pale of the law. Mere errors could not be reviewed.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. In other words, a writ of habeas corpus would apply in a case of this kind just as it would in any other case of confinement?

Mr. RAKER. Exactly.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. The writ of habeas corpus does not go to the merits of the crime but to the question as to whether he was illegally committed, without due form of law?

Mr. RAKER. Yes. And whether or not the Secretary of Labor has rendered a legal and final judgment.

Mr. STEVENSON. As I stated a moment ago, when the time expired, there are cases that were covered by the statute before. There were cases where they were convicted that will be covered by this statute, and which were not covered before. Men have already been convicted. Now, if a man is apt to be deported because he was convicted of a crime which at that time would not justify his deportation, he has a right to come before the court and say that the Secretary of Labor is undertaking to deport him as an additional penalty to the crime for which he was convicted before this act was passed.

Mr. RAKER. That is not the purpose of this law. The present immigration act lays down certain offenses for which and certain grounds upon which a person can be deported. This does nothing more, but adds additional grounds for deportation. This legislation is not like a criminal statute. It is not an additional punishment. Any alien in this country may be deported whenever this country says so, whether the crime was committed in this country or in another country and before this legislation or not. We have the right to say who shall remain here; and if a man in Germany or Austria committed crimes before he came here, before this act was enacted, we can enact this law and deport him.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. In other words, the purpose of this depoftation is not an additional punishment, but to get rid of him?

Mr. RAKER. To get rid of an undesirable alien in this country.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield.

Mr. STEVENSON. I am in thorough accord with the intention of the act, but I want to ask the gentleman if, as a matter of fact, when you make that the sole prerequisite of his being brought before the Secretary of Labor for the purpose of a hearing there, that does not add to the penalty which he suffered when he was convicted and sentenced? That is the difficulty I have in mind. I am not obstreperous about it. The gentleman may be right, and I hope he is right. I want to see the thing in proper shape.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page, 4, line 9, after the word "the," strike out the words "Sherman antitrust law" and insert in lieu thereof "Act entitled 'An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies,' approved July 2, 1890."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the fact that such aliens were ordered interned or were convicted of any of such offenses shall be deemed to be prima facie evidence that said aliens are undesirable aliens, and in every case in which any such alien is ordered expelled or excluded from the United States under the provisions of this act the decision of the Secretary of Labor shall be final.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment. Is there a committee amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 13, after the word "That," strike out all of the balance of line 13 and all of lines 14 and 15 and the words "undesirable aliens" in line 16, including the word "and."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I will read:

Page 4, line 19, after the word "final," insert: "Provided, That no alien whose property has been seized by the Alien Property Custodian during the war with Germany and who has not been convicted of crime shall be deported against his protest pending the lawful determination of the ownership of the property claimed by him.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I make a point of order it is not germane. It brings up property rights, and the bill has nothing to say about property rights.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TILSON. Has the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] been reported?

The CHAIRMAN. It has been reported, but the gentleman asked the privilege of reading it himself.

Mr. TILSON. Has it been reported by the Clerk?

The CHAIRMAN. It has not been. Does the gentleman desire it to be reported by the Clerk?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask that the amendment be reported by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: On page 4, line 19, after the word "final," insert: "Provided, That no alien whose property has been seized by the Alien Property Custodian during the war who has not been convicted of crime shall be deported against his protest pending the lawful determination of the ownership of the property claimed by him."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Washington makes the point of order against the amendment, and that is pending, is it not?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to be heard if there is any question about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the point made by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON], as I understand it, is that the amendment is not germane, because it refers to property which the gentleman indicates is not referred to in the bill.

I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the bill provides for the deportation of aliens under certain conditions. The aliens must be certain kinds of aliens. They are provided for under a series of statutes that are enumerated. They are to be deported for various offenses. For instance, all aliens are to be deported who have been or who may hereafter be convicted. They are to be deported under an act which provides punishment for interference with the foreign relations, neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States. There are a number of things for which the alien is to be deported. He is to be deported under an act to prohibit the manufacture, destruction, storage, use, or possession in time of war of explosives. He is to be deported under an act to prevent in time of war departure from and entry into the United States contrary to public safety. He is to be deported under an act to punish the willful attempt to injure or destroy war material or war premises or materials used in connection with the making of war munitions. He is to be deported for a variety of things. He is to be interned because he holds property in the United States which is supposed to be at variance with the interests of the United States. The bill implies that the alien who has property and uses property unlawfully in the United States shall be deported.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The various matters mentioned in the different sections of the bill all deal with those convicted. The gentleman's amendment, as he has offered it, deals only with the interned. It is an entirely different matter.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Washington contends that because an attempt is made here to preserve property rights of aliens about to be deported the amendment is not germane to this bill, when the bills I have indicated provide in numerous instances that an alien having property in the United States, which property is unlawfully used or used in a manner which might endanger the people of the United States, is to be deported. What is fair on one side is certainly fair on the other, and if by reason of the ownership of property, if by reason of the ownership of arms, if by reason of the ownership of a knife or a revolver or a munitions plant or of real estate upon which an enemy establishment is reared he is seized and interned, the property question enters into it very materially. He may be interned because he has property, but if the contention of the gentleman from Washington is right he may not have the right, in the law which provides for his deportation, to set up any claim.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman through?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; I am through. Does the gentleman from California want to ask me a question?

Mr. RAKER. No. I want to speak on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] is recognized.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any necessity for a prolonged discussion. The Chair has read the amendment carefully. There are two distinct propositions proposed in the gentleman's amendment which are not in the bill. No deportation could be had under his amendment unless these conditions were met: "Provided, That no alien whose property has been seized by the Alien Property Custodian can be deported." That changes entirely the existing law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to ask the gentleman a question. So long as the point of germaneness is made respecting the ownership of property, and the contention that property has any pertinency, I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that if an alien enemy owns property that might be applied to the detriment of United States interests he would be deported under this law?

Mr. RAKER. I did not quite get that. Will the gentleman please repeat that?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman makes the point that because property is referred to in this amendment it is not germane. I ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that by reason of the holding or acquisition of property an alien enemy might not be deported, and if provision is not made for that very thing in these acts referred to here?

Mr. RAKER. No. I do not view it in that way. It is wholly immaterial whether a man is a pauper or a millionaire; if he violates an Executive order issued by the President, as designated in the bill, and is found to be an undesirable citizen, he should be deported. Second, if he is convicted under any one of the acts designated in the bill and is found by the Secretary of Labor to be undesirable, he is to be deported.

Now, whether or not he owns any property or claims any property is clearly immaterial, in so far as concerns the question whether or not he should be convicted, or whether or not he violated the President's order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. For the benefit of the Chairman let me ask the gentleman a question, whether, if he holds property in violation of the rights of the United States, he should not be apprehended under any of the acts referred to in this bill, and if under this bill he would not be deported?

Mr. RAKER. I do not believe so.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The question of property is thoroughly intertwined with every line of the bill.

Mr. RAKER. I do not believe it is.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The question of property is germane to every line of the bill.

Mr. RAKER. Why, no; it is not a question of property. When a man goes out and deliberately murders his neighbor he has violated the law and can be punished, whether he is rich or poor, millionaire or pauper. This is the case of German alien enemies.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I regret to say that the gentleman has not seen the point. The gentleman from Washington makes the point of order that because the word "property" is used in the amendment, therefore it is not germane to the bill. I am indicating that property is provided for all through this bill, and that if the word "property" is to be barred out, it should never have been admitted in these various acts that are referred to.

Mr. RAKER. Just a word, and then I will not take any more time. That is not the contention of the gentleman from Washington or myself. The first provision is that a man could not be deported if he had any claim of property that had not been adjudicated. That is one proposition, and it involves adding to this bill a new condition of deportation that is not involved in the bill, that is not involved in the subject matter before the House at all, and it is clearly not germane to the legislation here involved. The legislation involves the two things, I repeat, namely, whether a man has violated an Executive order, or, second, whether he has been convicted of a crime under any statute designated in the bill.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard just a moment. It seems to me, in offering my views on the question of sustaining the point of order, that the bill in question seeks merely to enact new regulations for deportation. I take it that the matter of which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has spoken might be properly contained in the phrase as it appears on page 1—

In addition to those for whose expulsion from the United States provision is made in the existing law.

This particular bill now offered for enactment goes beyond that, and provides that deportation may be had, in addition to the existing law, in the event of certain acts being done by aliens, for which conviction is had after trial in proper course. I assume that everybody will agree with that, that if an alien is tried, is afforded a fair trial and is convicted, then he is a proper subject for deportation.

In this bill, however, retention is made of the existing laws, and additional safeguards for American property are incorporated by the finding that after a man is convicted of some of these acts, that fact may be offered as a reason for his deportation in the hearing before the Secretary of Labor; but there is no provision in this bill sought to be incorporated deporting a man because he has owned any property. I assume that the ownership of property and its application toward any detriment of the United States is cared for in the existing law, and it is not sought to be cared for in this law. I contend therefore that the point of order made by the gentleman from Washington is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. TOWNER). The Chair is ready to rule. At first blush the Chair thought that the point of order was well taken, for the reason stated, that there were not sufficient references to this bill to warrant the finding that the amendment was germane; but on a closer examination of the proposition the Chair is well satisfied that the amendment is germane, for this fundamental reason and upon this principle: This bill is for the purpose of deporting aliens under certain circumstances. This amendment offers a time restraint. It says that it shall not be done until certain things have been found with regard to property. Now, the germaneness of an amendment of this kind is not dependent upon the nature of the time conditions, because it has been decided more than once that the ascertainment of a fact which delays the operation of the principal portion of the bill is a germane amendment. For that reason and upon that ground the point of order is overruled.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I desire to speak to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The general purpose of this amendment is to avoid the possibility of any great mistake that might be made with regard to the rights of those who have been put in the internment camps on suspicion, through malice or vindictiveness, or whose property might have been taken from them unjustly. I want to say in this connection that the hearings on the Longworth dye bill have revealed the fact that efforts have been made to take away the property of naturalized citizens, and not only that, but in one instance the property of a native-born citizen of the United States was taken away to the extent of hundreds of thousands of dollars, and that a suit is now pending on behalf of that American citizen to recover his rights. Under the Constitution of the United States property may not be taken away from a citizen of the United States without due process of law, and in this one instance it appears to have been done.

With regard to those aliens concerning whom we have no sympathy here, particularly bomb-throwing aliens, I have never said a word except that the administrators of the law should seize them under the existing law and put them out of the country as soon as they can. No gentleman differs from me on the question of getting rid of anarchists, bomb throwers, and undesirables. There is existing law to cover all that. But here is a new proposition.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. How much property must a man have in order to remain in this country—a pocket knife?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Aliens in the United States have millions and millions of dollars.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Of course, the gentleman knows that I refer to enemy aliens.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman wanted to deal with British aliens who have property in the United States I would say that they probably have billions here. They have it now. Citizens of every foreign country have vast holdings in the United States, and I want to say that those foreign holdings in the United States are influencing American legislation right now.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield, but I am going to ask for more time.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Would the gentleman be in favor of turning back all the property formerly owned by German subjects in this country which has been taken over by the Alien Property Custodian?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will answer the gentleman, and I want all gentlemen to hear the answer. The trading-with-the-enemy act passed by this House provided for the taking over of German property and for placing it in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian as trustee, and the saving clause in that act was an honorable clause, and it ran like this: This property shall be held in trust until the war terminates, when it shall be disposed of by act of Congress.

In other words, we reserved in the trading-with-the-enemy act the right to say what should be done with this alien property which our trustee took over for us.

I will not go into the history of it now, but I will say from time to time riders on appropriation bills were secured——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. From time to time riders on appropriation bills were secured, Executive orders were secured, until the Alien Property Custodian obtained the right to sell at public sale property that he was holding in trust, and finally the right to sell at private sale property that he was holding in trust, and lastly, as I have indicated, secured a provision in the treaty to make every one of these sales so binding that there should never be a claim on the part of the original owners.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Now, if the gentleman will answer my question, would the gentleman from Pennsylvania be in favor of turning all of the property seized by the Alien Property Custodian back to the citizens of Germany?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the Congress of the United States should so decree; yes. But I maintain that the Alien Property Custodian managed to get power by Executive order and otherwise to dispose of the property, when we had provided that the Congress of the United States should dispose of it.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Would the gentleman from Pennsylvania favor Congress so disposing of the property?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would favor Congress acting on it and doing the right thing, whatever that might be. I would leave it to the judgment of the gentleman from Louisiana and his colleagues to exercise their right as Representatives of the people of the United States to say whether property that we held in trust should be turned back, or whether it should be sold and the proceeds put in our pockets.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Would the gentleman, as a Member of Congress, vote to turn back the property of the Hamburg-American Steamship Co. to the original owners?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would the gentleman from Louisiana vote for it? We seized the property and held it as trustee. The gentleman is a Sunday-school teacher. What would he do about it—put the proceeds in his pocket or sell it to his friends, or would he hold it until the war was over and say that we should deal with it equitably and fairly, according to that ideal democracy for which our great President stands?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. The gentleman has not answered my question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think Congress should be fair in dealing with this matter and should at least give the owner of the property a chance to be heard before his mouth is forever sealed by being sent out of the country.

Now, we have only skimmed the surface. During the dyestuff hearings it developed that Mr. Garvan, acting under Mr. Palmer, did intern a number of these men after it developed that they owned alien property. Some of them are now in Oglethorpe, and some have been asked if they wanted to go out of the country, I understand, and have said no.

It is a simple case of common honesty. It is more than that. It is a question of whether the United States is going to treat as a scrap of paper the trading-with-the-enemy act, which provided that we should take the property and hold it in trust until the war was over and then determine the ownership ourselves. If you want to vote now to take the property and put it in our own pockets, that is one thing. I do not think that is common honesty or common decency. I do not believe it promotes international law for gentlemen to preach world democracy who seem to be taking care of pelf as they go along.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and amendments close in five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I object.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I have hastily read this bill and have been listening to what gentlemen have had to say. I am not an international lawyer and do not know what the law of nations would do under these conditions if they were observed. I do not know how the treaty, when ratified, with or without amendment, would dispose of these questions that we have been talking about and stand as to the property. But I do know that in Germany and in various other portions of Austria, as I understand it, many American citizens have factories that were constructed and were prosperous in those countries, in belligerent territory, when the war broke out. It is out of their possession, not being operated, so far as I know. I had supposed that when the end came the property of German citizens in this country—they were against the United States—and the property of American citizens in Germany would be compensated for. I do not know how much we would cheat the Germans if we confiscated their property in this country, nor how much our people would be cheated if the property of American citizens or their factories in Germany were confiscated. I have one in mind now, the Moline Plow Co., for instance, in my own State. It has very large holdings in factories in Germany, as well as others. There are the sewing-machine people, for instance. We have been tolerably industrious in manufacturing, manufacturing wherever it could be done at a profit, taking the markets wherever in the world we could get them, as have been the Germans wherever they could get our markets. If it is proposed—and I speak now without knowledge and in all sincerity—to confiscate the property of the Germans here, then we may expect that they will confiscate the property of our people in Germany, because they were fighting each other like the devil. They have quit fighting now, however. That is about all I wish to say. Just what the effect of this bill will be I do not know; but with the desire to send back alien enemy criminals I am in full accord.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I say to the gentleman as a former member of the Immigration and Naturalization Committee, and these gentlemen will hardly deny it, that we have ample law now upon the statute books to deport the bomb throwers, anarchists, and undesirables generally.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman is more familiar with that legislation than I am.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is a matter of administration now.

Mr. CANNON. I have said all that I desire to say in the premises.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, if I understand the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], it provides that if an enemy alien who has been interned is the owner of property that has been seized, he shall not be deported during such time as his property is in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian, even though the Secretary of Labor should find that he is an undesirable resident.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. During the pendency of legal proceedings respecting it; that is, pending the legal termination of its ownership.

Mr. BLACK. That is my understanding of the gentleman's amendment. What does this bill do? If I understand it correctly, it does not authorize the deportation of an alien merely because he has been an interned enemy alien; it does not authorize the deportation of an enemy alien, or any other alien, merely because he has been convicted of the violation of some of the acts which we passed in aid of the prosecution of the war and which are named in the several subsections of the bill. What it does do is to say to the Secretary of Labor, "If you find, after a hearing, that any interned enemy alien is an undesirable alien, then you shall have the right to enter judgment deporting him, or if you find that any alien in this country, whether from one of the enemy countries or not, has violated any of these war laws, such as trading with the enemy act, the espionage act, and others named in this bill, you shall have the right to also deport him after giving him a hearing and after finding as a fact that he is an undesirable resident of the United States."

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Suppose the Secretary of Labor should find that he had not been convicted? Would he have a right to question the matter of conviction? Suppose he is convicted under the statutes?

Mr. BLACK. If the gentleman will read the bill, and I am sure that he has read it——

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. He will find that the conviction must have been a final conviction.

Mr. STEVENSON. That is what it states.

Mr. BLACK. He can only have jurisdiction in such cases, and I can see no danger of a mistake of that sort.

Mr. STEVENSON. Then, if he finds as a fact that he has not been convicted, he will be discharged.

Mr. BLACK. Certainly; he would have no jurisdiction.

Mr. STEVENSON. Then, the holding of him is directly traceable to and based upon his having been convicted.

Mr. BLACK. I make no dispute of that fact. That is the element which confers jurisdiction in such particular cases. We are merely adding to the immigration law we now have on the statute books certain other cases in which the Secretary of Labor has jurisdiction and may, after hearing, deport the aliens, and I contend that such ought to be the law. I realize perfectly well that we have many people of foreign birth in this country who are thoroughly loyal and patriotic and are good citizens. I have not the slightest fear that any of them will be deported under this act.

Mr. AYRES. Does the gentleman feel that where an alien has been found guilty of violating any of these laws and the Secretary of Labor finds he should be deported, that he should be kept here until his property rights are tried?

Mr. BLACK. I certainly do not. I think that if, after a hearing, the Secretary of Labor finds that he is an undesirable resident of the United States, he ought to be deported. We know that within the last 20 years or more, because of the influx of foreign immigration into this country, we have had brought to our land a great many of the vicious and unwholesome and un-American doctrines that have grown up in Europe in an atmosphere of oppression, ignorance, and tyranny, and these foreigners seem to think in many cases that because they can not impose these unwholesome, un-American doctrines upon our people by appealing to their reason and judgment, they will impose them upon us by a reign of violence and terror. They seem to think they can accomplish with the torch and the bomb that which the reason and the judgment of the people refuses to accept. In this they sadly mistake the temper of the American people. The American people are patient and long-suffering, but when they are once aroused they are swift and sure in the execution of their judgment, and they are aroused upon this question and they are determined that no alien shall come to this country and be allowed to remain with avowed purpose of imposing upon us these vicious doctrines of European Bolshevism and communism by means of terrorism, the torch, and the bomb. [Applause.]

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. BOX. Suppose two aliens had been guilty of the same course of conduct and that one of them had a sufficient body of property to cause the custodian to seize it and the other had no property at all? What in that case would be the operation of the law under the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. BLACK. It would keep one in this country and exclude the other, and there would be no sense in the world in a proceeding of that kind, and no justification for it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I will.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Suppose an American citizen should be seized under this act and charged with being an alien and subject to deportation. How would he be able to secure a review of the finding that he is an alien?

Mr. BLACK. If the gentleman pleases, the Constitution guarantees to every American citizen due process of law. There is no proceeding under heaven by which you can deprive him of that right. But it does not go so far as to the man who is an alien.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. So far as this act would apply to a case of that kind, it would be unconstitutional, because it provides that the finding of the Secretary of Labor shall be final and there shall be no review, and that is one of the things that he is required to find, whether the man is an alien or not. That is a fact that he must make a conclusion on.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; but I will call the gentleman's attention to this fact: That the only men who are within the purview of this bill are aliens, and if an American citizen should be seized under the act he could undoubtedly secure his release under a writ of habeas corpus.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, the question asked by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] answers itself. The jurisdiction of the Secretary of Labor in deportation cases is limited solely to dealing with the subject of aliens. The elementary proposition is that if the Secretary of Labor would undertake to exercise any power over an American citizen his act would be null and void and under writ of habeas corpus the court would find that he had no jurisdiction.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. I will.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. How could a man who is detained avail himself of that? In other words, if the man was really an alien and can not review the action of the Secretary of Labor, how can he secure a review?

Mr. SIEGEL. As far as jurisdiction is concerned, he has the power of bringing the question up before the United States Court. That is practically done every day in the year. In addition, at this hearing before him, a man is entitled to have counsel present, entitled to subpœna witnesses and summon them before him and have a full hearing, at which the stenographer's minutes must be taken.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman permit further?

Mr. SIEGAL. Certainly.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. One of the facts that the Secretary of Labor must find in this case is that the detained man is an alien. Now, let us say that the man in fact is not an alien but he is found by the Secretary of Labor to be an alien. What is his remedy?

Mr. SIEGEL. His remedy will be a writ of habeas corpus.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Suppose a man is in fact an alien and wants to put in issue the question of whether he is an alien. What is his remedy?

Mr. SIEGEL. A writ of habeas corpus.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Then the action of the Secretary of Labor by that finding of fact, whether it be proper or improper or whether the man be an alien or not an alien, is subject to review, notwithstanding the terms of the statute to the contrary?

Mr. SIEGEL. Practically so, and in every case the United States courts have jurisdiction to determine whether the Secretary has had jurisdiction and given him a hearing such as the statute requires and contemplates.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. I will.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that it is a mere question that is absolutely jurisdictional that the Secretary has no right to proceed if the man is not an alien in fact?

Mr. SIEGEL. Correct.

Mr. RAKER. And if he is an American citizen whom the Secretary starts to proceed against under this act, the courts are open to him by writ of habeas corpus and otherwise to prove he is an American citizen and the Secretary's jurisdiction would cease at once?

Mr. SIEGEL. There is no doubt about that. It has been repeatedly so held by the courts. Now there has been some mistaken impressions expressed here about some things in regard to these deportation cases which I will try to explain. Under section 19 of the immigration law, the Secretary of Labor had the absolute power to deport any alien under the following conditions. That section is as follows:

SEC. 19. That at any time within five years after entry any alien who at the time of entry was a member of one or more of the classes excluded by law; any alien who shall have entered or who shall be found in the United States in violation of this act, or in violation of any other law of the United States; any alien who at any time after entry shall be found advocating or teaching the unlawful destruction of property, or advocating or teaching anarchy, or the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or of all forms of law or the assassination of public officials; any alien who within five years after entry becomes a public charge from causes not affirmatively shown to have arisen subsequent to landing, except as hereinafter provided; any alien who is hereafter sentenced to imprisonment for a term of one year or more because of conviction in this country of a crime involving moral turpitude, committed within five years after the entry of the alien to the United States, or who is hereafter sentenced more than once to such a term of imprisonment because of conviction in this country of any crime involving moral turpitude, committed at any time after entry; any alien who shall be found an inmate of or connected with the management of a house of prostitution or practicing prostitution after such alien shall have entered the United States, or who shall receive, share in, or derive benefit from any part of the earnings of any prostitute; any alien who manages or is employed by, in, or in connection with any house of prostitution or music or dance hall or other place of amusement or resort habitually frequented by prostitutes, or where prostitutes gather, or who in any way assists any prostitute or protects or promises to protect from arrest any prostitute; any alien who shall import or attempt to import any person for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; any alien who, after being excluded and deported or arrested and deported as a prostitute, or as a procurer, or as having been connected with the business of prostitution or importation for prostitution or other immoral purposes in any of the ways hereinbefore specified, shall return to and enter the United States; any alien convicted and imprisoned for a violation of any of the provisions of section 4 hereof; any alien who was convicted, or who admits the commission, prior to entry, of a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, at any time within three years after entry; any alien who shall have entered the United States by water at any time or place other than as designated by immigration officials, or by land at any place other than one designated as a port of entry for aliens by the Commissioner General of Immigration, or at any time not designated by immigration officials, or who enters without inspection, shall, upon the warrant of the Secretary of Labor, be taken into custody and deported: Provided, That the marriage to an American citizen of a female of the sexually immoral classes the exclusion or deportation of which is prescribed by this act shall not invest such female with United States citizenship if the marriage of such alien female shall be solemnized after her arrest or after the commission of acts which make her liable to deportation under this act: Provided further, That the provision of this section respecting the deportation of aliens convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude shall not apply to one who has been pardoned, nor shall such deportation be made or directed if the court, or judge thereof, sentencing such alien for such crime shall, at the time of imposing judgment or passing sentence or within 30 days thereafter, due notice having first been given to representatives of the State, make a recommendation to the Secretary of Labor that such alien shall not be deported in pursuance of this act; nor shall any alien convicted as aforesaid be deported until after the termination of his imprisonment: Provided further, That the provisions of this section, with the exceptions hereinbefore noted, shall be applicable to the classes of aliens therein mentioned, irrespective of the time of their entry into the United States: Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall also apply to the cases of aliens who come to the mainland of the United States from the insular possessions thereof: Provided further, That any person who shall be arrested under the provisions of this section, on the ground that he has entered or been found in the United States in violation of any other law thereof which imposes on such person the burden of proving his right to enter or remain, and who shall fail to establish the existence of the right claimed, shall be deported to the place specified in such other law. In every case where any person is ordered deported from the United States under the provisions of this act, or of any law or treaty, the decision of the Secretary of Labor shall be final.

The cases which we tried to reach in this bill are cases hitting at our Government, where the courts have occasionally decided and held, are not those involving moral turpitude. In regard to the question of hearings before the Secretary of Labor, that question has been decided by the United States Supreme Court Reporter 189, page 86, wherein the court held as follods, at page 100:

But this court has never held, nor must we now be understood as holding, that administrative officers, when executing the provisions of a statute involving the liberty of persons, may disregard the fundamental principles that inhere in "due process of law" as understood at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. One of these principles is that no person shall be deprived of his liberty without opportunity, at some time, to be heard, before such officers, in respect of the matters upon which that liberty depends, not necessarily an opportunity upon a regular, set occasion and according to the forms of judicial procedure, but one that will secure the prompt, vigorous action contemplated by Congress and at the same time be appropriate to the nature of the case upon which such officers are required to act. Therefore, it is not competent for the Secretary of the Treasury or any executive officer, at any time within the year limited by the statute, arbitrarily to cause an alien, who has entered the country, and has become subject in all respects to its jurisdiction, and a part of its population, although alleged to be illegally here, to be taken into custody and deported without giving him all opportunity to be heard upon the questions involving his right to be and remain in the United States. No such arbitrary power can exist where the principles involved in due process of law are recognized.

There was some question raised this afternoon by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] to the effect that an order of deportation is a punishment for crime. The United States Supreme Court has passed on this question in the case of Fong Yue Ting v. United States, page 730, wherein the court says:

The order of deportation is not a punishment for crime. It is not a banishment, in the sense in which that word is often applied to the expulsion of a citizen from his country by way of punishment. It is but a method of enforcing the return to his own country of an alien who has not complied with the conditions upon the performance of which the Government of the Nation, acting within its constitutional authority and through the proper department, has determined that his continuing to reside here shall depend. He has not, therefore, been deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; and the provisions of the Constitution, securing the right of trial by jury, and prohibiting unreasonable searches and seizures, and cruel and unusual punishments, have no application. The question whether, and upon what conditions, these aliens shall be permitted to remain within the United States being one to be determined by the political departments of the Government, the judicial department can not properly express an opinion upon the wisdom, the policy, or the justice of the measures enacted by Congress in the exercise of the powers confided to it by the Constitution over this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, the Immigration Committee is unanimous in its report on this bill. The Immigration Committee, as a whole and individually, believes that there is no room in this country for any man who advocates the commission or the putting into effect the commission of any acts of crime and violence against the Government of the United States. [Applause.] And as far as the committee is concerned, I believe it is expressing the temper of the House and of the country that these 153 men who were convicted while the war was on of felonies involving the breaking down of bridges and the sinking of ships, the violation of the Sherman Act, the deliberate sinking of a ship at Charleston in order that warships might not leave, and a series of other crimes which struck at the very foundation of the Government while this country was at war, should be deported. No man who loves this country in the fullest sense of the term and believes in its institutions, and believes in upholding the principles of liberty, equality, and justice here, and maintaining them in the future, can possibly vote against this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, there has never been presented a bill to this House which should receive more hearty and loyal support than this measure, because it will get rid completely, swiftly, and quickly of those who are a detriment to America and who have violated our friendship in our hour of peril. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY] is recognized. Let the Chair state that the debate under this paragraph was exhausted some time ago.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of five minutes by the gentleman from Illinois and five minutes by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] and five minutes by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. WHITE], a member of the committee, the debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, if you will pardon me for a moment or two in the discussion of this bill, I will say that I fully realize a feeling that exists back in my district, and I would be derelict in my duty at this time if I did not voice the sentiments of my people and direct the attention of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization to the feeling that exists there.

There has been a discussion of property rights, and it is proper that property rights should be protected, but the only property right that the majority of my people back home have is the property that has been given them by the Almighty. He blessed them with valiant American sons, and when the war came they willingly and anxiously responded to the colors. No monetary consideration can recompense these people for their property losses. They gave their flesh and blood that this country and the world might be made safe. [Applause.] And back there in Chicago many of the aliens that infested our city clothed themselves with the mantle of alienship and said it was unnecessary for them to respond to the call. Many of them have grown rich here in these great United States, and yet when our country was in trouble and we desired their assistance they absolutely refused to help.

Let me tell you that the people back home are aroused, and I want to direct to the committee's attention this fact: Write a law upon the books of this country that will make it imperative for every alien who reaches these shores to declare his intention of becoming an American citizen. [Applause.] Have the Government take control of that alien when he reaches here. If he moves from State to State, have him report to the Federal officials, showing that he is attempting to absorb our laws, our customs, and our conditions. Enlarge the educational sphere that you have already started. Make it imperative that this alien study our laws, customs, and conditions. Give him five or eight years to so educate himself that he will not only be eligible for naturalization but for Americanization. [Applause.] Appropriate more money for your educational work and have distributed without cost at the offices of all clerks of courts who have to do with naturalization textbooks that will instruct and familiarize these aliens with our form of Government. Establish a commission that will deal with the alien immediately upon arrival, in order to obviate his segregation in a community where the English tongue is never spoken and America's customs are undreamed of. If after five or eight years he does not think it worth while to become an American citizen, deport him to the country from which he came. [Applause.]

That is the feeling, gentlemen, of the people out in my territory and, I believe, represents the feelings of the great American people. Therefore I could not overlook the opportunity of directing the attention of the committee to it. [Applause.] We are proud of the millions of foreigners who have come here and become good American citizens and helped build up this great country. We invite more of this caliber, but there is no room in any part of this the greatest country in all the world for the torch bearer, the bomb thrower, or the Bolshevist. We invite all who will become good American citizens and not only enjoy our peace and prosperity but are willing to assume our obligations and help carry the burdens.

Mr. UPSHAW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. I will.

Mr. UPSHAW. Packed in one sentence, does not the gentleman agree to this, that there is no place beneath the American flag for the heart that does not love it and hand that will not defend it?

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. You have most eloquently expressed my sentiments.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman and Members of Congress, I arise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

This bill proposes to give to the Secretary of Labor the power to deport all aliens who are now interned under section 4067 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and the proclamations issued by the President in pursuance of said section under dates of April 6, 1917, November 16, 1917, December 11, 1917, and April 19, 1918; also, all aliens who since August 1, 1914, have been and may hereafter be convicted of any violation or conspiracy to violate any of the war acts passed by Congress affecting alien enemies in the United States.

None of these enemy aliens can be deported under this proposed law by the Secretary of Labor except the Secretary of Labor finds upon examination and trial that the defendant is a citizen of Germany or of the other countries with which we were at war and has violated some of the war acts of Congress or has already been convicted of the violation of said war acts. When war was declared between this country and Germany there were a great many foreigners who were citizens of Germany living in this country who began to enter into criminal conspiracies and plots against the United States, such as poisoning the horses and mules intended for Army service, attempting to poison the water furnished to our soldiers, blowing up our bridges, tunnels, factories, munition works, and stirring up the I. W. W. and other such organizations to cripple and destroy our country.

Many of these persons had come to this country years ago and had made immense fortunes in our land of opportunity. Some of these rich enemy aliens when arrested had a great deal of money and property. Under the acts of Congress the money and property belonging to these enemy aliens was seized by the Government of the United States. The purpose of this proposed law is to send all of these conspirators and enemies of our country back to their own country and to deny them the right to reenter this country at any future date. While some of these enemy aliens were rich, others are poor. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] proposes that we can not send these rich criminals out of our country until their property rights have been settled. I am very much opposed to this amendment. The German Government seized hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of property belonging to American citizens who were then living in Germany. This money and property has not been returned to these American citizens. The question of the property rights of American and German citizens will be settled by these respective countries in the treaty of peace or in other diplomatic channels. It may require several years to do this. I am opposed to keeping these enemies of our country under our flag for a single day longer than is necessary to determine their guilt and send them out of the country. For the most part these rich enemy aliens are men of intelligence, and they could do and did do us much more harm than the ignorant and poor foreigner. The rich foreigners under the protection of the American flag acquired this wealth. They owed us more than the poor, ignorant foreigners. We permitted them to live here and granted them practically all of the rights of the American citizen. They reward our hospitality by joining with our enemies in an effort to destroy us. As they were not citizens, they were not required to take up arms in defense of the country in which they had grown rich. We only required that they behave themselves. They refused to fight and refused to obey our laws. While our boys were across the seas giving their lives in defense of this country and in defense of the property of these very rich enemy aliens, they were plotting to destroy our country and were stabbing our soldier boys in the back.

If the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania prevails this splendid measure reported by the committee to Congress will become a farce. We shall send the poor enemy alien out of the country and keep with us the rich and powerful foreign criminal. We were hurt very little by the opposition of the poor, ignorant foreigner. The opposition of the powerful, intelligent, rich, and influential foreigner was much more effective.

These property rights will likely be in controversy for years, and if the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania carries, we must keep these rich alien enemies in this country until they are settled. This will permit the rich criminal to escape. If I have any choice at all in selecting the class of alien enemies to be favored, I certainly shall not favor the rich and powerful. Let every foreigner who was untrue to this country and who was trying to destroy us when were were in a death struggle be driven out of this country and never permitted to return, and I am in favor of keeping that class of people out of this country in the future. We took these enemy aliens in and gave them opportunities to enjoy the liberties of our country and to acquire wealth, and after they became strong and powerful they undertook to destroy us. It has been well said on the floor of this House that there is no place under the American flag for the heart that does not love it nor the hand that will not defend it. This bill unamended should appeal to the red-blooded American and should have the earnest support of every Member of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. In just a moment. They did not behave themselves. When our boys were across the seas and fighting to defend our flag and our country these fellows were stabbing them in the back.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman's viewpoint is that the amendment should be rejected.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. And that there should be no distinction in the enforcement of our laws before the courts or elsewhere nor before the Secretary of Labor on the question of deportation between the man with property and the man without property.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Exactly so. And I want to emphasize as strongly as I can that if any enemy criminals of our country escape, the knowing, rich, and powerful should not escape. [Applause.] You let this amendment be adopted and the alien enemy who may have a few dollars or more of property in this country would be permitted to remain in this country for years and years until the question is fought out. It is a matter for our Government and the German Government to work out these property questions, and while these are being worked out I insist that that class of rich enemy aliens be sent to the country from which they came, so that they may not be shielded by the country and the flag which they tried so hard to destroy. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. WHITE] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am a newly elected Member of this Congress and I have felt as keenly as anyone in similar position the perturbation and suppression that is probably characteristic, to some extent at least, of all Members upon first entering service in this body. It is not at all necessary, even now, that I should be heard; but this is a bill that in some of its features, and especially with reference to the principle of which it is illustrative, is of tremendous significance to the American people and of crushing import, if they could but feel it, to those upon whom its penalties will rest.

It is a brief measure, containing but a few short sentences; yet I feel that it can not be voted upon in any perfunctory manner. I look upon it as an effort on the part of Congress to write into the statutes of this Nation the true conception of justice as held by the American people upon this subject, upon those affected directly by this act. If they could but measure and appreciate even in a slight degree the value of the great principles of justice and equality upon which our Government is founded, the weight of the sentence imposed upon them in this act would crush the spirit and appall the very soul.

We have been pleased as Americans to believe that our own Government is the best, our social contract the most perfect, the most benevolent in its authority; in short, that it furnishes the highest expression of social and political wisdom and justice that civilization has yet conceived or the genius of man has set down. [Applause.]

The moral influence of this Republic is an inspiration to the peoples of all lands to look, to hope, to strive for the final triumph of the justice of equality. It is as a city that is set upon a hill whose light can not be hid. The one great impulse that has moved men to leave their countries and come to our shores has been to escape from the hard conditions of their lives in their native countries—conditions that were hard in more senses than one; conditions of pitiless poverty, a doom of hopeless despair, of intolerable social caste, of political injustice; and here they found liberty and equality and opportunity—opportunity beyond their most ardent hope; opportunity free, with no discrimination against them in favor of our native sons. Of all who have come in the past, the greater number have been worthy, but some have been most recreant, without a single redeeming quality, the ingrates of society, the political renegades of the world. [Applause.]

I take it that we are all inspired by the human quality of benevolence; that we are not too strongly inclined to denounce, but are rather disposed to pity; that in the case of the dull-minded man who does not place upon the blessings of liberty and the privileges of equality their true estimate we extend a degree of extenuation.

It may be that in the past we dwelt too securely and looked upon our own favored place among the nations as a matter of course, and that we, never oblivious of the frailties of mankind, find it in us to be lenient with the weakness of him who discovers his latent strength in the hour of great crises.

Dr. Talmage once said in a great sermon, quoting the lines from Hay's poem on the profligate character, "Jim Bludsoe," who held the nozzle against the bank till the last galoot stepped ashore—

> He saw his duty clear and plain, and he did it there and then,
> And Christ ain't going to be too hard on the man that died for men.

There are other considerations involved, for I see a throng of men, an army, the greatest ever marshaled upon the plains of earth; they were and are the American Army. They step upon the soil of earth with high majestic tread; and well they may, for they are the princes of the house of America, and they are crowned with the love of the American Nation and the gratitude of the world. And all this is their due—aye, and more; we are their debtors, and will be while they and we shall live. And among our obligations is this one, that we pass this bill, that no abject alien who ever raised a hand or spoke a word to hinder their great cause, or would sow the seeds of an evil philosophy for the purpose of neutralizing what they have done, and who may be a more dangerous enemy than he that fights against us with sword and gun, because more insidious, shall ever enjoy on equal terms the rights and liberties of this country side by side with her brave protectors. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 19, noes 59.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That in addition to the aliens who are by law now excluded from admission into the United States all persons who shall be expelled under any of the provisions of this act shall also be excluded from readmission.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this bill is the result of our experience during the war with our immigration laws and our immigration policy. It has shown up in at least one respect one of the great loopholes that we have in our policy in dealing with immigration.

At the last session of the last Congress considerable agitation was on for the passage of legislation by Congress that would have excluded all immigrants from all countries throughout the world for a period of four years. I was in favor of that. It might be an extreme policy, but I believe our experience during the war was such that we at least ought to civilize and Americanize those immigrants that we allow to come within our borders. [Applause.]

I think that anybody who will take the trouble to go to Ellis Island or to the immigration station at Boston or at Baltimore or at Philadelphia, or any of our other immigration stations along the Atlantic coast, especially where the immigration comes from Europe, will see readily that it is almost a human impossibility for the immigration inspectors to carefully scrutinize and examine the horde of immigrants that come into this country in times of peace. In the year prior to the war, ending June 30, 1914, there were about 1,114,000 immigrants who entered the gates of the United States during a serious period of industrial depression. Several hundred thousand of them, perhaps, went back to Europe, leaving among us three-quarters of a million of immigrants during that year. It was impossible to scrutinize the characteristics and ascertain the feelings of those men and women who sought admission.

I voted for the Burnett immigration bill in this House twice. I voted for the illiteracy test. I voted twice to pass that bill over the President's veto. On the second occasion it was passed over his veto. I do not think that was the last word in standards, however. I thought it was a very proper test. According to the statistics put into the RECORD a few days ago, we have in this country alone of native-born illiterates 3,760,000. I feel that the countries of Europe and the rest of the world ought to be forced in some way to take care of their own illiterates, and not have America made a dumping ground for the illiterates of the entire world. I think in that respect the illiteracy test was a fair test.

I want to submit to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization this suggestion, that the proper way to handle this immigration question is to handle it abroad and give no man or woman a passport into the United States of America until he or she can successfully pass an examination by our properly accredited consular officers or some other agency in their own country and show to our satisfaction that they are physically, morally, and mentally competent to become American citizens. [Applause.]

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. NOLAN. I regret I can not; I have only five minutes.

Mr. RAKER. I will endeavor to get you some more time, if necessary.

Mr. NOLAN. I will yield.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that the laws now on the statute books practically provide for that? Practically all that the gentleman desires is already on the books, is it not?

Mr. NOLAN. In practice, no; because you have no adequate force.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not the law that men that come here who can not enter under the law must be returned by the steamship company that brings them?

Mr. NOLAN. Oh, yes; but you do not put it up to them. I would put the burden of proof upon the man or woman in their own country, and make them show that from the cradle they had not been convicted of crime in their own country. I would not allow any anarchists or nihilists or Black Hand or Maffia to come to this country at all. [Applause.] I would make them prove to our satisfaction and to the satisfaction of our officers that they were not only fit to enter this country, but, after entering this country, that they were fit for American citizenship. They should never be allowed to leave the country of their birth or residence until they could prove to our consular officers that they were of the proper character to become American citizens. [Applause.]

We could properly take some of the money that we are now using in our Immigration Service and build up, across the water, not necessarily a great organization, but an organization sufficient to cope with the situation, so that they could not go on board ship to come to this country at all until they were shown and proved to be all right. We should put the burden of proof on them. Why burden our officers at Ellis Island and these other immigration stations with the necessity of the examinations that are unnecessary? It can not be done in a practical way; it is impossible to do it without keeping these people penned up for months in our immigration stations, and the man or woman who can pass the literacy test can in most cases hide their records abroad, and we have no machinery on this side under the present law to detect those that preach sabotage, direct action, and other dangerous doctrines. If this country is good enough to live in and to make a living in, if it is a good enough place to stay in and accumulate wealth in, it ought to be good enough to warrant us in requiring that they show us before they leave their own shores that they are fit to become American citizens. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill, with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6750) to deport certain undesirable aliens and to deny readmission to those deported, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to the final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendments. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the vote will be taken on the amendments in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. On that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Twenty-seven Members.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for the other side.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is counting.

Mr. HEFLIN. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I move a call of the House, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. No such motion is necessary. This is an automatic call.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEFLIN. As the roll is called those favoring the passage of the bill will vote "aye" and those opposed "no"?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will so state. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, those in favor of the passage of the bill as their names are called will vote "aye," those opposed "no," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 284, nays 0, answered "present" 1, not voting 145, as follows:

YEAS—284.

Mr. MCARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. WHALEY, and therefore have voted "present." If I were not paired, I would vote "yea."

Mr. LANGLEY. I have a general pair with my colleague, Mr. CANTRILL, but he is for this bill, and I therefore vote "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HOSPITAL TREATMENT FOR DISEASED ALIEN SEAMEN.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 7930) to provide for the treatment in hospital for diseased alien seamen.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar, and the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7930, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That alien seamen found on arrival in ports of the United States to be afflicted with any of the disabilities or diseases mentioned in section 35 of the act of February 5, 1917, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States," shall be placed in a hospital designated by the immigration official in charge at the port of arrival and treated, all expenses connected therewith being borne by the owner, agent, consignee, or master of the vessel, and no such vessel shall be granted clearance until such expenses are paid or their payment appropriately guaranteed and the collector of customs so notified by the immigration official in charge: Provided, however, That in cases in which it shall appear to the satisfaction of the immigration official in charge that it will not be possible within a reasonable time to effect a cure, the return of the alien seamen shall be enforced on or at the expense of the vessel on which they came, upon such conditions as the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, shall prescribe, to insure that the aliens shall be properly cared for and protected, and that the spread of contagion shall be guarded against.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that general debate on this bill be limited to 10 minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Five to be controlled by the gentleman from New York and five by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Five minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from New York and five by the gentleman from California. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill which simply provides for the payment by the steamship companies for any expenses incurred in the treatment of diseased alien seamen. At the present time the Government is compelled to pay for the treatment of sick alien seamen when they arrive at our ports.

By the passage of this bill the Government would save approximately $200,000.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. RAKER. So that there may be no misunderstanding, this was the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. SIEGEL. It is a unanimous report by the committee.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SIEGEL. I will.

Mr. JUUL. I would like to ask the gentleman how the sailors of the United States merchant vessels are treated in foreign ports. Is there similar legislation in those countries?

Mr. SIEGEL. As far as American seamen are concerned, they are always looked after by American steamship companies at the shipowner's expense. This bill only applies to alien seamen arriving here. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the bill is the unanimous report from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. I would not take any time of the committee were it not for the fact of some remarks that were made some time ago. There has been no one to my mind more energetic in putting on restrictions and regulations of immigration than the majority of the Committee on Immigration, and this bill only demonstrates what was said a few moments ago in regard to the rules and regulations permitting aliens to come to this country.

We have on the statute book very stringent regulations in regard to the steamship companies bringing over large quanities of men for the purpose of employment for labor. They can not by advertisement, they can not by deception or fraud, bring them over, and every man, woman, and child that is brought to this country by the steamship companies who is not entitled to be admitted, the steamship company is fined for trying to have the people land, and in addition they must pay the expenses of the people while they are here and return them home at the companies' own expense. That is the law on the statute books to-day. This bill goes a step further and says that alien seamen who do not desire to land, who do not desire to become citizens of this country, who must remain in port, if the steamships permit them to come on their vessels, when they are disabled by disease, contagious or otherwise, they must provide for their expense while in the hospital in this country.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Will the gentleman point out how this changes or affects section 35 of the act of 1917, if at all?

Mr. RAKER. This does not affect the immigration.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. It applies only to alien seamen.

Mr. RAKER. To alien seamen who are in the employ of the steamship companies.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. So does section 35.

Mr. RAKER. When they do not desire to land, to enter the United States to become citizens, when they are on the vessels in ports of the United States and are affected by disease, contagious and otherwise, liable to be spread in the ports of every country, they are taken from the vessels to the hospital, and the steamship companies must pay for their treatment.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Then the only difference is that this act provides that the expense for the care of the men shall be borne by the steamship companies?

Mr. RAKER. That is it.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. That is the difference betweeen this act and section 35 of the act of 1917?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. BAER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. BAER. Does this interfere in any way with the present seamen's act?

Mr. RAKER. No; it throws a guard around the country and protects the unfortunate seamen, and in addition to that protects the public and prevents the spread of contagious diseases. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SIEGEL: Page 1, line 10, after the word "therewith," insert "including burial in the event of death."

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment agreed upon by the committee. It provides that the burial expenses shall be borne by the steamship company instead of by the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask unanimous consent to speak out of order not exceeding 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, what is the gentleman going to talk about?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, yesterday my colleague, Mr. BLAND of Virginia, submitted a resolution to this House, which was unanimously adopted, providing that when the House adjourns to-day it do so in recognition of a very significant historic event, of which to-day is the three-hundredth anniversary, and upon this subject I ask the indulgence of the House.

Mr. ANDERSON. I withdraw any objection that I might have.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to take up the time of the committee with remarks of my own. Three hundred years ago to-day there assembled on the island of Jamestown, in the county of James City, in my district, the first elected representative legislative body of this hemisphere, known as the Virginia House of Burgesses. It was bicameral, one portion analogous to the Senate, the governor and council being appointive, and the other, the House of Burgesses, being chosen by the people of the several boroughs or political subdivisions.

The significance of that event could well be dwelt upon. Its momentous consequences might well be followed and assembled by one capable of identifying and assessing political factors and influences which have developed free institutions, not only in America but, by reflex action, throughout the world. This was a modest house of representatives of the people. It was composed of 22 members, of whom two seats were contested, and its speaker was John Pory, who had served several years in the English House of Commons. But my purpose in rising is to ask unanimous consent that an editorial from the Times-Dispatch, of Richmond, Va., may be read as an appropriate explanation of the historic event of which to-day is the three-hundredth anniversary. But the continuity of this assemblage lasted to the day of the revolution against Great Britain, at which time there sat in this house of burgesses some of the great figures who thought and wrought for the independence and establishment of the American Republic.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the reading of the editorial?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

[From the Richmond Times-Dispatch, Sunday, July 27, 1919.]

WHEN POPULAR GOVERNMENT WAS BORN.

Those steps which mark the progress of universal humanity in its ever-upward course, dividing the history of the world's civilization into definite eras, are not always taken to the sounds of marching armies or the accompaniment of crashing drums and clashing cymbals. Most of them have come unheralded, taking their respective places in the natural sequence of civil and political evolution, and those now historic figures to whom belonged the master minds and guiding hands, yet were ungifted with the talent of prophecy, looked not far beyond the actual conditions they faced and which it was their continual struggle to ameliorate.

Of such was that little gathering on July 30, 1619, just 300 years ago, held on Jamestown Island, first adventurous settlement in Virginia, that romantic, unknown land that even then one of the British poets rhapsodized as "earth's only paradise." To the few hardy colonists who sat in that historic meeting, men from the scattering plantations on the James, the York, and the Pamunkey, there could come no realization of the burdens with which it was fraught, that they were the pioneers in a work that would continue to the end of time and one day transform the world. To them their problems were extremely practical and acutely of the present. They knew, of course, that they were forming the first representative government on the Western Continent; they knew that they had achieved an almost incredible degree of civil and political liberty, but the future, with its republican form of government, of which the Jamestown gathering, the first meeting of the Virginia House of Burgesses, was the precursor, was closed to them.

To us, looking back over the centuries and viewing them in their historical perspective, that organization of the house of burgesses is seen to be an inevitable link in the ever lengthening and strengthening chain of human liberties. Just 400 years before, at Runnymede, King John had granted to his subjects, or rather it had been forced from him, the Magna Charta. That in large measure was the foundation stone of modern Anglo-Saxon civil and political independence, and it was the direct forerunner of modern democracy and the republican form of government, which had their birth and were cradled in Virginia. Processes of political evolution are slow, but they never lead backward. Two years after the first house of burgesses met the Virginia colonists had their own constitution and a representative assembly chosen by the people and clothed with full power in connection with the general assembly. And still, just 50 years later, Virginia, with a population grown to 40,000, heard this from the lips of its governor, William Berkeley: "I thank God there are no free schools nor printing, and I hope we shall not have these hundred years, for learning has brought disobedience and heresy and sects into the world, and printing has divulged them and libels against the best government. God keep us from both."

The periods between democracy's markers grow shorter, and in 1776, just 147 years after Virginia had seen its republican form of government born, it was strong enough to stand alone and declare its independence and powerful enough to back up its declaration by victorious force of arms. Then, indeed, was republican government—of, for, and by the people—really launched. What its success or failure meant to the world was foreseen by Washington, who said in his first inaugural address: "The preservation of the sacred fire of liberty and the destiny of the republican model of government are justly considered as deeply, perhaps as finally, staked on the experiment intrusted to the hands of the American people."

That trust was well placed. Surviving the shock of fratricidal strife, another 150 years bring it to the supreme clash with autocracy, that world war for which the seeds had been sowing since that time when history is merged with the vagueness of traditions. With a continent of republics in the west and republican ideals dominant in France, Great Britain, and other smaller countries, all tracing their ancestry directly back to Jamestown, popular liberty still was an unconcluded experiment. Then autocracy challenged, and through dark years the result was in doubt; but the democracy born in Virginia, on which the experiment was "finally staked," rushed into the breach, and on that day democracy ceased to be an experiment and became a success proven by every test of peace and war. In the succession of steps comes the Paris peace conference, and there democracy, spreading over the world in ever-widening circles since its inception in the struggling little colony on the banks of the James River, is the victorious dictator. It has at last entered on its full-grown, pulsating manhood, its one creed, "Liberty, equality, fraternity, with constitutional government; law, order, discipline, and subordination to legitimate authority, government, and not anarchy."

Richmond will celebrate in fitting manner the three-hundredth anniversary of the birth of republican government in the Western World. It may not be a popular celebration, in the common acceptance of that much-abused term, but to the thoughtful it will be a day of real thanksgiving, for in very fact it is the birthday of free America, and on that day civilization in every country should turn its eyes to Virginia with thankfulness in its heart and a prayer on its lips that democracy may ever be wise and strong, patient and tolerant.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill, with the amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 7930, and had instructed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SIEGEL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CHARLESTON IMMIGRATION STATION AND DOCK.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Immigration I call up House joint resolution 163, authorizing the Secretary of Labor to lease the Charleston immigration station and dock connected therewith.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado calls up the House joint resolution 163. This resolution is on the Union Calendar. The House will, therefore, resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House joint resolution 163, with Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of Labor is authorized, in his discretion, to lease for other than governmental purposes the property known as the Charleston immigration station, with the improvements thereon; and said Secretary shall fix the amount of rental per annum to be paid therefor, which rental shall be a fair and just sum for property of like character, situation, and value, and prescribe such conditions regarding the uses to be made of said property as he shall deem proper: Provided, That all expenses of maintenance and repairs on the building and dock at said station shall be borne by the lessor or lessors: Provided further, That any lease executed under this resolution may be terminated and the property reoccupied under such conditions as the Secretary of Labor may prescribe.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that general debate upon the resolution be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that general debate be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the resolution for amendment.

The Clerk again read the resolution.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VAILE: Page 2, line 1, after the word "the," strike out the word "lessor or lessors," and insert in lieu thereof the words "lessee or lessees."

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, this is really the correction of a clerical error in the drafting of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Colorado a question. What is the meaning of the proviso which reads as follows:

Provided further, That any lease executed under this resolution may be terminated and the property reoccupied under such conditions as the Secretary of Labor may prescribe.

Reoccupied by whom?

Mr. VAILE. Reoccupied by the appropriate department—the Immigration Bureau, if they have occasion to use that building.

I will state briefly that this building has been unoccupied for a number of years——

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me, I know it has and I knew it would be when it was built.

Mr. VAILE. And it is being protected by day and night watchmen to whom we are paying $1,200 a year. Now, the Secretary of Labor thinks he will have an opportunity to rent it and get some income out of it and get rid of the continuous expense of guarding it. I do not think we ought to tie it up so that it can not be used by the Government if it ever wanted to use it, and consequently we have put this proviso at the end——

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman accept this amendment? In line 3, page 2, after the word "terminated," put in the word "re-leased."

Mr. VAILE. The gentleman means by that a new lease executed for that property?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. VAILE. It seems to me that that is a matter that should be presented to the House at the time another lease is desired. I would accept this amendment, "or re-leased under such conditions" or "or re-leased," after the word "reoccupied," in line 4. Is that the gentleman's idea?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Just a moment before getting to that. What is the purpose of that?

Mr. VAILE. I did not offer the amendment myself, I will state to the gentleman from California.

Mr. RAKER. What is the purpose of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CANNON. The purpose is if the lease is canceled to lease it again.

Mr. RAKER. That is in the bill now.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is not necessary.

Mr. RAKER. That does not say in reference to making several leases. A man may use it a year and a man may use it the next year until Congress changes this provision, and the Secretary may lease it without a re-lease as long as the Government wants it. It is being occupied now by the Government, and it will be unused by the 1st of October. Now, we understand a concern wants to lease it for manufacturing purposes. I do not see the necessity of the amendment of the gentleman.

Mr. VAILE. Does the gentleman offer that amendment?

Mr. CANNON. I will see in a minute. How about selling it? You say it is to be used for a manufacturing establishment?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I have not occupied five minutes yet, have I?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has occupied five minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question on that point?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. In the first part of the bill it is said that the Secretary of Labor is authorized, in his discretion, to lease for other than governmental purposes, and so forth. It does not say one, two, or three leases, nor a year or 4 years or 10 years, but it says that there must be an annual rental and that the conditions of the lease must be such that, whenever they are not complied with or are not satisfactory to the Secretary of Labor, he can cancel the lease and re-lease to somebody else. That is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Then I will move this amendment: Line 4, page 2, after the word "reoccupied," add the words "or released." How about authority to sell it?

Mr. RAKER. Oh, well, that is not in this bill. If we had power to sell, that would be all right.

Mr. CANNON. I do not see why it should not be in this bill. It is germane, is it not?

Mr. RAKER. But the gentleman did not suggest the sale of the property.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I do now. In other words, this property is of no use for the purpose for which it was erected.

Mr. VAILE. If the gentleman from Illinois will yield for a moment, I would suggest this: If the business concern that desires to locate in there is successful, it seems to me then will be time enough to consider the question of the sale of this property. The gentleman just suggested a moment ago that he did not think this building would ever be used. Now, let us try and not bite off more than we can chew. If we can lease it to an established business, let it go at that, and afterwards sell if we can, and that use would be evidence upon which it could be sold and add to the selling value.

Mr. CANNON. Let us put it in there:

Provided further, That any lease executed under this resolution may be terminated and the property re-leased or sold under such conditions—

And so forth.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I doubt the advisability of that, without further knowledge, for this reason: We all admit the immigration station was built down there under some pressure somewhere, some 15 years ago, and if they want to use that immigration station it would cost $10,000 to pave the streets leading to it, as it is some distance out. It has a little bit of a passenger dock—a water front. We would not want to go in there and assess and sell without knowing more about the water rights. It is used only for passengers. They ought to have the right to lease this thing, and in the meantime we can determine the selling value.

Mr. CANNON. Well, a lease is a partial sale.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In a way.

Mr. CANNON. It would be germane to strike out the word "reoccupied" and insert "re-leased or sold."

Mr. VAILE. Well, now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman has not offered his amendment yet. Does the gentleman offer the amendment?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. I want to reserve the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CANNON. He reserves the point of order. Make the point of order now. I think the amendment is in order.

Mr. RAKER. It has not been reported. Wait until the Clerk reports it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CANNON: Page 2, line 4, after the word "reoccupied," insert a comma and the words "re-leased or sold."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, on the words "or sold" I make the point of order, on the ground that they are not germane to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California makes the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Of course it is germane. The Government owns this property. This bill, if it passes as reported, disposes of it for 10 years, 1 year, 1 month, or a thousand years. If this is not germane I do not understand anything about germaneness.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. HULINGS. I make a point of order, and in doing so I would like to inquire if in this bill authority is not given to the Secretary to lease, and under that could not he lease for 99 years?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. HULINGS. Which in all respects would be equivalent to a sale?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman wants to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman as soon as the amendment before the committee is disposed of. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 30 seconds out of order, in order to introduce a resolution and have it made a part of the RECORD. It is from 15 societies petitioning the Congress against the bar of foreign-language newspapers from the mail.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following is the resolution referred to:

To Members of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America.

The undersigned, Local No. 73, Polish National Council—the local consisting of 15 societies of the St. Wenceslaus Parish, of Chicago, Ill.—have adopted the following resolutions:

"Whereas there has been introduced in the Senate of the United States on June 18, 1919, a bill known as S. 2099, a bill to prohibit admission to the mails of the United States of newspapers, periodicals, magazines, or publications printed in a foreign language; and

"Whereas the said bill is totally unjust and unfair in its inception and tendency, completely at variance with the spirit and letter of the Constitution of the United States, and hostile to the principles and ideals embodied in the institutions of this land of freedom and refuge of the oppressed; and

"Whereas the foreign-language publications, both daily, weekly, and monthly, have been a potent factor during the recent war in fostering loyalty to the Government of this country, in successfully launching the liberty and victory loan issues, in enforcing the selective-service law, in aiding the Red Cross campaigns, and in supporting all other war measures and activities; and

"Whereas, the said foreign-language publications are the only channel through which the Government can reach large masses of the population in conducting effectively its campaign for sound Americanization and for the dissemination of sound ideas on social and economic questions; and

"Whereas during the difficult period of post-war reconstruction it will undoubtedly be necessary for the Government on frequent occasions to appeal also to those portions of the population which depend for their news exclusively on the foreign-language press; and

"Whereas the said drastic measure would tend to increase the latent economic unrest and place an undeserved argument in the hands of propagators of discontent; and

"Whereas the said measure is akin to the methods of the tyrannical, despotic, and oppressive governments from which many citizens of this country or their ancestors have fled; and

"Whereas the said measure is thoroughly at variance with the aims for which millions have died in the recent World War, and is also out of keeping with the decisions and acts of the peace conference of representatives of all nations, which emphasized the rights of nationalities in the league of nations and in the treaty of peace and declared the recognition of such rights as necessary for the maintenance of the peace of the world: Now, therefore,

"We, the undersigned, resolve to respectfully petition the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America to oppose bill S. 2099, which by curtailing its circulation aims at the existence of the foreign-language press in this country, and to use all honorable means to defeat this unjust, dangerous, oppressive, and tyrannical measure which would violate all ideals of justice and freedom, aid the forces of discontent and disloyalty, and deprive the Government of this country of an instrument for fostering patriotism and good citizenship which has proved useful in the past and will most assuredly prove even more useful in the future."

Respectfully, yours,

POLISH NATIONAL COUNCIL LOCAL NO. 73.
ALBERT J. DANISCH, President.
[SEAL.] ANASTASIA NOWAK, Secretary.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, there are two matters in connection with this bill about which I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. In the first place, there is no authorization in the bill for the Secretary of Labor to provide for carrying insurance in the event it would be found necessary under the lease. Does not the gentleman think that ought to be included? Upon a cursory reading, I will say to the gentleman, one might think that the authority was included, but upon a careful reading of the resolution that matter is not safeguarded at all.

Mr. VAILE. I suggest to the gentleman that the Government does not usually insure, anyway, and obviously the Secretary will have to make some provisions in regard to the terms under which this lease shall be given. It is inconceivable that he would not require the lessee or tenant to carry a reasonable amount of insurance.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But you do not say anything about that in here.

Mr. VAILE. We did not think it necessary to provide the details of the lease.

Mr. BANKHEAD. You say:

He shall fix the amount of rental per annum to be paid therefor, which rental shall be a fair and just sum for property of like character, situation, and value, and prescribe such conditions regarding the uses to be made of said property as he shall deem proper.

Mr. VAILE. If the gentleman will pardon me, I do not think we can impute to the Secretary of Labor carelessness in the ordinary details of business matters.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What becomes of the money to be derived from the rental of this property? Is there a provision that it shall be covered into the Treasury?

Mr. VAILE. I take it that that would be done automatically.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If there is a provision——

Mr. VAILE. It would have to be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do know of some bills that carry a provision that the sums to be derived shall be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section. I do that for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of the bill a question or two. Did the committee have before it at the time it considered this bill any concrete proposition to lease this building?

Mr. VAILE. It had no concrete proposition to lease the building. The Commissioner of Immigration stated to the committee that he had received a proposition from a concern manufacturing overalls or clothing which he desired to accept. The circumstances are that during the war this building was used, for the first time in its history, by the Navy Department for the manufacture of clothing. That work by the Navy Department expires, as I understand it, on September 1. Now, there are some fourteen or fifteen hundred people employed there. The Commissioner of Immigration was advised that this building could be rented immediately, so as to reemploy these people. The committee insisted that the rental should be a fair and just sum for property of that character, because we understood it was impossible to secure any general applications for the rental of such a piece of property as this. It is a mile and a half from the city of Charleston. It is surrounded by unpaved streets, in some instances, and some that can not be used, and it would cost several thousand dollars to improve them.

Mr. ANDERSON. It is a very unusual thing for a committee to report a bill and have Congress pass a bill giving to a Secretary or a bureau chief general powers to lease a building to anybody under the sun at any sort of a rental for any length of time. It is a very unusual thing, one which I would like to have the committee justify.

Mr. VAILE. They do not propose to do all that, I take it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The point is here: This building was erected 15 years ago—nobody knows just why. Under authority it was erected for an immigration station, but immigration did not come there. The Navy Department, as a war emergency, put in a sewing plant there employing 1,500 women, and put machinery in. The Navy Department, under the law, has access to the building, and they will have the right to sell or lease the machinery, and a firm from Georgia makes an offer to lease that.

Mr. ANDERSON. Why did you not authorize the Secretary of Labor to lease that to a man for a price he has offered for the period he is willing to take it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. He might find that a competitive offer would come. We think it is an opportunity for the Government to put that building to use.

Mr. BELL. The Secretary of Labor would have leased this building long since had he had authority from Congress to do so. He is obliged to have authority from Congress before he can lease the building.

Mr. ANDERSON. What reason is there for departing from the custom of giving specific authority to do a specific thing in a specific way, instead of giving authority to lease this building for an indefinite period at an indefinite rate to an indefinite person?

Mr. VAILE. It is not a proposition where there can be competition. I assume the gentleman understands what I mean. There is not a general market for this kind of property, and consequently it is not a case where you can throw it open to bids, for instance. On the other hand, we do not want to tie the Secretary down to a particular concern. The committee thought that he ought at least to be allowed to rent to any customer, if he can do so on such terms as would be reasonable for property of like character, situation, and value.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, in opposition to the motion to strike out——

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my motion.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Under the second proviso, "That any lease executed under this resolution may be terminated and the property reoccupied under such conditions as the Secretary of Labor may prescribe," is not that a sufficient protection against the event that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] spoke of—of making an unusually long lease?

Mr. RAKER. In a matter of this kind you could not legislate intelligently and fix the price of what the rental should be. In the first place, you could not fix the price, because you could not know who the lessee would be. In the second place, you could not fix the price intelligently unless you went into all the facts. Now, you trust this Cabinet officer, with his assistants, to make an investigation about it and to determine what should be the terms of the lease, what should be the price per annum, and all the other conditions surrounding the use of this property, the upkeep of it, and the taking out of insurance, and all those things that have to be provided for in the lease. We simply give a general authorization to lease it and to fix the annual rent, which shall be a fair rental and a fair and just sum for a property of like character, situation, and value. He must treat the Government fairly, and the other man must treat the Government fairly.

Mr. TILSON. In case he uses it.

Mr. RAKER. Yes. That must be put in the lease.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report back to the House House joint resolution 163, with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration House joint resolution 163, authorizing the Secretary of Labor to lease the Charleston immigration station and dock connected therewith, had instructed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the resolution as amended do pass.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the House joint resolution.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. VAILE, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the House joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. On what question?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. On the bill that we recently passed here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the alien-deportation bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Has the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization any further business? If not, the Clerk will call the roll of committees.

PAY OF PRINTERS, PRESSMEN, AND BOOKBINDERS.

Mr. KIESS (when the Committee on Printing was called). Mr. Speaker, I desire to call from the Union Calendar the bill H. R. 5418.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, chairman of the Committee on Printing, calls up the bill H. R. 5418, on the Union Calendar. The House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] will please take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 5418, with Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 5418, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5418) increasing the pay of printers and pressmen employed in the Government Printing Office, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the passage of this act the pay of all printers, printer linotype operators, printer monotype keyboard operators, makers-up, copy editors, proof readers, bookbinders, bookbinder machine operators, and pressmen employed in the Government Printing Office shall be at the rate of 75 cents per hour for the time actually employed.

With committee amendments, as follows:

Line 5, page 1, after the word "operators," insert the words "makers-up, copy editors."

Line 5, after the word "readers," insert the words "bookbinders, bookbinder machine operators."

Line 8, strike out the figures "90" and insert the figures "75."

Line 9, after the word "employed" strike out the remainder of the paragraph and insert a period.

So that the bill as amended shall read:

"That on and after the passage of this act the pay of all printers, printer linotype operators, printer monotype keyboard operators, makers-up, copy editors, proof readers, bookbinders, bookbinder machine operators, and pressmen employed in the Government Printing Office shall be at the rate of 75 cents per hour for the time actually employed."

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Chairman, if it is possible to reach an agreement as to time, I would like to ask that general debate be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that general debate be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. I think that there ought to be some general debate. This is a pretty important bill.

Mr. KIESS. How much time would the gentleman be satisfied with?

Mr. CANNON. Let us go in.

Mr. KIESS. It is rather late. I am perfectly willing that there should be some general debate.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know, and I doubt if there is a man in the House outside of the committee who knows, what the wages are now.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, yes. I think we can explain it in 10 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. You can not do it until you have general debate. I have no desire to filibuster or anything of that kind, but I want consideration of this bill. It is an important one.

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Chairman, speaking for the Committee on Printing, I will briefly explain our position in reporting this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, what was done about debate?

The CHAIRMAN. There was no agreement as to time. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIESS] is proceeding in his own time. He has one hour.

Mr. RAKER. If Members desire it, will they have two hours for general debate?

Mr. KIESS. I want only a very short time, and I am perfectly willing to apportion the time I have at my disposal. I feel sure that the hour will more than cover all the time that will be needed.

Mr. RAKER. All I wished to know was if anyone who wanted time to discuss this bill and nothing else could have it?

Mr. KIESS. Absolutely.

The CHAIRMAN. Any gentleman getting the floor will have time for discussion.

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Chairman, since the convening of this session of Congress a number of bills have been introduced fixing the rate of pay of the employees in the Government Printing Office. The Committee on Printing held a public hearing on June 20, giving those persons interested an opportunity to present their views to the committee. After hearing the statements made by the printers and also the statement and recommendations of the Public Printer, the committee decided to report H. R. 5418 with amendments. The bills introduced provided for 90 cents and $1 per hour. The amount fixed in the bill as reported is 75 cents per hour, and the total number of employees affected is 1,592. The bill as amended increases the pay of 732 employees 15 cents per hour above the rate now paid them, or $375.60 each per annum. It increases the pay of 831 other employees 10 cents per hour, or $250.40 each per annum. It also increases the pay of 29 employees 5 cents per hour, or $125.20 each per annum.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KIESS. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How do these wages that are provided in this bill for Government Printing Office employees compare with those paid in newspaper offices outside?

Mr. KIESS. The pay provided for printers in this bill is less than that received by printers in cities like Washington, Philadelphia, and New York.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is a fact, then, that the Government Printing Office is now paying this particular class of workmen less than they can get outside in private newspaper offices?

Mr. KIESS. Yes; they are paying them less now, and after this increase their pay will still be less than that of printers outside.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This will not do more than bring it up, if it brings it up, to the pay of outside printers in the commercial world?

Mr. KIESS. That is correct.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it was the thought of the committee that the printers in the Government Printing Office should receive just compensation. We also felt that it was not fair to take the highest rate paid in other cities, because of the fact that under war conditions at the present time printers are receiving much larger pay than they did; but we took into consideration that this bill fixing the rate of pay is permanent legislation, and also took into consideration the $240 per year bonus, which amounts to practically 10 cents per hour. So that in considering the rate of pay you must realize that while we made the rate 75 cents per hour, there is a bonus of approximately 10 cents per hour to be added, which makes 85 cents per hour for day work. Then under the law the Government Printing Office employees who work at night receive 20 per cent additional, which makes the rate of pay for those who work at night $1 per hour. The total estimated increase under the bill amounts to $486,652.40.

The Public Printer recommended a larger increase than is provided in this bill. If the increase had been allowed as recommended by the Public Printer, it would have amounted to $593,582 a year. In other words, the recommendation of the committee carries $106,929.60 per year less than the recommendation of the Public Printer. The reason we are anxious to have this bill acted upon before the recess of Congress is that the Public Printer has advised the committee that he is having serious difficulty in getting the work done owing to the fact that a number of men have resigned on account of receiving better pay outside. He has not been able to get the additional men needed, and unless something is done to improve the conditions he believes that more men will leave.

In fixing the pay of the printers we must also take into consideration the fact that they are entitled to 30 days' annual leave, which, of course, printers working in private establishments do not get. Some employers give their men two weeks' leave with pay, but the Government gives its employees 30 days. All of these things were taken into consideration in arriving at the rate recommended, and the committee feels that the bill as reported is a fair bill, fair to the printers and fair to the Government. We believe that the printers working at the Government Printing Office should receive fair compensation; not necessarily the highest rate paid for that kind of work at any place, but certainly they should receive the average pay for corresponding work.

Mr. Chairman, I will be very glad to yield any time or to answer any questions that I am able to answer.

Mr. CANNON. Do they get sick leave as well as 30 days' annual leave?

Mr. KIESS. Not any more. That has been done away with.

Mr. CANNON. Under this bill, if enacted, there would be no sick leave?

Mr. KIESS. No sick leave.

Mr. CANNON. But they do get 30 days' leave with pay?

Mr. KIESS. Thirty days' leave with pay, and half holidays on Saturday during the summer.

Mr. CANNON. Half holidays weekly during the summer. Then they get the bonus?

Mr. KIESS. Yes; they get the bonus. That adds 10 cents an hour, practically.

Mr. CANNON. I see an amendment striking out the proviso. Suppose they work more than eight hours?

Mr. KIESS. The reason the committee struck out this provision was that we felt that there should not be extra time at the Government Printing Office, running as it does on a day and night shift, and also that it might encourage the working of employees overtime. Furthermore, it was our judgment that the printers themselves were not so much concerned about the overtime, but that they preferred to be paid a reasonable compensation for eight hours and then not have to work overtime.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield me two minutes?

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois two minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIESS] said that this was only bringing up the compensation to that received commercially in the principal cities.

Now, this is true: That 50 cents would have bought of the necessities of life when the war broke out what a dollar will be required to buy now, if not more. We are making advances all along the line. Later on I suppose there is to come a retiring bill, a civil pension bill, and so on, but that will be met when the time comes for consideration, and a majority of the Congress will either bless it or turn it down.

Now, we are going to have a pretty difficult time when the cost of living goes down to half of what it is now in a reduction of the wage. I call attention to that fact not for the purpose of antagonizing the bill; I thought the bill provided for 90 cents an hour, but I see that there is an amendment making it 75 cents an hour.

So far as I am concerned, I want to call attention to the increase that comes from the bonus and the 30 days' leave and the half-holiday leave, rather as a foundation not only for printers but for everybody to get back to the normal, or approximately to the normal, when the cost of living and maintenance goes down to one-half of what it is at present.

Mr. BAER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. BAER. When does the gentleman predict that this cost of living is going down? I would like to get the gentleman's views about it.

Mr. CANNON. What is the use of predicting; when inflation ceases, when the cost of wheat and of corn and of clothes and everything that enters into it comes into competition with the world, then the great majority of the people, the officials included, the Government Printing Office employees, and all others will be more heavily burdened than they are now, when wheat is $2 a bushel.

Mr. BAER. The farmer is in the same condition as the laboring man.

Mr. CANNON. I understand that he is getting $2 for his wheat.

Mr. BAER. The gentleman speaks of inflation. What is the real cause of inflation? Is it not the extension of credit to Europe, continually extending it, sending money over there and raising the cost of living in this country?

Mr. CANNON. My Lord, yes; and raising the taxes. I probably will be wearing a halo before you unscramble it all. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Chairman, the committee had that matter in mind when they fixed the rate at 75 cents an hour, realizing that for the present taking care of the emergency bonus of $240, which we all regard as more or less of a temporary arrangement, would give the additional 10 cents. When the bonus is taken away they would still have 75 cents an hour. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN].

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, I think the committee recommended what might be said to be a very reasonable and very conservative increase in this bill; that is, a very small increase considering what is sufficient to take care of the needs of these men. I base my conclusion on the fact that where Government wage boards and wage-adjustment boards have had to do with the raising of the pay of Government employees, whether the men were in the mechanical establishment of the Government or in the shipyards building ships for the Government, or other war activities, they have increased the salaries of these mechanical employees far in excess of the increases that have been received by the employees of the Government Printing Office.

Take the Washington Navy Yard as an instance. These employees have had their wages increased as wages were increased in the shipyards by the Macey Board, which board fixed wages for the shipyards of the country during the period of the war. I have in mind down here men working at what are known as the basic trades—machinists, molders, blacksmiths, and trades like that—who received before the war, or about the early part of 1913, a first-class rate of about $3.48 per day.

The employees of the Government Printing Office at that time had their wages fixed by statute and were getting somewhere in the neighborhood of about 55 cents per hour, or $4.40 for an eight-hour day. Since that time the wages of the employees of the Washington Navy Yard, fixed by the wage board, have gone up to a rate of $6.80 per day, first-class rate, without any bonus. The present rate of 65 cents per hour, plus the bonus, up to the first of this year of 5 cents per hour, for the highly skilled men in the Government Printing Office would let them have a minimum rate for eight hours of $5.60 per day. Under the new rate it would put the skilled employees of the Government Printing Office upon about the same rate as the employees of the Washington Navy Yard, and I do not think there is any doubt in anyone's mind who knows anything about the skill and the work required about the printing trade that they are just as highly skilled men as there are in the Government navy yard in Washington or in any other section of the country, and they ought to be treated accordingly. The navy yard has enjoyed this $6.80 navy yard rate for some time and have the right to have their wages increased by the Secretary of the Navy from time to time to meet changing conditions. These men will only get their $6.80 rate when the bill passes this House and finally passes the Senate; that is, they will only receive the equivalent of the navy yard rate by including the $240 per year bonus.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NOLAN. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. I am in sympathy with these men at the Printing Office. Will the gentleman explain to me what other classes there are left to whom we have not given a proper wage?

Mr. NOLAN. Government employees?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. NOLAN. I can not tell that, yet. There are thousands of them.

Mr. WINGO. Well, there are a good many others?

Mr. NOLAN. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Why does not the gentleman get his committee——

Mr. NOLAN. I do not happen to be a member of this committee.

Mr. WINGO. Why does not the gentleman, who is the leader and a very able leader of the labor forces—and I frequently follow him because I have confidence in his honesty and in his judgment——

Mr. NOLAN. I did not know that I was the leader of the labor forces, but I am glad to accept that title and feel highly honored in being so designated.

Mr. WINGO. Why does not the gentleman get a committee to bring in one bill that will adjust all of these matters on a proper basis and avoid this difficulty. When you raise one class another comes in and says that we have given the first ones a larger amount than they are getting, or that we have not given them a raise for a long time, so that it is a continuous performance. Why not put in a general reclassification bill and put all of them on the basis that is fair and proper? I will join with the gentleman in voting it as high as is necessary, but let us not do this by piecemeal.

Mr. NOLAN. It took me pretty nearly seven years to get the minimum-wage bill through this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. KIESS. I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. NOLAN. As I say, it took me seven years to get a minimum-wage bill through this House, to take care of the lowest-paid employees, and it is not yet through the Senate. We did provide in the legislative bill for the fiscal year 1920 for a commission, and it is sitting here in the District of Columbia at the present time, to do the very thing that the gentleman has advocated, to make a thorough reclassification of the employees in the District of Columbia, and when that reclassification commission reports it will undoubtedly make some recommendation regarding legislation that would affect every employee in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NOLAN. In just a moment; and it can be applied to every employee in the United States; but the thing I have been trying to do and which it took me seven years to accomplish is to assist the fellow at the bottom, and we have not taken care of him as yet.

Mr. WINGO. That is the point I am coming to.

Mr. NOLAN. This reclassification commission will undoubtedly recommend legislation. The Committee on Reform in the Civil Service in this House has jurisdiction over that sort of legislation, except in special instances, as in the case of the Committee on Printing, which has jurisdiction over the Government Printing Office. The Committee on Reform in the Civil Service has never held a half dozen meetings in six years until this year, and it was impossible to get legislation out of that committee.

Mr. WINGO. That being so, and the gentleman having spent seven years to get through his minimum-wage bill, would it not have been better if he had combined the forces of all and have obtained general reclassification. Is not the gentleman afraid, with that committee not meeting, that it is going to take seven years longer to reach all of them. Why pick out one here and another there. Why not get a general reclassification of them all? I am going to vote for this bill, but I am tired of picking out one or two there and one or two here. Let us put them all in an equal footing and do justice to all of them.

Mr. NOLAN. The gentleman is in error. This is not my bill. The bill was introduced by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. WINGO. I am for the gentleman's bill, but I wanted him to go further.

Mr. NOLAN. Here is the point. If it took me 7 years to get action on the minimum-wage bill, it would take about 21 years before I could get up a reclassification bill——

Mr. WINGO. But if the gentleman got the influence of all together, he could bring it in very quickly.

Mr. NOLAN. I say this: I have done my part as one of the minority Members for over six years in bringing it to a successful conclusion; and I will be fair, the last House, which was a Democratic House, passed a bill in September of last year, the latter part of the second session of the Sixty-fifth Congress. It took them that long to get it to a vote in this House—six years. Now, we expect to get action in another body quickly on the minimum-wage bill. The gentleman's idea is right, but you can only go as far as this great legislative body will permit you. There is not a committee in the House that has the jurisdiction of which the gentleman speaks to bring in a bill of that kind. If you assign it to one committee, immediately a half dozen more committees come in and claim jurisdiction. And now there is not any one committee in the House that has jurisdiction over the subject of wages or a classification or a reclassification of all Federal employees. I went as far as I could with the minimum-wage bill, and it took me a long time before I could get by the clerk of the Speaker and have that minimum-wage bill assigned to the Committee on Labor, where I was expecting to get action.

Mr. FOSTER. If the gentleman will yield, is it not a further fact that when the minimum-wage bill did come to a vote that of the 48 votes cast against it every one came from that side of the aisle?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman means from the Democratic side?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. I am glad the gentleman has come here, possibly now he can run his own side.

Mr. NOLAN. I trust this House will pass this bill without delay.

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I think it is absolutely necessary for us to give some relief such as is proposed here by this bill. I have been trying to get at the sources of the continual rise in the level of prices, which has become a matter of grave concern. Members must admit that the Government has had more to do with this rise under the stress of war than any other one agency now in existence. The cause is not far to seek. We had to create a war machine in the shortest possible time, and the Government proceeded to take the labor into the shipyards, the munition plants, the cantonments, the aviation field, and many other agencies of employment, so that the Government demand for labor was so sweeping and so comprehensive that it operated so as to monopolize the labor of the country to the extent that the Government wage became that of all industries, and in order that industries which were not connected with war work might be continued they had to meet the high increase that was placed upon the industries of the country by the Government's wage scale. No man would remain in an industry when his Government paid so much more and urged him to come into its employ. Quite naturally we saw people employed at double the price that they were employed prior to the war, and in many cases at much greater increase than 100 per cent. The only people who suffered were the people who were under a salary. That did not respond to the demands of the war, and could not, therefore, take advantage of the abnormal increase. Wherever a fixed scale of salary has obtained the price of things that the employees must buy to live upon doubled while the income fixed from the salary prior to the war remained stationary. It is precisely the same as if some authority operated to cut the salary just in two, for the purchasing power of the salary is not more than one-half of what it was before the war. These persons engaged in Government service, necessarily employed for Government work that the machinery of Government may be uninterrupted, on a basis of salary fixed prior to the war find no power of their own influence that can operate to reduce the cost of the things they must buy upon which to live and no ability outside of this Congress to secure an increase in their pay. If we can and will reduce the cost of their living that would be one way of relief. There is small hope of that. The slightest thing we can do is to increase the price paid to those people in some sort of a degree that is partially commensurate with the cost of living, which they can not control. Mr. Chairman, if we would go to the bottom of this thing to get at the basis of the serious increase in the cost of living we would find it very largely in the hands of the Government—I do not mean in its failure to reduce the cost, but in the initial cause of the increased cost of living—and it will take years and years of gradual regulation ever to bring that cost anywhere near what it was before the war.

There is much loose talk about the reduction of the cost of articles of necessity.

The fact is plain. The great item in the cost of anything is labor. When the employer pays wages determined by the selling price of the finished product, the item of profit always determines wages paid. If no profit is made, the producer must either stop or lose. The latter can not long continue. If no profit, in time there will be no work and no wages. Capital in the hands of the producer must not only be active but it must represent the possibilities of a gain rather than loss if it continues investment.

But not so with the Government's operations. It secures its capital from the people either by tax or loan. In the latter case especially, profit is not regarded. The product of labor is not sold, and therefore the item of profit does not determine the investment. Labor may be paid any sort of wages. There is no criterion save what is demanded. The Government wants labor in its shipyards. The cost counts nothing. It will offer not only a great increase over what labor commands in the industries but it fixes the day and pays time and a half for overtime. As an additional inducement it doubles wages on Sunday and pays transportation charges as well as 60 cents per hour while en route. In places it even builds houses for its help.

All other business must either stop or meet in competition this scale. It meets it and passes the burden on to the public. This will be reflected in every article purchased in the market. The element of cost doubles to the producer, and inevitably the element of cost must double to the consumer. If the producer pays double for the articles made and sold by him, the consumer must pay double when he buys.

The Government's pay roll, which runs into the hundred thousands of individuals, necessary or unnecessary, in that degree increases the cost of living. High prices are due to the speculative spirit, and nothing is so wildly speculative to-day as the Government's operations. It is all done on borrowed capital, which comes easy and is spent by Government agencies greatly interested in the continuance of their activities.

The Government takes over the railroads, and this reckless spirit of the speculator advances immediately the cost of operations, until to-day the roads face bankruptcy, and at the same time cost the people more and render them the least efficient service in the history of the industry.

It takes over the telephone. Immediately it puts into operation new rules, and if a householder wants a phone $5 is demanded to install it, and if you want it changed to another desk $3.50 is charged. If I wish to telephone to some one in Pittsburgh, a call is put in; the party can not be found, but I pay the bill notwithstanding. All these items are charged to the public and go to increase the level of costs.

The Government becoming in time of war the chief business concern of all enterprise in war and therefore the chief employer of labor, demanded greater freedom to meet the volume of business by a larger circulative medium. It asked Congress for authority to issue two and one-half times the amount of Treasury notes permitted under the law. That circulation to-day amounts to the enormous sum of nearly $3,000,000,000. The per capita circulation is more than three times what it was in 1879 and nearly double that prior to the war.

While the purchasing power has thus been greatly reduced by the cheapening of the dollar, commonly called inflation of its value, it does not deter the wage earner spending lavishly.

To-day the railroads are overworked simply because everybody is now traveling. The dining cars are crowded for the same reason.

Garments bring good prices because people who before were careful with their means are now flush and they buy readily. The same is true of shoes. It is true in foodstuffs to a degree.

These facts, taken in connection with the effective organizations which make it possible to control prices, as in the case of the packers in meat products and the cold storage companies in various storage products, give the explanation of the high level of prices.

It is a Government problem. The lowering of that level must be a slow process and must be gradual to avoid a crash. Wages, the chief element in the high level, can not come down except as the cost of necessities come down. In the meantime we must see that there is no unemployment if it can be avoided, and in Government service here in the Capital we should see to it that we do not neglect a plain duty to Government servants.

With this cost up, with little hope of it coming down, because the agencies that made it go up are not operative to bring it down, our duty is to try to meet the necessity of these people working for the Government at a fixed salary by increasing the salary to a point where they can live somewhere as the people who are working outside of the Capital.

For that reason I am not making the suggestion that we can easily reduce the cost of living, but I am making the suggestion that, unable to do it, we ought to increase the salary paid in order to meet the cost of living.

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Chairman, is the question on the committee amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill has not been read for amendment. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The bill was read for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House as amended, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5418) increasing the pay of printers and pressmen employed in the Government Printing Office, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same to the House with certain amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the amendments? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KIESS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MEETING OF FIRST HOUSE OF BURGESSES.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further business for Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with, and before the motion to adjourn, I also ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] may address the House for five minutes on the question of the anniversary of the first meeting of the House of Burgesses in Virginia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker [applause], I crave the attention of the membership of the House on the significance of this anniversary.

In view of the fact that one of our Members mentioned the day by resolution and address pleasing to every Member, I want to add a few words upon its significance to our history.

It was in 1619 that this first legislative assembly in the New World was organized. In 1620, a year afterwards, in the cabin of the Mayflower, a compact was entered upon that indicated an attempt in another part of the country to establish a similar form of government, in which the people had a voice. It was in 1638, in the State of Connecticut, that the first constitution was adopted. This is the first instance in history where a constitution was framed by a people as the work of the people for their own government. It is not only the first in the history of any colony but the first in any country in the world. John Fiske says that the constitution of Connecticut ought to be studied in parallel columns with the Constitution of the United States. The two show a striking similarity in fundamentals.

It was in 1643 that a successful effort was made to unify in a confederation four of the Colonies, each of the four prior to that time having adopted some form of a charter government. This confederation was called the "Union of the New England Colonies." By this time the thirteen Colonies had distinctive State or colonial governments—4 charter, 3 proprietary, and the remaining 6 were royal. It was in 1754, under the suggested plan of Benjamin Franklin, that the thirteen Colonies, each of which at this time had adopted a form of constitution, proposed a plan of union of all the Colonies, known as the Albany plan. If you will recall, this plan was rejected by England because it was too democratic and by the Colonies because it was too aristocratic.

It was in 1776 that the idea of independent government was embodied by Thomas Jefferson in the famous Declaration of Independence, whose fundamental principles then announced became the foundation of the modern Republic. It was in 1781, after the Revolution, that the unsuccessful experiment of the Articles of Confederation was inaugurated. It was in 1787 that constitutional government was formulated in the organic law of the country, known as our Federal Constitution. And, Members of the House, I simply call your attention to the historic fact that beginning down here at Jamestown in that first legislative assembly, 300 years ago to-day, was the germ that grew step by step, that passed finally from the individual to a group, first of a few and then from the few to include the 13, and then, entering upon a new plan in 1787, has grown to the half hundred of empire States comprising the greatest Nation to-day under a single flag, obedient to the same Constitution with a few amendments.

Here is an instrument of but seven short articles, couched in about 3,000 words, under which a Nation of but 3,000,000 people has grown to 110,000,000 and double in wealth any country on earth. Throughout this marvelous growth the Constitution has been altered materially only seven times, since the first 11 amendments were reservations made by the States on their ratification. This organic law stands as the climax in democratic government in the world to-day.

I wanted on this anniversary to call attention to the fact that the seed that was planted in 1619 in Virginia spread to the Nation. And I think no one fact is more patent in the world to-day than that this form is not only to become the ultimate form in the world, but the spirit has already encompassed most of the civilized world, and we have proof that the experiment of the House of Burgesses was not a failure. [Applause.]

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it has always been the custom for the ranking member of the minority on the Committee on Appropriations to make some statement in reference to the appropriations. I would have submitted a request for unanimous consent for that purpose heretofore had the prohibition-enforcement law not intervened. I make that statement in view of the fact that I wish to submit now a unanimous-consent request at this time. I understand that to-morrow a rule will probably be proposed, and there will probably be other business pending, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that I may have 35 minutes—I do not know that I will need it all—on Friday morning, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of such business as lies on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that on Friday morning, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, he may address the House for 35 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker—and I shall not object—I simply want to suggest to the gentleman that I think it may be possible to yield him the time to-morrow.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I shall be glad to take it to-morrow if I can get it.

Mr. MONDELL. That will be done if the opportunity offers.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I shall be glad to get it to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced an amended soldiers' land bill. I desire to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, analyzing that bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the soldiers' land bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD the remarks I have just made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. J. Res. 78. Joint resolution to permit the payment of obligations entered into by the War Department prior to July 1, 1919; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the action heretofore taken by the House, I move that in honor of the three hundredth anniversary of the first meeting of the first legislative body in America, the Virginia House of Burgesses, the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, July 31, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. LANGLEY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7656) to repeal an act entitled "An act to authorize the President to provide housing for war needs," approved May 16, 1918, and to repeal all acts and parts of acts amendatory thereof, and to provide for the disposition of all property acquired under and by virtue of the same, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 181), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the resolution (H. Res. 186) requesting the Interstate Commerce Commission to make certain investigations regarding the present and future supply of tie timber, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 182), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 55) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to adjust disputes or claims by entrymen, selectors, grantees, and patentees of the United States, against the United States and between each other, arising from faulty surveys in townships 36, 37, and 38 south, ranges 29 and 30 east, Tallahassee meridian, in the State of Florida, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 183), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, July 31, 1919.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we recognize Thy sovereign right to rule, and we bring to Thee the thought of our hearts to-day. We place ourselves before Thee that we may receive Thy commandments, and that we may be enabled to transcribe Thy laws into the laws of this land and set them forth as the charter of the rights and liberties and peace and glory of this people. We pray Thee to guide us by Thy Spirit to this end. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday last, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 5418. An act increasing the pay of printers and pressmen employed in the Government Printing Office, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6750. An act to deport certain undesirable aliens and to deny readmission to those deported;

H. R. 7930. An act to provide for the treatment in hospital of diseased alien seamen; and

H. J. Res. 163. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of Labor to lease the Charleston immigration station and dock connected therewith.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I have received a letter in the nature of a petition from Hon. J. W. Parkley, of Ipswich, S. Dak., praying for the ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany, including the covenant of a league of nations. I move that the communication be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. NUGENT. I present resolutions adopted by U. S. Grant Post, No. 32, Grand Army of the Republic, of Sandpoint, Bonner County, Idaho, favoring the enactment of legislation increasing the pensions of old soldiers who have reached the age of 70 years to an amount equal to $50 per month. I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KEYES presented petitions of sundry citizens of Andover, Bradford, East Kingston, Unity, and Milton, all in the State of New Hampshire, praying for the ratification of the proposed league of nations treaty, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PHELAN presented petitions of Local Union No. 16, International Alliance of Theatrical and Stage Employees and Moving Picture Machine Operators of the United States of America, of San Francisco; of the Budlong Avenue School Parent Teachers' Association, of Los Angeles; of Santa Cruz Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, of Santa Cruz; of Local Lodge No. 307, Free and Accepted Masons, of Santa Monica; of the Building Trades Council of Kings County; of Painters' Union No. 594, of Hanford; of the Review of Maccabees, of Hanford; of Local Union No. 1043, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, of Hanford; of Eola Rebekah Lodge No. 256, of Igo; of Local Union No. 115, Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America, of San Francisco; of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Madera County; of Local Union No. 12, International Union of Timberworkers, of Eureka; of Welcome Lodge No. 209, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Igo; of Union Lodge No. 169, Knights of Pythias, of Sonora; of Lucerne Chapter No. 127, Order of the Eastern Star, of Hanford; of Rising Light Chapter, Order of the Eastern Star, of Huntington; and of McPherson Woman's Relief Corps No. 97, of Hanford, all in the State of California, praying for the ratification of the proposed league of nations treaty, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of Roger Casement Branch, Friends of Irish Freedom, of Los Angeles, Calif., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed league of nations treaty, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HALE presented a memorial of Pleasant Valley Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Rockland, Me., remonstrating against the proposed plan of the Secretary of the Interior to reclaim desert and swamp lands, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. NELSON presented a petition of Local Union No. 65, National Federation of Postal Employees, of St. Paul, Minn., praying for the granting of a bonus to postal employees pending action by the Joint Committee on Reclassification, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. PAGE presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Poultney, Vt., remonstrating against the ratification of the league of nations treaty, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. ELKINS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Ohio and Marshall Counties, in the State of West Virginia, praying for the repeal of the tax on ice cream, soda, soft drinks, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts presented memorials of employees of the Osgood Bradley Car Co., of Worcester; of the Worcester Stamped Metal Co.; of the Yale Knitting Co., of Malden; of the Standard Woven Fabric Co., of Walpole; of English & O'Brien (Inc.); of the Babcock & Wilcox Co.; of Edgar T. Ward Sons Co.; of the New England Drawn Steel Co., of Mansfield; of the Gamewell Fire Alarm Co.; of the Barlow Co., of Holyoke; of the J. & B. Manufacturing Co., of Pittsfield; of the Judd Paper Co., of Holyoke; of the Springfield Facing Co.; of the Wiley-Bickford-Sweet Co., of Worcester; of the Massachusetts Chocolate Co.; of the West Newton Savings Bank; of the Fred T. Field Co., of Brockton; of the United Manufacturing Co., of Springfield; of the William N. Jordan Co., of Gloucester; of the Wellman Co., of Medford; of the M. S. Wright Co.; of the Fiberloid Corporation, of Indian Orchard; of the American Brake Shoe & Foundry Co., of Norwood; of the Davidson Rubber Co., of Somerville; of the Van Norman Machine Co., of Springfield; of the Coburn Trolley Track Manufacturing Co.; of the Hudson Belting Co., of Worcester; of the Shirreffs Worsted Co., of Fitchburg; and of the Wetherell & Dobbins Co., of Haverhill, all in the State of Massachusetts, remonstrating against the repeal of the so-called daylight-saving law, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. COLT presented a memorial of Local Grange No. 51, Patrons of Husbandry, of Anthony, R. I., and a memorial of sundry citizens of Newport, R. I., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed league of nations treaty, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS.

Mr. TRAMMELL, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1546) for the relief of Katie Norvall, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 126) thereon.

Mr. NEW, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 176) for the relief of John M. Francis (Rept. No. 127); and

A bill (S. 1456) for the relief of Rinald Bros., of Philadelphia, Pa. (Rept. No. 128).

FRANCIS NICHOLSON.

Mr. PHELAN. On June 2 I introduced the bill (S. 1313) for the relief of Francis Nicholson, and it was inadvertently referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I ask that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims. It is the claim of a citizen and not a soldier.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I believe that change of reference should be made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

OFFICIAL REPORTERS OF DEBATE.

Mr. SMOOT. From the Committee on Printing I report back favorably with an amendment Senate resolution 135 and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The Senate by unanimous consent proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendment was to add at the end of the resolution the following:

Provided, That the contract heretofore made with said Theodore F. Shuey and the late Edward V. Murphy be considered as terminated by the death of the latter on July 16, 1919, and that said Theodore F. Shuey and said James W. Murphy be paid for service rendered in reporting the debates and proceedings of the Senate at the rate allowable by law for such service from July 17, 1919, inclusive to the date upon which this resolution is agreed to by the Senate.

So as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That Theodore F. Shuey and James W. Murphy are hereby appointed official reporters for reporting the proceedings and debates of the Senate until further order of the Senate, subject to all the duties and obligations of the contract made with D. F. Murphy, deceased, late reporter of the Senate, and to the supervision and control of the Committee on Printing on behalf of the Senate in all respects therein provided, and to receive payment for such service according to law: Provided, That the contract heretofore made with said Theodore F. Shuey and the late Edward V. Murphy be considered as terminated by the death of the latter on July 16, 1919, and that said Theodore F. Shuey and said James W. Murphy be paid for service rendered in reporting the debates and proceedings of the Senate at the rate allowable by law for such service from July 17, 1919, inclusive to the date upon which this resolution is agreed to by the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

BRIDGE BILLS.

Mr. CALDER. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to report back favorably sundry House bills authorizing the construction of bridges over navigable streams, and I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bills.

From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 6805) to authorize the county of Dougherty, State of Georgia, to construct a bridge across the Flint River, connecting Broad Street, in the city of Albany, said State and county, with the Isabella Road, said county and State, and I submit a report (No. 124) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Dougherty, State of Georgia, be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Flint River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, to connect Broad Street, in the city of Albany, said county and State, with the Isabella Road, said county and State, and at or near the site of the present bridge, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 6438) authorizing the counties of Aiken, S. C., and Richmond, Ga., to construct a bridge across the Savannah River at or near Augusta, Ga., and I submit a report (No. 122) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the counties of Aiken, S. C., and Richmond, Ga., be, and are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Savannah River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near Augusta, Ga., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 5648) for the construction of a bridge across the Rainy River between Spooner, Minn., and Rainy River, Province of Ontario, Canada, and I submit a report (No. 120) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby given for the construction, maintenance, and operation by the State of Minnesota and the Dominion of Canada, jointly, of a bridge to be erected across the Rainy River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between Spooner, Minn., and Rainy River, Province of Ontario, Canada, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906: Provided, That the construction of said bridge shall not be commenced until the consent of the proper authorities of the Dominion of Canada for the erection of the structure shall have been obtained.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 5228) granting the consent of the Congress to the city of Minneapolis, a municipal corporation, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River, and I submit a report (No. 119) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of the Congress is hereby granted to the city of Minneapolis, a municipal corporation of the State of Minnesota, and its successors, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near the intersection of Franklin Avenue, in said city of Minneapolis, with the said Mississippi River, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 6342) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Pend Oreille River at the town of Usk, in the State of Washington, and I submit a report (No. 121) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Pend Oreille County, State of Washington, its successors and assigns, be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Pend Oreille River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at the town of Usk, in said county and State, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 6692) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the White River, at or near Forsyth, Mo., and I submit a report (No. 123) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by the act of Congress approved April 8, 1918, to be built by the Forsyth special road district of Taney County, Mo., across the White River at or near Forsyth, Mo., are hereby extended one year and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF WAR RISK INSURANCE ACT.

Mr. PENROSE. From the Committee on Finance I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 6450) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department, approved September 2, 1914,' as amended," and I submit a report (No. 129) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the bill.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. It will require but a moment of time, I am sure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 12 of an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department,' approved September 2, 1914, as amended," be, and is hereby, amended as follows:

At the end of subdivision H, section 12, insert: "Except in case of loss of both hands and both eyes, or in case of loss of both feet and both eyes, or in case of loss of both hands and both feet, in which cases there shall be an allowance of $100 per month for a nurse or attendant, the same in addition to the $100 per month allowed in this act for the loss of both feet, or both hands, or both eyes."

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I do not know that any explanation of the bill is necessary. It is to fit one case and only one case in the Army of a boy who has lost both eyes and both hands. As the law now stands, he would receive, I think, $150 or $157 per month. This bill proposes to add $100 to that amount. It is certainly a most meritorious matter.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RED RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. EDGE. From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 6434) authorizing the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across Red River about 2 miles above its confluence with the Washita River, near Preston, Grayson County, Tex., and I submit a report (No. 125) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Preston Bridge Co., a corporation, be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Red River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation on the south bank of said river immediately north of Preston, in Grayson County, Tex., to a point immediately north of said beginning and located in Marshall County, Okla., and such point being about 2 miles west of the confluence of Red River with the Washita River near Preston, Tex., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred, as follows:

By Mr. CUMMINS:

A bill (S. 2684) granting a pension to John J. Toulouse (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NUGENT:

A bill (S. 2685) for the relief of Anna J. Porter; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 2686) to establish standard weights and measures in the District of Columbia, to define the duties of the Superintendent of Weights, Measures, and Markets of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 2687) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth A. Cook; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PHELAN:

A bill (S. 2688) for the relief of James L. Vai; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2689) granting a pension to John J. Callanan (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 2690) authorizing the appointment of a minister to Finland; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 2691) to provide for universal military, naval, and vocational training, and for mobilization of the manhood of the Nation in a national emergency; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. OVERMAN:

A bill (S. 2692) to amend section 24 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. NEW:

A bill (S. 2693) to create a Department of Aeronautics, defining the powers and duties of the director thereof, providing for the organization, disposition, and administration of a United States air force, creating the United States Air Reserve Force, and providing for the development of civil and commercial aviation; and

A bill (S. 2694) for the relief of Paul Hubner (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WALSH of Montana:

A bill (S. 2695) granting a pension to Lucinda Harrington (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ELKINS:

A bill (S. 2696) granting an increase of pension to Harriet B. Hart; and

A bill (S. 2697) granting an increase of pension to James D. Compton; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NEWBERRY:

A bill (S. 2698) for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building at Flint, Mich.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

A bill (S. 2699) granting an increase of pension to Vernon Beall; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 2700) granting the consent of Congress to the D. E. Hewit Lumber Co. to construct and maintain a bridge across Tug River, connecting Martin County, Ky., and Mingo County, W. Va.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. KENYON:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 80) to authorize the President to convene the first meeting of the International Labor Conference in Washington and to appoint delegates thereto; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I desire to state that the joint resolution has been introduced at the request of the Secretary of Labor.

ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION FOR SOLDIERS SERVING ABROAD.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I submit an amendment, in the nature of a substitute for the bill (S. 56), providing for additional compensation to persons serving in the military or naval forces of the United States during the war with the German Empire. I move that the amendment be printed and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.

Mr. PENROSE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 144), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recess of the Senate.

ROBERT A. MINOR.

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution (S. Res. 145) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War report to the Senate whether or not Robert A. Minor, an American citizen, accredited as a war correspondent in the military zone in France, was arrested by military authorities of the American Expeditionary Forces for circulating seditious publications and propaganda among the soldiers of the American Expeditionary Forces, or for any other cause, and that if said Minor were arrested as aforesaid to report to the Senate the particular nature of the charges upon which he was arrested, and whether or not said Minor has been discharged from custody, and the reason therefor, if such action were taken.

BREWING, GERMAN, AND BOLSHEVIK PROPAGANDA.

Mr. NELSON submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 6), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 4,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 62, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session, entitled "Brewing and Liquor Interests and German and Bolshevik Propaganda," for the use of the Senate.

REPEAL OF DAYLIGHT-SAVING LAW.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that immediately after the address of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], scheduled to take place this morning, I shall ask for the consideration of the bill repealing one section of the daylight-saving law. I give the notice so that Senators may be advised of my desire in this respect.

TREATY WITH GERMANY—LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have a very brief letter, written by the officers of the Farmers' National Council. It is one, I think, of very great importance. I wish to say that it meets with my hearty approval, and I ask that it may be read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

FARMERS' NATIONAL COUNCIL,
Washington, D. C., July 30, 1919.

To Members of the United States Senate:

The discussion of the covenant of the league of nations and the peace treaty with Germany has deeply stirred the members of the farm organizations we have the honor to represent, and it is their judgment that the importance of the questions involved requires that the American people be given an opportunity to register their will on these documents, which involve their lives and their interests for years to come.

We therefore urge that Congress immediately enact the necessary legislation for an advisory referendum of every voter in the United States on the ratification by our country of both the covenant of the league of nations and the peace treaty with Germany. Such a referendum can not, without a constitutional amendment, be made binding upon your honorable body, but such an expression of public opinion will unquestionably have enormous weight and will reveal to you, to the President of the United States, and to all the world the desires of the people of this great country.

In our judgment, such a referendum should not be held earlier than the middle of October, so as to give full opportunity for the opponents and proponents of the covenant and the treaty to present their arguments for and against their adoption.

Respectfully submitted.

GEORGE P. HAMPTON,
Managing Director.
BENJAMIN C. MARSH,
Secretary.

GEN. PEYTON C. MARCH.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I have a letter from Maj. Gen. W. P. Duvall, retired, a very distinguished officer, on the subject of Gen. March. I desire to have it referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and I would be glad to have it printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BOSTON, June 21, 1919.

TO UNITED STATES SENATOR HOKE SMITH,
Washington.

MY DEAR MR. SENATOR: Because sometime in the past 18 months you honored me by stating your confidence in my opinion on things military, and quite unsolicited gave me permission to address you on such subjects, I am going to take the liberty for the first time of offering you my professional opinion upon a mattter in which I hope you will interest yourself for the good of the service, viz, the granting of suitable reward and honors to the Chief of Staff of our victorious Army.

Of Gen. Pershing's title to the recognition proposed by the President I need not speak to you, for the brilliant results accomplished by the commanding general in the field are plain to everybody, and can not be gainsaid by enemies or even ignored by the thoughtless, thus differing from the work of the Chief of Staff, which is little appreciated by laymen, and is only too likely to incur for him the enmity of those who feel a personal antagonism for the war-time rigors of military methods.

In this connection I can well understand that March's characteristic conciseness of diction and brevity of expression in both written and spoken intercourse might give offense to those who do not know the man, but this very failing, if you would call it so, is indicative of his power. He is habitually intensely concentrated, instinct with energy always unerringly and sharply directed. He can do and does do more work in a given time than any other three of four men, working in tandem, that I have ever known. I have observed him ever since he was a second lieutenant—in the regiment, in the artillery school, in the United States Volunteers, in campaign in the Philippines, and in the General Staff, where, when it was first organized (in 1903), he was in a division of which I was the head and in which Capts. Pershing and Dickman were also serving.

Knowing well his qualifications, as compared with those of all other officers of general rank, I say unhesitatingly that not only in ability to accomplish valuable work but in the amount of such work actually accomplished in this war he stands pre-eminent.

We are already beginning to forget the relief and amazement felt in this country and throughout the allied world at the size of the American force assembled in France for the summer campaign. Who accomplished this miracle? March, who was thus the author of Pershing's magnificent success. I do not believe there is another man in the Army who could have done what March did, and I say this from the standpoint of an old officer who has taken unmeasured delight in seeing come to the top in the test of war so many of the younger men whom I in former years had picked out and recommended for various advancements. March, in my opinion, though junior to many, always stood at the head of them all.

From my long experience and seasoned knowledge of the tone and spirit of the Army I wish to say to you, Mr. Senator, that whether March is at the moment popular or not in political or military circles, there can be no doubt that to reduce his rank in the face of his tremendous achievement would be a most disheartening precedent for all those in the profession capable of the sort of mental grasp, fearless decision, and energetic action necessary to military safety; the Army could but know that even consummate military skill is not sure of reward.

Finally, dear Mr. Senator, let me beg of you, for the welfare of the Army, to exert your powerful influence against the threatened denial of the fair reward intended by the President in nominating to the grade of General this great Chief of Staff.

With high regard, I am, very sincerely yours,

WM. P. DUVALL,
Major General, retired.

TAXATION FOR FEDERAL PURPOSES.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have here an article printed in the Central Law Journal by H. Halderson on the question of taxation for Federal purposes. It seems to me that it presents, and in a very few words, something that is worthy of careful consideration. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TAXATION FOR FEDERAL PURPOSES.

"Taxation for Federal purposes has touched the bank account of the average substantial citizen, and this has impelled him to think about the big subject of national finance. There is probably not a precinct in the United States where this question is not discussed by the average voter. The reverse was true five years ago.

"There seems to be a feeling that the present system is inadequate, and to remedy the defect this suggestion has been made: Amend the Constitution of the United States by repealing or changing the provisions therein prohibiting capitation and direct taxes.

"This change will permit a direct tax on real and personal taxable property for Federal purposes, to be levied and collected (in peace and war) in connection with State and municipal taxes.

"It is indeed a wonder and humiliation that this change was not brought about 50 years ago. If we strike out the capitation and direct tax clauses and authorize a general tax on property, Congress, having before it the assessed valuation and the amount necessary to be raised, could provide money for any emergency by making a levy. Such levy could be made, figuratively speaking, in five minutes. The proceeding would be just as simple and short as the proceedings of a school board or a board of county commissioners making a levy for the ensuing year. This Federal tax would go on to the tax books like county, school, and municipal taxes, and would be collected by the county treasurer in the same manner. The expense would be nominal instead of over $10,000,000. Instead of an army of tax collectors, now consisting of about 9,000 men, a nominal force only would be required.

"This plan of Federal revenue would be fixed and permanent, ready to be put in operation at any time by congressional levy.

"Aside from the appealing simplicity and practicability of the plan, a convincing way to sustain this suggestion, coming from the average voter, is to state the facts as to the origin of the capitation and direct tax provisions. It has been historically and judicially determined that there were two reasons why they were adopted: First, to protect the slave and plantation owners from a tax that would destroy slavery; second, to avoid a possible unjust tax against States through taxation of land by the acre or according to value, many States having at that time within their practically unknown boundaries vast tracts of unsurveyed land of little or at least unknown value.

"Slavery was abolished over 50 years ago, and every foot of land, figuratively speaking, is now surveyed and on the assessment roll at a fixed value.

"Overstatement is a common offense, but it would be almost fair to say that since the removal of the reason for these direct-tax clauses they have served an evil and destructive purpose—have been to the Constitution as a rotten, absorbing tooth is to the human system. These clauses in the Constitution have been a bar against the establishment of a fixed and dependable system or plan of raising revenue for Federal purposes. Every exigency or change of internal conditions has called for a new 'revenue law.' And the same policy must continue unless the Constitution is changed in this respect.

"Here is a partial list of past revenue measures: Act of Congress, July 14, 1798; act of Congress, August 7, 1813; act of Congress, January 19, 1815; act of Congress, February, 1815; act of Congress, March 5, 1816; act of Congress, August 5, 1861; act of Congress, June 7, 1862; revenue law, 1888; revenue law, 1913; revenue law, 1916; revenue law, 1917; revenue law, 1918–19.

"The pendency of every revenue measure provokes unsettled and interrupted conditions in every line of business of incalculable harm to the general welfare; and the framing and passage of these laws each time requires from two to about seven months. The debates attending the consideration of these measures display the versatility of the human mind and are very interesting, but the expense is unnecessary.

"The excise feature of the 1918–19 revenue law, for instance, is wholly arbitrary. If a laborer, eating his lunch on a mortar box, is taxed on a thermos bottle containing his coffee, why should he not pay on the coffee pot that it was boiled in; if his wife is taxed on talc powder for the baby, why not on napkins for the baby (both equally essential)? If the footpad is taxed 100 per cent on a brass knuckle (1918–19 law), he ought to be prohibited by law from using a coupling pin or other thing not taxed for criminal purposes. If a tax on insurance policy, why not on meal tickets?

"Illustration might be carried on without end, but it is not necessary. The point is that no living statesman, or group of statesmen, can make such a law without being arbitrary and unjust. The inherent nature of the plan is such that it can not be based on equity. The law is there because Members of Congress had to raise the money in some way.

"The system is wasteful. Every time the Nation's pulse beats, a new law is necessary. And each time the situation is attended with business suspense and readjustment and reorganization as to the system and plan of collection.

"On December 1, 1917, W. G. McAdoo transmitted a letter to the House of Representatives stating the appropriation necessary for expenses in collecting revenue under the law up to June 30, 1919. The amount was $10,224,627.68. The number of men employed to do this work was 6,709. Under the 1918–19 revenue law it will probably require $15,000,000 and about 9,000 men.

"The burden on the business of the country, in the way of extra bookkeeping, accounting, returns, reports touching revenue on drugs, stocks, admission tickets, railroad tickets, documents, etc., is stupendous and unbearable. Hundred of millions of dollars not accruing to the Government are spent in this way—an extra and unnecessary expense.

"It is not argued that this direct-tax plan should be made the exclusive source of Federal revenue. Possibly certain excise taxes and income tax and tariff for revenue and economic purposes might be properly retained; but the main, steady, and permanent source should be the direct-tax plan.

"For 30 years the sheriff of Cherry County, Nebr., drove about 90 miles each year to personally notify a man to come to the county seat to serve as a juror in the district court. Six or eight years ago some one who could see the humor and travesty of the thing wrote to members of the legislature suggesting a law for notifying jurors by registered mail. This was promptly done. It is claimed that this tax proposition is just as simple, and the obvious and crying necessity of the change is hardly debatable.

"The history of the litigation touching the subject of direct taxes is full of interest and is fully discussed in the cases cited in the note hereto. (The leading cases are: Hylton v. United States, 3 Dallas, 171 (1796); Pacific Insurance Co. v. Soule, 7 Wall., 433 (1868); Veazie Bank v. Fenne, 8 Wall., 533 (1869); Springer v. United States, 23 Wall., 586 (1880); Pollock v. Farmers, etc., 158 U. S., 601 (rehearing, 1895).)

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I have a short article by Mr. Walter H. Nohl, of the St. Louis bar, looking at the league of nations from a new standpoint. If there is no objection, I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOW GROWTH OF POWER IN LEAGUE MIGHT BE THE UNDOING OF UNITED STATES—AN INTERESTING STUDY OF THE COVENANT BASED UPON A CONDITION DEVELOPED IN OUR OWN COUNTRY UNDER THE CONSTITUTION.

(By Walter H. Nohl.)

"Serious consideration of the constitution of the league of nations involves its ambiguity. Running through the instrument from its preamble to its last article is found the necessity for construction and interpretation. Innumerable editorials, news paragraphs, and magazine articles indicate a multitude of different notions entertained by a vast number of individuals regarding the intent and meaning of the provisions of the covenant. President Wilson's address to the Senate on the league of nations did not lessen in the slightest degree the uncertainty and indefiniteness of its vague and ambiguous language.

"To many the language of the Constitution of the United States is fairly clear and certain. Keeping in mind the purposes and objects of the respective instruments, let it be suggested to the reader to compare the two documents to determine in a general way the degree or extent of the ambiguous language of each. We know the rules of construction have been applied steadily to the Constitution of the United States for over 100 years, and that within the last few years an astonishing degree of range and extent with reference to certain legislation has been attributed to its scope and power. The conclusion is therefore quite irresistible that the ambiguity of the league of nations covenant will require the maximum degree of construction and interpretation.

"The intention and the objects aimed at in the covenant, being the fundamental inquiry in the construction, will control the interpretation of the language of the covenant. Its language, capable of more than one meaning, is to be taken in that sense which will harmonize with such intention and objects to give effect to the purpose of the instrument. The language of the covenant is so very little free of ambiguity that resort is to be had to the principle that the spirit of the covenant controls the letter, and it will be so construed to advance the intention and objects contemplated by the peace conference, namely, to strengthen the power of the body charged with the duty of preserving the peace of the world. Undoubtedly every construction and interpretation will be calculated to render the covenant effectual and capable of powerful operation.

GENERAL TREND TO CENTRALIZED POWER.

"To give force and effect to its provisions the general trend of the constructions and interpretations must be toward centralized power. It is impossible to consider constructions and interpretations tending toward weakness and lack of strength without a contemplation of its utter disintegration and failure as a covenant.

"The magnitude of the purpose and object of the covenant is such that it must take over the necessary power to attain results for which it was created. And every bit of power it gains through each construction or interpretation is so much power vested in the covenant at the expense of and divested from the power now lodged in our Constitution of the United States. This, of course, also applies to the other nations constituting the league of nations. And in this manner the covenant will develop into a superconstitution, whose increase of power and authority will diminish the power, rights, and sovereignty of the United States Government.

"The development of the power of the Federal Government of the United States under our Constitution at the expense of the States constituting the Union is the best indication and guide at our service, at this time, to give us an understanding as to what the relation of the United States to the league of nations will eventually be. If the league of nations covenant will endure, it will be because of its strength and growth of power, just as our own Constitution developed. Should the covenant live as long as our Constitution, 125 years and more, then the United States Government will stand in comparison to the supercovenant, in point of power and sovereignty, as Missouri now stands compared to the United States Government.

THE RAPID GROWTH OF FEDERAL JURISDICTION.

"This transfer of governmental power from the various States to our Federal Government has been going on, notwithstanding reservations that were deemed strong and sufficient. Where in the covenant does one find stronger reservations than contained in our National and State Constitutions? Reservations do not appear to be nearly as important as the application of the rules of construction and interpretation. The idea of this growth toward centralization in governmental power is expressed by a law-book publisher in a very late work. The editor says:

"Within the last few years the field of Federal legislation has broadened so greatly that a copy of the Statutes of the United States is as essential a part of a lawyer's equipment as the statutes of his own State. Moreover, every citizen is affected by congressional legislation.

"Another way of showing the relation of Federal and State laws to our everyday affairs is by the use of the words 'interstate' and 'intrastate.' All of us hear, read, and say 'interstate' perhaps a hundred times more than 'intrastate.' And if the lessons of our experience and growth as a Nation will apply to the covenant, then we may prepare ourselves to hear, read, and say the word 'international' instead of 'interstate.'

"As important as any other phase of construing and interpreting the covenant is the consideration regarding the nature, training, and understanding of the individuals whose minds will perform said functions for the respective Governments, and the place, atmosphere, time, environment, and conditions attending such constructions and interpretations. In the case of the United States the process of the Federal Government absorbing so much power at the expense of the various States aroused, as a rule, no unusual suspicion or question, perhaps other than academic, and as expressed at times in the various State political platforms.

WHY THE PEOPLE DIDN'T GRUMBLE.

"Undoubtedly, the explanation is that everybody felt and understood that, after all, duly qualified and elected American citizens would continue to legislate, govern, and construe as Americans for Americans, whether as individual States or as a union of States. The proposition was and remained one purely American. And when I say American I mean in the restricted sense, namely, citizens of the United States.

"But circumstances alter cases, and our lessons and theories derived from our own governmental experience will not fit the covenant of the league of nations constituted by kingdoms, constituted monarchies, limited monarchies, principalities, in part, and made up of all manner of peoples, languages, customs, laws, habits, and religions. And it would seem wise to so amend the proposed covenant that the operation or application of the rules of construction and interpretation can not diminish our national power and sovereignty in favor of an international covenant at the expense of the United States Government, particularly so since most of the other members of the league are hardly our equals in point of national intelligence, experience, ability, and unselfishness, even though they, or some of them, may be our superiors in crafty statesmanship."

TRANSFER OF SHANTUNG TO JAPAN.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have a short telegram from a prominent merchant of my State, which I ask may be read.

There being no objection, the telegram was read, as follows:

EVANSTON, WYO., July 29, 1919.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Meeting of Chinese residents in this city yesterday instructed me to wire you our protest against transfer of Shantung Province to Japan. We, who are American citizens, implore you to prevent this outrage so we may continue to retain our self-respect among the Chinese who look to America for protection of the oppressed.

L. K. WONG.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is not this in violation of the rule, it not being from a citizen of the United States?

Mr. WARREN. I will say that Mr. Wong is a citizen of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A Chinese citizen?

Mr. WARREN. No; a citizen of the United States. He formerly came from China, of course. I ask that the telegram may be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

RACE RIOT IN CHICAGO, ILL.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, lest we forget!

I desire to put into the RECORD the following excerpts taken from an account of the race riot in Chicago, Ill., published in the Washington Post on yesterday, July 30, 1919.

The first of these excerpts I read as follows:

BEATEN, STABBED, SHOT, AND BURNED.

A fatal affair also took place in the West Side Italian district, where a negro was knocked from a bicycle, beaten, stabbed, wounded with 16 revolver bullets, and, after death had relieved him, gasoline was poured on his body and set afire. The corpse probably will never be identified.

This negro was charged with no crime. This was in the State of Abraham Lincoln; this was in Chicago, the home of the Chicago Tribune. Comment is unnecessary.

I further quote:

Hundreds of negroes, many carrying personal possessions and some without baggage, joined in an exodus to-day. The majority of them, chiefly in family groups, bought railroad tickets for Memphis and Nashville.

Comment is again unnecessary.

CALIFORNIA OIL PRICES.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for permission to have printed in the RECORD a letter written to the Washington Post by Alfred Holman, editor of the San Francisco Argonaut, on the subject of California oil, the matter which is now before the Senate.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CALIFORNIA OIL PRICES—A PRESENTMENT OF FACTS BY EDITOR OF THE ARGONAUT.

"EDITOR OF THE WASHINGTON POST: I beg leave to present through your columns certain facts which should aid those who, in and out of Congress, are seriously desirous of knowing the truth about the oil situation in California, now under discussion in the Senate. Presentments made on Monday represent a view of conditions so biased and confused as to be misleading. It is made to appear that prices of oil on the Pacific coast have been doubled or quadrupled under the 'war demand,' and that the producers and operators in oil represent the profiteering vice in its most open and shameless form. As a Californian fairly familiar with the general facts of the situation, I know these views to be mistaken; and, with your permission, I will set forth certain facts in proof.

"When the United States entered the war, in April, 1917, the wholesale market price of fuel oil in San Francisco was $1.30 per barrel. At a range of prices based upon this rate for fuel oil, petroleum products were in strong commercial demand, the supply not being greater than the consumption for ordinary uses. One railroad company, consuming annually a total of approximately 14,000,000 barrels of fuel oil (588,000,000 gallons), supplied its demands at these prices, and the same with other wholesale consumers. Prices were defined by the commercial balance of demand in relation to supply, and there was no criticism of them as extortionate or unreasonable.

"Upon our entrance into the war there came an increased demand for oil, largely upon industrial account, in part under direct governmental requirements, chiefly the former. Under increased demands the reserve or stored oil supply in California declined to such an extent that the Fuel Administration of the Government became apprehensive of an oil famine, or of some approach to it. With the purpose of promoting production, the Federal authorities asked the marketing oil companies in the various oil fields of the United States, including California, to advance the price to producers at the wells to the extent of 25 cents per barrel. Thus the price of fuel at the California wells (300 miles inland) was advanced from 98 cents per barrel to $1.23 per barrel. The immediate effect was an advance in the commercial rate at seaboard to $1.60 per barrel. At this rate since midsummer, 1918, 94 per cent of the oil produced in California has been sold in open market to ready buyers. Four per cent of the total California product has been taken by the Navy Department under special circumstances and at prices which have yet to be adjusted.

"These statements of fact, all easily subject of verification, disprove current assertions on the floor of the Senate and elsewhere of 'recent,' 'revolutionary,' and 'extortionate' movements in the California oil market. From the date of our entrance into the war until this time the advance in the wholesale market price of fuel oil at the California seaboard has been 30 cents per barrel; and for this increase the urgent recommendation of the Fuel Administration as above set forth accounts to the extent of five-sixths. To-day the marketing oil companies of California are paying $1.23 per barrel at the wells for a product which they are selling at the California seaboard at $1.60.

"There is obvious confusion in certain minds between oil prices on the Atlantic and on the Pacific coast. In truth, the two have no relation to each other, the conditions being fundamentally and essentially different. During the war prices for oil in the Atlantic market have been very much higher than in California. In recent months or weeks Atlantic prices have fallen off greatly, under circumstances easily understandable. There has been no relative decline on the Pacific coast, because the conditions have neither imposed nor justified it. There the supply does not more than equal the consumptive demand. Whereas since the armistice the eastern market is glutted with cheap Mexican oils, there is no material change in conditions on the Pacific. Within recent months there has been a relatively slight increase in the reserve or stored oil supply in California tanks, but the reserve stock is still far below what it was in 1916 and barely above the line of safety as defined by current requirements for general industrial purposes.

"It is true that there are consumers on the Pacific coast who protest against current prices for oil precisely as there are those who protest current prices for potatoes and shoes. If oil prices were one-half of what they are, there would still be those to protest. But prices as they stand to-day on the Pacific coast simply reflect the regulating force of commercial supply and demand. The value of any article is what it will sell for in a free and open market, and the oil market on the Pacific coast is both free and open. At prices as established by the balance of supply and demand, 96 per cent of the oil product of California is sold to ready buyers.

"ALFRED HOLMAN.

"WASHINGTON, July 29, 1919."

TREATY WITH COLOMBIA.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Committee on Foreign Relations has reported to the Senate the treaty with Colombia, which I understand is to be taken up for consideration on Monday. For the convenience of the Senate it seems to me that the treaty ought to be printed, showing, as in the case of reported bills, the suggested amendments of the committee. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the treaty be printed as a document so as to show, in the usual way, the proposed amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator stated that the treaty would be taken up on Monday. I assume that it will not be voted upon on Monday.

Mr. NORRIS. Probably not.

Mr. ASHURST. I should like to have an understanding that it is not to be voted upon on Monday.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, I am not able to give the Senator any guaranty. I am not in charge of the treaty, but I have no idea that it will be voted upon on Monday.

Mr. ASHURST. I shall have to be absent on Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the request of the Senator from Nebraska will be granted. The Chair hears none.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

H. R. 5418. An act increasing the pay of printers and persons employed in the Government Printing Office, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Printing.

The following bills and joint resolution were read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Immigration:

H. R. 6750. An act to deport certain undersirable aliens and to deny readmission to those deported;

H. R. 7930. An act to provide for the treatment in hospital of diseased alien seamen; and

H. J. Res. 163. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of Labor to lease the Charleston immigration station and dock connected therewith.

COMMERCIAL FEEDS FOR ANIMALS.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to call up Senate resolution No. 140, submitted by me on the 29th instant, which went over on Tuesday last on the suggestion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. I think that Senator has no further objection to the resolution, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission be, and it is hereby, instructed to make an investigation of the manufacture and sale of commercial feeds for animals; such investigation to include the gathering of statistics as to the supply of the various commodities which are used for animal feeds, together with the fluctuation in the prices of these commodities, the extent to which these commodities are converted into concentrated food by manufacturers; what combinations or understandings, if any, exist between the feed manufacturers and wholesale feed dealers and retail feed dealers; and what fraud, if any, is practiced by dealers in the way of misbranding or using inferior substitutes in mixed feeds.

Resolved further, That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, directed to cooperate with the Federal Trade Commission in this investigation.

CIRCULATION OF CURRENCY.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I ask that Senate resolution 142, coming over from the last legislative day, be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from Montana on the 29th instant, coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 142), as follows:

Whereas on the 22d day of July, 1919, the Secretary of the Treasury, in response to an inquiry of the Senate, sent to the Senate the following communication:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, July 22, 1919.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the United States of July 8, 1919, transmitted to me by the Secretary of the Senate under date of July 9, I submit the following:

Under the act approved May 30, 1908, commonly known as the Aldrich-Vreeland Act, as amended, additional or emergency currency was issued, beginning on August 4, 1914, in amount $382,502,645. All of this additional circulation was retired before the close of the calendar year 1915. Authority for the issue of such additional or emergency currency expired by limitation on June 30, 1915.

No emergency currency has been issued by the Federal reserve banks. However, such banks have issued Federal reserve bank notes and Federal reserve notes in accordance with the provisions of law and under the general supervision of the Federal Reserve Board. None was outstanding August 1, 1914. The amounts of such notes in circulation on July 1, 1919, were:

Federal reserve bank notes	$163,682,696
Federal reserve notes	2,493,992,462

The Treasury Department has no intention, nor, indeed, the power, to retire or withdraw from circulation any thereof, nor, as I am advised, has the Federal Reserve Board. The Federal Reserve System was devised to create an elastic currency which would expand and contract automatically in accordance with the requirements of business. Any reductions in the amounts of Federal reserve notes outstanding will be in accordance therewith. Federal reserve bank notes, for the most part, have been issued to replace silver certificates canceled and retired in accordance with the provisions of the act of April 23, 1918.

I transmit herewith a copy of the Treasury Department circulation statement for August 1, 1914, and July 1, 1919, showing the amount of money of the United States in circulation on the respective dates. Data are not available in the department with respect to the amount of money in circulation in the Territories and possessions of the United States.

Respectfully,

CARTER GLASS,
Secretary of the Treasury.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

And whereas in connection with the said communication the Secretary of the Treasury did transmit to the Senate the following tables and statements, to wit:

[1] Amounts of various kinds of money in circulation determined by deducting from the appropriate item in the general stock of money (Column I) the amount held in the Treasury as assets of the Government (Column II) and the amount held by Federal reserve banks or Federal reserve agents against issues of Federal reserve notes (Column III). Gold and silver certificates and Treasury notes of 1890 in circulation are represented in the general stock of money by equal amounts of gold coin or bullion and standard silver dollars held in Treasury for their redemption. (See Column I.) Amounts of Federal reserve bank notes and national bank notes are amounts of issues by Treasury to banks less amounts held in Treasury as assets of the Government.

[2] Includes $615,717,839.10 credited to Federal reserve banks in the gold settlement fund deposited with Treasurer of the United States.

And whereas it appears therefrom that the amount of money in circulation in the United States is nearly twice what it was, in volume and per capita, five years ago: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the aforesaid communication of the Secretary of the Treasury and the accompanying tables and statements be, and are, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and that that committee is hereby directed to consider the same and all thereof and to report to the Senate whether or not it is advisable for Congress to enact any legislation to provide for a gradual reduction of the amount of money in circulation; and if so, to report what legislation it deems necessary, expedient, or advisable to bring about some gradual reduction of the amount of money in circulation and to what extent and how rapidly such reduction should be had and what may be the views of the committee in general in the premises.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, this communication from the Secretary of the Treasury discloses that there is now in circulation in this country nearly twice the amount of money, in volume and per capita, that there was five years ago. Official statistics also show that the cost of living now is nearly twice what it was five years ago. The increase of money in circulation was originally occasioned, of course, by the outbreak of the European war, and was greatly accelerated by our entrance into the war. Undoubtedly it was necessary during the war. It is one of the workings of our admirable banking and currency law which serves an excellent purpose. It was intended that the law should work an expansion of our currency when needed and in time of war it was needed; but whether or not this state of affairs should be allowed to continue permanently in time of peace is a problem. If it should not be allowed to continue in time of peace, and if it be proper to retire some of the emergency currency, how soon and to what extent and by what method that should be brought about are puzzling questions. The communication of the Secretary of the Treasury does not indicate that there is to be any diminution in the amount of money in circulation in the near future and does not suggest any method by which that result may be brought about.

I think the volume of money in circulation is intimately connected with the cost of living, and I think the high cost of living in this country is having a ruinous effect in a number of ways. It has just about ruined the street railway systems of the country. Nearly every street railway in this country is either in bankruptcy or on the verge of bankruptcy; nearly all are being operated at a loss; and apparently they can get no relief. Owing to the rising cost of living, every once in a while the employees of the street railway companies demand an increase of wages; instantly there is a popular and universal clamor that the increase must be granted, and the street railway companies are faced with the alternative of granting the increase or having on their hands a ruinous strike. As a result they generally grant the increase. The increase, however, is no sooner granted, as a rule, than those who sell goods to street railway employees increase the prices of their goods. Then in a little while there must be another increase of wages, followed by another increase in price of the necessities of life. Thus an endless chain is put in operation. It works automatically.

Meantime cost of material has gone up; the price of everything the street railways have to use has increased greatly, and yet when the street railway companies ask city councils or State utility commissions or boards for the privilege of increasing their fares somewhat there is a popular clamor against it and the request is generally denied. As a consequence the street railway companies of the country are facing ruin, and some of them are already ruined.

A similar situation is apparent also in the case of the steam railways of the country. The wages of railway employees have been greatly increased of late years, and for the increase the people have to pay; passenger and freight rates are increased correspondingly to cover the increase in wages. I have seen a statement in the newspapers lately, coming from officials of some of the brotherhoods of railway employees, that if the cost of living continues to increase the employees will soon have to have another increase in wages. If they demand it they will probably get it under those circumstances, and then freight and passenger rates will have to be increased in order to meet the increase of wages. So there is another endless chain, and the people have to pay it all in the end.

Very recently the mining companies in Butte, Mont., have granted an increase of wages to their employees, an increase of $1 a day to all alike. That increase was only granted five or six days ago; in fact, it has not yet been accepted by all the unions; and yet I read in Montana newspapers that the bakers in Butte, Mont., have already served notice that they will immediately increase the price of bread 25 per cent, and it is reported that nearly everything else in the way of the necessities of life in that city is being increased correspondingly, and there is a great deal of dissatisfaction about it. So there is another endless chain. It is impossible to see where this process will end. We know that an inflated currency inflates prices; but if this process keeps on going the way it is now operating prices in their inflation are going to outstrip even the abnormal inflation of the currency.

I am not a financial expert, but we have in this body those who are—those who have long served on the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, who framed our present excellent banking and currency law, who have long been students of the subject; and I think we should have their views on the financial conditions which confront the country. Various committees of both branches of Congress are at work now investigating the high cost of living. The Federal Trade Commission has been engaged in investigating it. Numerous civic associations and associations of citizens are investigating the high cost of living. I think the cause of the high cost of living is found right here in this communication of the Secretary of the Treasury, who reports that there is nearly twice the amount of money in circulation in this country that there was five years ago, and gives no indication of an early diminution of it. I think attention should be called to it, for here, I think, is the prime cause of the high cost of living. There is no use of looking further.

This resolution does not initiate any legislation. It does not commit the Senate to anything. It simply refers the communication of the Secretary of the Treasury and the whole question to the Committee on Banking and Currency and asks that committee to report back to this body its views, and if it may make a report its report will be only advisory. It will not be binding on the Senate.

I, for one, think we should have all the advice on this subject we can get, and I want the views of the Committee on Banking and Currency on this all-absorbing question. The present condition of the cost of living is doing a great deal of harm. The other day I received a letter from a prominent merchant in Billings, Mont., who predicted that one year from now the cost of many of the necessities of life would be twice what they now cost. As he well said, the ever-rising cost of living is productive of Bolshevism and anarchy. It gives the Bolshevistic, anarchistic agitator a chance to go amongst the laboring men and embitter them against the tremendously high cost of living, as well as against their Government, and to tell them that they are suffering from it more than anybody else, and that they are not getting their share of the money and prosperity of the country. This is being done by the enemies of our country to-day, and the subject is such an important one that I think we ought to have the views of the Committee on Banking and Currency on it. I think there should be no opposition to it. Hence, I submit the resolution.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Montana if he knows or has observed that one of the causes of continued high prices, which constitute what is called the high cost of living, is the enormous appropriations of money by Congress to go into the market and purchase large supplies of food, necessaries of life, and ship them out of the country to foreign countries? There was one item of $100,000,000 for this purpose. It would be impossible to secure an appropriation of $1,000,000 to buy food for American citizens, but there is no difficulty at all about getting an appropriation of $100,000,000 to buy food for foreign people in various unknown parts of the world. I should like to ask the Senator, further, if he is aware that when this appropriation was asked for and rushed through Congress, it was openly urged in support of it that it ought to be made for the purpose of keeping up the prices of foodstuffs in the United States? I received and put in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD here, as the Senate was about to vote, telegrams from responsible people urging that I should vote for the appropriation of $100,000,000 in order to keep the prices of meats and other necessary foods from going down. That was urged as one of the reasons for it; and yet Congress is called upon to investigate the cause of the high cost of living!

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I will say in answer to the Senator from Washington that I think the matter he has referred to has had considerable to do with the high cost of living. I think undoubtedly it is one of the interrelated causes. I voted, as did the Senator from Washington, against the measure to which he has referred. I did not think it wise. I apprehended then that one of the results would be just what he has stated; but I think the principal cause of the high cost of living is found right here in this communication of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The cost of living to-day is substantially twice what it was five years ago. The amount of money in circulation is substantially twice what it was five years ago. It works just like a thermometer. As the volume of money increases the effect is registered in increased cost of living. The two go hand in hand. It is one of the laws of finance that as you increase the volume of money the prices of products and the cost of living are bound to increase. I think that was absolutely necessary during the war, but whether it should be kept up as a permanent thing in time of peace is a very grave problem. I do not think it should be. I think there is now in circulation more money than is necessary or wholesome. However, I want the views of the Committee on Banking and Currency on it. It will do no harm to have the views of that able and distinguished committee. I tell you this question of the ever-rising cost of living, still rising, with the summit evidently not yet reached and no end in sight, is full of trouble and is fraught with danger. We should have on it all the light obtainable. I think I have designated the cause. I want to know what our Banking and Currency Committee may think.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] has given notice of his intention to address the Senate to-day, and I do not want to interfere with his opportunity to do so, but before this resolution is disposed of I should like to address myself to it for a few moments. I hope, therefore, that it will not be pressed at this time.

Mr. MYERS. I am quite content to let the resolution go over until to-morrow, without prejudice. I should be glad to have the views of the able Senator from Colorado. I ask unanimous consent that that be done.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, before the request of the Senator from Montana is acted on I want to take a moment to refer to a letter which I received this morning. The letter is not addressed to me, but is addressed to one of my constituents. It is as follows:

LEAGUE TO ENFORCE PEACE,
New York, July 15, 1919.

DEAR SIR: Whatever may have been your response to our previous correspondence urging your cooperation in connection with our campaign to crystallize rural opinion behind the league of nations covenant, it is of extremely urgent importance that all friends of the league of nations proposition give immediate attention to the following suggestions:

Write immediately to your two Washington Senators at Washington, Senator W. L. JONES and Senator M. POINDEXTER, definitely urging their support of the peace treaty, including the league of nations covenant, passing on to them such evidence as you may have of prevailing sentiment in your community. Kindly urge similar action upon as many other outstanding leaders of public opinion as possible. The importance of this matter ought to preclude any possibility of delay in your response. Any delay now may be fatal to the cause.

Anticipating your prompt response to this suggestion, I am,

Very cordially, yours,

W. J. CAMPBELL,
Rural Extension Secretary.

Rural extension secretary, Mr. President, of the League to Enforce Peace, the name of which appears on the head of the letter.

I read this letter in order to call attention to the kind of agitation that is being created in this artificial way, by the use of vast sums of money, to form an apparent public opinion in favor of the establishment of what they denominate in the very head of their letter as a League to Enforce Peace—in other words, a central world organization not to bring about peace by creating good will among men but to bring it about by force. Of course, they can not enforce peace unless they have force and use force. If they are going to enforce peace throughout the world they will have to have force that is sufficient to coerce the world; and that is the object, the announced and proclaimed purpose, of this great organization.

The extent to which they are organized is indicated by the fact that they have a rural extension secretary. They have a secretary or an official for pretty nearly every imaginable element of the population. He is only one of a number of officers who are devoting their entire time, with unlimited resources, to creating in this country a false and spurious opinion, a superficial and artificial public demand, in favor of setting up a world power to coerce the United States and every other country in accordance with the particular views that some set of self-sufficient and irresponsible councilmen might have at some particular time as to what the world ought to do or ought not to do.

Among the other officials of this organization are Mr. W. R. Boyd, jr., national campaign manager; Mr. I. T. Jones, assistant national campaign manager; Allen P. Ames, information secretary; Tom Jones Meek, extension secretary and speakers' bureau. I may say in that connection that they have issued a textbook and circulated it in large numbers throughout the country for the purpose of educating their speakers in favor of the league of nations, telling them how to speak, how to approach the public, how to deal with the psychology of the situation. It is the most stupendous organization and propaganda in its various branches and affiliations, public and private, that the world has ever seen. Helen Varick Boswell, extension secretary, women's organizations; Walter J. Campbell, rural extension secretary; John H. Walker, labor extension secretary; Irwin Smith, assistant secretary.

Mr. President, it is perfectly evident that this letter is being sent out generally as part of a series of letters. Not long ago I called attention in the Senate to a circular which this same League to Enforce Peace was sending out, instructing its recipients in the several States how to proceed in the most skillful way to induce the people of the States to contribute money to the campaign fund of the League to Enforce Peace, going into details, telling them how to hold lunches, what to eat at the lunches, how much money to charge for them, and to make sure that the collections were made, because if the people paid a little they would then feel that they had a vested interest in this big movement.

I introduce this, Mr. President, simply as an incident, a reminder, of one, at least, of the many causes of this tremendous agitation with which we are confronted, this organized campaign to abandon the ideals and traditions of the fathers of the Republic, and to "make the supreme sacrifice" of establishing this "new order" in the world.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to state to the Senator from Washington that my own State is flooded with the same documents from which he read, frenzied solicitations for funds in order to create a spontaneous sentiment.

Mr. MYERS subsequently said: Mr. President, may it be understood that Senate resolution 142 goes over until the morning hour to-morrow without prejudice? I made the request a while ago, but I have not heard any ruling on it as yet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Without objection, the request of the Senator from Montana will be granted, and Senate resolution 142 will go over without prejudice.

TREATY WITH COLOMBIA.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I wish to announce that on Monday next, after the close of the routine morning business, I shall submit a few remarks on the Colombian treaty.

Mr. FLETCHER subsequently said: Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] gave notice of an address next Monday at the close of the routine morning business. I was going to ask him if he would not give that notice to follow the consideration of the calendar? We have been omitting the consideration of the calendar one Monday after another and doing nothing with it. There are a number of bills which can be acted upon in a very short while, and I was going to suggest that the address of the Senator from Minnesota follow the consideration of the calendar on Monday. The Senator, however, is not in the Chamber at this moment.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I simply desire to give notice that at the close of the morning business on Monday next, with the permission of the Senate, I shall address the Senate on the covenant of the league of nations.

RELATIONS OF ITALY TO FIUME.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I wish to give notice likewise that upon the termination of the addresses of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], if time permits, I will address the Senate with reference to the relations of Italy to Fiume.

AMERICAN PRINTING HOUSE FOR THE BLIND.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of H. R. 2847, providing additional aid for the American Printing House for the Blind, favorably reported by the Committee on Education and Labor. I will say that the bill was reported by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], and there is no objection to it from any source.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no objection to it, and there have been hearings held upon it. I understand it proposes to increase by some thirty or forty thousand dollars the appropriation for the printing establishment for the blind. There is a permanent appropriation for that purpose, and this bill, as I understand it, is to increase that permanent appropriation.

Mr. KENYON. It is merely an authorization.

Mr. SMOOT. The Committee on Appropriations felt that it ought to go to that committee before they put it in the last appropriation bill, being a permanent appropriation. I have no objection, but after it is disposed of I will object to any further consideration of bills on the calendar until the regular morning business is concluded.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of enabling the American Printing House for the Blind more adequately to provide books and apparatus for the education of the blind there is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually to it in addition to the permanent appropriation of $10,000 made in the act entitled "An act to promote the education of the blind," approved March 3, 1879, as amended, the sum of $40,000, which sum shall be expended in accordance with the requirements of said act to promote the education of the blind.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSFER OF SHANTUNG TO JAPAN.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, in accordance with the prevailing custom, I desire to give notice that on Tuesday next I shall address the Senate on that portion of the peace treaty which has reference to Shantung.

REPORT ON PACKING INDUSTRY.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a report from the Federal Trade Commission in response to Senate resolution 114.

Mr. KENYON. It is the report of the Federal Trade Commission in answer to the resolution of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. KENYON. I ask to have the report part read. Of course, we do not want to have it all read; but the report proper.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

Mr. SMOOT. Why not print the whole of it in the RECORD?

Mr. KENYON. That ought to be done, too. If it is too long to read, I will withdraw my request; but I do not believe the report itself is very long.

Mr. POMERENE. I did not understand the request of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Illinois is not present, and I simply suggested that if we are going to have any part of the report read, it would be best to have the whole report printed in the RECORD.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not object to that.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move that the report be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be referred, but the junior Senator from Iowa has a right to have it read.

Mr. CUMMINS. I assume that the report will be read; but I move that it be referred after it is read.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to have it read to a point where it appears to be too long to read further, and then I will withdraw the request.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the report is the document which the Secretary holds in his hands, it is evidently not a long one. It is a very important subject, and I think the report ought to be read. The papers that accompany it, of course, are not included in the report proper.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report, and was interrupted by

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the report be dispensed with, and that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I object to that, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Objection is made.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I have no objection to dispensing with the further reading of the report submitted in response to my resolution. I presume Senators will have abundant opportunity for reading it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made by the Senator from Wisconsin, and, of course, the reading of the report must be proceeded with.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the report, and was interrupted by

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I will not object to suspending the further reading of the report at this time if unanimous consent can be given to resume the reading of the report after the delivery of the speeches of which notice has been given by the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and also by the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. So I will make the request that the further reading of the report be suspended until after the delivery of those speeches of which notice has been given, and that then the reading be resumed and finished and the report be printed entire, consecutively in the order in which it was presented.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I suggest also at the same time that there is pending a motion, which was made by the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], who is chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, that this report be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the report will be suspended until after the addresses of which notice has been given shall have been concluded.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. RANSDELL obtained the floor.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield to me?

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MYERS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gay	McKellar	Sheppard
Ball	Gronna	Myers	Simmons
Brandegee	Hale	New	Smith, Ga.
Calder	Harding	Newberry	Smith, Md.
Capper	Harris	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Colt	Harrison	Nugent	Smoot
Cummins	Henderson	Overman	Spencer
Curtis	Johnson, S. Dak.	Page	Sterling
Dial	Kellogg	Penrose	Sutherland
Dillingham	Kenyon	Phelan	Swanson
Edge	Keyes	Poindexter	Trammell
Elkins	King	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Fletcher	La Follette	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Robinson	Watson

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] is necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], is detained on important business.

I wish also to announce that the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] are necessarily detained on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-six Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

The Senator from Louisiana is recognized.

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, in submitting some observations on the proposed league of nations and what I believe to be its efficacy in preventing future wars, I desire to preface my remarks by saying that I do not intend to discuss all the details of the covenant, its particular phraseology, or the various powers of the administrative bodies through which it is destined to function, nor to visualize the interpretation which may be placed on certain of its provisions. What I am principally concerned in, Mr. President, is the great overpowering principle it seeks to perpetuate—peace throughout the world.

The various articles of the league have been discussed and rediscussed in the Senate and the press of the land, as well as by innumerable public speakers, until its general provisions are very familiar to the American people. Its benevolent purpose is succinctly set forth in the preamble. Its object is to promote international cooperation and to achieve international peace and security. The signatory nations bind themselves not to resort to war, to pursue open, just, and honorable relations between each other, to establish firmly the understandings of international law as the actual rule of conduct, and to maintain justice and a scrupulous respect for all treaty obligations in their dealings with each other.

The league functions through an assembly, a council, and a permanent secretariat. The powers of the assembly are not very substantial, except in a striking particular pointed out later, and consist of admitting new States into the league by a two-thirds vote, upon proper guaranties being assured; of amending the covenant by majority vote, if concurred in unanimously by the council; of selecting the four additional members of the council; of considering disputes with the same powers as the council, if the council or a disputant requests it, and advising in regard to dangerous international conditions and treaties that need revision.

The council is the executive body of the league, and is made up of representatives of the United States, the British Empire, France, Italy, and Japan, and four other members selected by the assembly. Until appointment in aforesaid manner, the four members are Belgium, Brazil, Spain, and Greece. The council elects a secretary-general with approval of a majority of the assembly; makes plans for a reduction of armaments; advises how to control private manufacture of munitions; how to secure protection of territorial integrity and independence of members against external aggression; acts as a council of conciliation in disputes not referred to arbitration and makes recommendations; directs publication of statements by all parties; if its recommendation is unanimous, considers how to enforce it if necessary; if not unanimous, the majority and minority reports shall be published; considers how to carry out award of arbitration, if necessary; establishes a permanent court of international justice; recommends economic boycott measures against recalcitrant members, as well as means for cessation of intercourse and blockade; and recommends what military contribution each member shall make in punishing a nation which refuses to carry out the covenant.

The league contains many very practical provisions which, if they do not absolutely prevent war, will certainly lessen the probability of a resort to arms. The requirement by the members of full and frank information on the scale of their armaments and military programs is a salutary one, and will prevent the development of any huge war machine. The general provisions to defend each other's territorial integrity and independence against external aggression; to regard any threat of war as the business of the league; the prevention of intercourse with, and the financial and commercial boycott against, any covenant-breaking State; the obligation to join in resisting a member who refuses to be bound by the covenant, and to take the necessary steps to afford passage through their territory of the forces of any members which are cooperating to protect the covenant of the league; and the agreement not to make war in any case until three months after awards or recommendations are announced, are surely wise measures in the interest of universal peace.

Every word in the covenant has been subjected to the most critical analysis, and I am not vain enough to suppose that I can throw any more light on the subject. I wish, however, to call attention briefly to some harsh criticisms against the provision which gives in the assembly one vote to each country, whether great or small, and six votes to the British Empire, while the United States has only one. We have been told that it is outrageous for small, weak nations like Haiti, Panama, Liberia, Honduras, Hedjaz, and others to have an equal representation in the assembly with our mighty Republic of more than one hundred million souls.

The assembly is a parliamentary body which may well be called a parliament of man, composed of not more than three delegates from each nation in the league, who can cast only one vote. It is in reality a talk fest, where all disputes and troubles among nations are aired and talked over, thereby bringing to bear on them the powerful force of public opinion. The assembly may deal with any matter within the sphere of action of the league or affecting the peace of the world, and any member of the league may bring to the attention of the assembly or the council any matter which threatens peace.

At meetings of both the assembly and the council unanimous vote of all present at the meeting is required, except where otherwise expressly provided in the covenant.

Disputes not referred to arbitration shall be submitted to the council, which, if the trouble is not adjusted satisfactorily, shall, by a unanimous or a majority vote, publish a report containing a statement of the facts of the dispute, with proper recommendations. The council may refer the dispute to the assembly, and on the request of either party, made within 14 days after submission of the dispute to the council, it shall be referred to the assembly. In such case the assembly shall proceed under the same rules as govern the council; hence in this case a majority vote would suffice for the assembly to publish a statement of facts and recommendations in regard to an international dispute likely to lead to a rupture. This is surely not a power that would permit Liberia or Haiti or Hedjaz or Honduras, or a combination of a dozen such small nations, to inflict any injury on the United States. All such a combination could do against us, provided it could muster a majority of all votes at the meeting of the assembly, would be to publish to the world its finding of facts in some dispute to which the United States was a party, with its recommendations thereon. And it requires a vivid imagination to foresee how we could possibly be affected injuriously unless we were so clearly wrong that we richly deserved to be held up to the scorn of other countries.

Moreover, the assembly may from time to time advise reconsideration of treaties which have become inapplicable and the consideration of international conditions whose continuance might endanger the peace of the world. Therefore it has general authority to consider and advise by unanimous vote of all present at the meeting upon all subjects, treaties, and international conditions affecting the peace of the world, and on such disputes as are referred to it by the council it can, by a majority vote, publish a statement of facts coupled with recommendations.

All that the assembly can do is to "advise" or "recommend" to the membership of the league, or to nations not members of the league, what it believes to be best for the welfare of mankind. No possible harm can come from the consideration by accredited delegates of nearly every nation on earth of important national questions, and if all these delegates arrive at a unanimous decision it is practically certain to be correct. Nothing which this body could do could possibly injure the United States as long as we are doing right, while it might help us very much, and would surely assist in preventing many international troubles between other countries.

It is very important for nations, as for individuals, to talk over their difficulties. Nine-tenths of the trouble between citizens is due to misunderstandings which could readily be adjusted if they would meet face to face and explain their differences before resorting to violence or to litigation unfortunate to both. This is true, to a great extent, of nations, for what are they but an aggregation of citizens influenced by the same ideas and passions that control individuals. If national disputes could be presented to a great tribunal such as the assembly, with three delegates from every nation on earth, the best and brainiest men on the globe, and all the facts be thrashed out before these impartial judges, while the world looks on and listens, beyond question most troubles would be settled without resort to war. If we add the mighty force of world public opinion, resulting from the findings of this great conciliatory tribunal, to the disarmament and lack of preparation of the individual nations, provided by the league, and the international boycott against any country which goes to war in disregard of the league's covenants, and the fact that every member of the league would, of necessity, engage its military forces in order to enforce peace, a power too great to be resisted is created, and any would-be belligerent is compelled to accept a peaceful settlement.

If such a league as now proposed had been in existence 20 years prior to the recent war, how could it have occurred? The vast preparation for war in food, arms, munitions, soldiers, and submarines by Germany could not have been made; the armies of Germany, Austria-Hungary, Russia, Italy, and France would have been in the aggregate only a few hundred thousand instead of many millions, hence too small for serious warfare; the Balkan troubles, which have been a running sore on the body politic of Europe for years, would have been adjusted in some way long before 1914; Germany would have realized through discussions in the council and assembly that she could not conquer France and Belgium without inviting attack on her by the United States and Great Britain; indeed, it is inconceivable that there would have been a war if a league of nations composed of the principal countries on earth had existed prior to its outbreak. And if a league would have prevented this last awful war, why not other wars in the future?

Any man who in the spring of 1914 had forecast the terrible era of sorrow and devastation from which the world has just emerged would have been scorned like the soothsayer who admonished Cæsar to "beware the ides of March." Civilization had almost reached its pinnacle, we were told, and the genius and energy of man were to be devoted to the arts and sciences, to education and culture, to the pursuit of happiness, and to everything that makes life worth living. The fallacy of this belief has been proved by the unerring verdict of the history of the past five years. Man had relied too much upon the good faith and virtue of his fellow man. People trusted their governments to keep within the path of peace, to arbitrate and weigh and balance, and to make every honorable sacrifice in its interest, but all to no avail. Nations entered upon their separate international engagements with the firm resolve to avoid clash, and innumerable treaties and alliances were formed, but, unfortunately, these did not provide the cure. They were more or less local in character, based on purely selfish reasons, confined to two, or, at best, four or five, nations on the Continent of Europe, and were naturally all too narrow in scope to be of world-wide benefit. On the other hand, the concept of the league of nations includes every country on earth, and if it is to become a success it is necessary for substantially all the countries of the world to be members.

The recent conflict has conclusively demonstrated the absolute dependence of nations on each other. The time has passed when a war against an individual nation is merely an attack on that country. Unless the attempt is frustrated in the embryo, as provided by this league, every people of the world will finally become embroiled. President Wilson stated as early as March 27, 1916, in an address before the League to Enforce Peace:

> The longer the war lasts the more deeply do we become concerned that it should be brought to an end and the world be permitted to resume its normal life and course again. And when it does come to an end we shall be as much concerned as the nations at war to see peace assume an aspect of permanence, give promise of days from which anxiety of uncertainty shall be lifted, bring some assurance that peace and war shall always hereafter be reckoned part of the common interest of mankind. We are participants, whether we would or not, in the life of the world. The interests of all nations are our own also. We are partners with the rest. What affects mankind is inevitably our affair as well as the affair of the nations of Europe and Asia.

All the arts and sciences have progressed with the greatest rapidity during the last 50 years, especially the art of destroying life. The awful toll in human life and property in the recent world catastrophe is alarming. The official figures of the "battle losses" of all belligerents show 7,450,200, as per estimate of Col. Leonard P. Ayres, chief statistician, General Staff, in his book, The War with Germany. (See Appendix A.) This does not include deaths by disease, accidents, or other causes, but merely the men killed in action or who died of wounds received in battle. Compare this figure with the losses in the Crimean War (1854–1856), with England, France, Sardinia and Turkey, Austria, and Russia as belligerents, wherein 609,797 was the loss of life, which includes deaths by disease as well as in battle. In our own Civil War (1861–1865), the deaths in battle and from wounds were about 200,000; in the Franco-Prussian War (1870–71), 81,000; in the Spanish-American War (1898), about 2,800; and in the Russo-Japanese War (1904–5), 129,700.

The direct monetary cost of this war is approximately one hundred and eighty-six billions, of which the United States and its Allies expended one hundred and twenty-three billions, while the Central Powers expended sixty-three billions. (See Appendix B.) It is impossible at this time to even accurately estimate the total loss in life and treasure the world has suffered. The combined military and civilian deaths are estimated at from seventeen to twenty millions, and the cost at two hundred to two hundred and fifty billions. A correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph, February 4, 1919, page 6 (see Appendix C), states the figure at two hundred and forty-four billion six hundred and sixty million dollars, made up as follows: Two hundred billions for direct cost; fifteen billions for material damage; six billion two hundred and sixty millions for loss of production; and twenty-three billions four hundred millions as the economic value of the lost and disabled lives.

The sums expended in previous wars as compared with the direct cost of this mighty conflict seem paltry indeed. The Crimean War cost something like two billions; the American Civil War, five billions; the Franco-Prussian, two billion five hundred and thirty-four million; the Spanish-American, about one billion; and the Russo-Japanese War, two billions five hundred million. (See Appendix D.)

Mr. President, our only safe criterion for the future is the past, and just as the present war far exceeded in blood and treasure the great wars of the past, so will future wars exceed this one. If the art and means of killing progress in the same ratio as they have in the past, only divine interference can prevent the world from destroying itself. And we have every reason to believe that the next 25 to 50 years will see greater efficiency in the agencies of destruction. Capt. Thomas G. Chamberlain, United States Army, in his very interesting book, Why we Fought, page 40, says:

> I was in Paris when "Big Bertha," the German long-range gun, opened fire on the city. At regular 15-minute intervals the bursts occurred, and each burst spelled destruction and death. There were only 2 guns—why should there not be 200, with bursts occurring at intervals of a few seconds or continuously? I have seen a tank come up out of a shell hole, the sides of which were so steep that a man could not climb up. Tanks as large as locomotives—why not movable forts, with heavy guns?
> Recently an American flew over the city of London in a Handley-Page with 40 passengers. Within the last few months we have come to classify bombs by tons rather than by pounds, as previously. We know that an American scientist discovered a gas so deadly that a few bombs containing it would have destroyed every vestige of life in Berlin. Both sides so feared the resultant horrors that they hesitated at dropping gas bombs on cities. To consider the possibilities of the developed engines of war—the developed aeroplane, tank, long-range gun, gas bomb, gas shell, submarine, under the system of competitive armaments—is to arrive at the inevitable conclusion that civilization must here and now end war or be ended by it.

A typical concrete example of the wonderful advance in science is helium, a noninflammable gas peculiarly suited to dirigibles. It weighs only about twice as much as hydrogen, and is exceedingly light in comparison with air. As it does not combine with oxygen or any other substance, it can not explode or burn. It has, therefore, proved the ideal gas for dirigible balloons. The value of this gas before the war was about $1,700 a cubic foot. Our helium, on the other hand, can be produced in quantity at less than 10 cents a cubic foot, and if a new process of the Bureau of Mines fulfills expectations this figure will be still further reduced.

It is entirely feasible with the use of helium to construct and operate a dirigible with a steel casing carrying 1,500 men which can fly across the Atlantic in three days, and if one such dirigible, why not a thousand capable of carrying across the ocean in a few days an army of 1,500,000 men? This may seem a flight of the imagination, but it is no more improbable nor any harder to believe than was the feat of carrying over the ocean more than 2,000,000 men in one year without the loss of a single man. On the 1st of January, 1918, it was thought impossible to accomplish this task, and yet we know it was done, and that if the war had not closed early in November fully half a million additional soldiers would have crossed the sea before the end of the year.

Mr. President, the estimated prewar wealth of the United States was $220,000,000,000, while that of the United Kingdom was $85,000,000,000, of France $67,000,000,000, and Germany $78,000,000,000, equal to $230,000,000,000; or, the combined wealth of these three great countries, unquestionably the most powerful on earth, except our own, was only $10,000,000,000 more in the beginning of 1914 than that of the United States. All three of these countries have lost very heavily by the war, and their present wealth is nothing like as great as it was, while that of the United States is very much more. Beyond question the United States is now more wealthy than Great Britain, France, and Germany, with Italy, which was valued at $16,000,000,000 before the war, added to them. This statement is not made in a boastful spirit, but for the purpose which will appear as I proceed. Very much of our Nation's wealth is due to her commerce, which extends all over the world and reaches into every country on the globe. Our flag is now being carried into every sea by American vessels loaded with American manufactures and the products of our fields and mines. Our commercial relations are intimate, close, and important with all countries and reach colossal figures. Banks and financial connections have been established in the principal cities of all the important countries. Our consular and commercial representatives encircle the globe, carrying our business everywhere, placing us in direct contact with every nation and tribe under the sun, and as the years go on, with the marvelous impetus given to American industry, inventive genius, financial enterprise, and manufacturing ability, our business with other lands is bound to increase with wonderful rapidity. This is especially true because of the great merchant marine we are now building, which already gives us second place as an ocean carrier and will in the near future give us rank very little behind the mighty marine of Great Britain. Suppose a world war should happen between any two important countries, no matter which, would it not interfere greatly with our commerce, would it not step hard on the toes of many of our manufacturers and bankers and agriculturists and shippers? How could we avoid being drawn, sooner or later, into the war to protect our own interests? It is possible, though not probable, that we could avoid it, but what if another general war in Europe should take place, or a general war in Asia; does anyone conceive that the United States could keep out of it? Surely not. If for no other reason, business interest would compel us to participate. We could not remain neutral; we would be obliged to take sides and would be in the war before we knew it.

It was all right to have the United States beware of entangling alliances when we were a Nation of three to four million pioneers scattered over the vast expanse of our great country and separated from the Old World by 3,000 miles of ocean, traversed by small sailing boats. Isolation was practical and wise then; it is not now. Fast steamships connect us quickly with Europe. Aeroplanes fly over in a few hours and dirigible balloons in two or three days. The principal ports of the North Atlantic are infinitely closer in time and accessibility to Europe than was Boston to Philadelphia in Washington's time, when the stagecoach was the quickest means of transportation by land and sailing ships by water. What was good for the United States then is no longer a safe criterion for us to follow. If Washington and Jefferson were alive to-day they would not advise their beloved country to remain in its shell and avoid political alliances with the rest of the world, but would tell us to accept our manifest destiny as the leader among nations and the champion of human rights everywhere.

There is no nation in Europe that suspects the motives of the United States. Every one trusts her implicitly, and she alone can give breath to the league. She does not seek aggrandizement, territorial or otherwise, and she can look upon the merits and demerits of the league with unprejudiced mind, free from the rivalries of most of our European associates.

Mr. President, it is logical to expect that a great spiritual regeneration will soon sweep over the world. It is inevitable. Prior to the war people were slowly becoming indifferent to God, regardless of others' rights, negligent of the higher and nobler things of life, and so addicted to luxury and selfishness that a continued era of ease and effeminacy would have brought complete moral degeneration. False philosophy, pagan in its precepts, was being preached even in this country, and Germanized methods of education imitated in our schools. The world has been sorely chastened and emerges from this great war a better world than it was on August 1, 1914. While many horrible crimes were committed by the Central Powers in their lust of pride and strength, and some sins are doubtless chargeable to the soldiers and citizens of our country and its allies, who were far from perfection—all of us, enemies, friends, and ourselves, have poured out a big holocaust of blood and treasure in expiation. Our sins have been washed away in the blood of 20,000,000 human beings who died as soldiers in battle or from disease and wounds or as civilians from starvation, exposure, and sickness directly induced by the war.

The awful loss of human life, the frightful increase of human suffering, and the waste of human energy has sobered the world. I believe it is sometimes necessary for the Supreme Being himself to use dire catastrophe to temper men's souls and make them see light. Christianity would seem to be a farce and a pretense if 2,000 years after the Redeemer civilization should refuse to seize upon every possible instrumentality such as the world league to lessen war. Humanity must destroy war or war will destroy humanity.

In President Roosevelt's great speech on international peace before the Nobel prize committee, in Norway, May 5, 1910, he said:

> Finally, it would be a master stroke if those great powers, honestly bent on peace, would form a league of peace, not only to keep the peace among themselves but to prevent by force, if necessary, its being broken by others. The supreme difficulty in connection with developing the peace work of The Hague arises from the lack of any executive power, of any police power, to enforce the decrees of the court. In any community of any size the authority of the courts rests upon actual or potential force; on the existence of a police, or on the knowledge that the able-bodied men of the country are both ready and willing to see that the decrees of judicial and legislative bodies are put into effect. In new and wild communities where there is violence an honest man must protect himself; and until other means of securing his safety are devised, it is both foolish and wicked to persuade him to surrender his arms while the men who are dangerous to the community retain theirs. He should not renounce the right to protect himself by his own efforts until the community is so organized that it can effectively relieve the individual of the duty of putting down violence. So it is with nations. Each nation must keep well prepared to defend itself until the establishment of some form of international police power competent and willing to prevent violence as between nations. As things are now, such power to command peace throughout the world could best be assured by some combination between those great nations which sincerely desire peace and have no thought themselves of committing aggressions. The combination might at first be only to secure peace within certain definite limits and certain definite conditions; but the ruler or statesman who should bring about such a combination would have earned his place in history for all time and his title to the gratitude of all mankind.

Mr. President, this place and this title has been richly earned by Woodrow Wilson, and I venture the safe prediction that it will be accorded him in the years to come by the general opinion of the world. Indeed, sir, it will be a matter of common wonder 50 years hence that there should have been any opposition to the league of nations. By that time it will have proven such a beneficent institution that the world will cling to it with iron grip. The record of the discussion now in progress on the treaty will be reviewed many times in the future, and I can foresee the approval accorded to those of us who are putting this measure through despite the formidable character of the opposition. I am proud, sir, that my humble place in the record will show that I see clearly in this league one of the greatest boons which ever has come to mankind.

The same spirit of indulgence in the shortcomings of our fellow men, of brotherly love, of sympathetic assistance and support, which holds a nation together should be emulated by the nations themselves in their dealings among themselves. In times of war a citizen is renegade to duty who will not yield his personal interests to the national necessities. He must give his life, if need be, for his country's sake. This runs all through our national and municipal polity. Why should not nations be guided by these principles in dealing with each other? I believe international difficulties can be attributed as much to lack of confidence in the good faith of one another and doubt in the sincerity of each other's intentions as to any one cause. It is usually the fear of some commercial or military advantage that makes nations reluctant to fraternize rather than any actual animosity.

Mr. President, as a Louisianian I can not refrain from speaking of France and the trials through which she has passed. France is very close to the heart of Louisiana. As a young colony, my native State, then part of the big expanse of the original Louisiana Purchase, was composed almost entirely of people of French blood, and a large part of her present population traces its ancestry to La Belle France.

The United States, and especially Louisiana, looked with mingled feelings of pity and admiration on France in the awful days when, as the veritable bulwark of civilization, she was holding back the German hordes in their first mad rush on Paris. And had it not been for the wonderful gallantry and splendid prowess of French soldiers led by Joffre at the Marne, which stopped and drove back the hitherto victorious Germans, the war might have had a very different ending, with autocracy in the saddle and democracy set back for centuries. Free government on earth owes to France a debt of gratitude that can never be repaid, and, if for no other reason than to protect France from future German aggression, the league should be adopted.

Since the days of Lafayette, immortal in the hearts of Americans, we have loved France and her achievements, and this brotherhood has been indissolubly cemented by a bloody sacrifice on the altar of freedom under the leadership of Ferdinand Foch, generalissimo of all the allied forces, and by common consent the greatest military genius of the war. The French people will need international protection for years to come. They are entitled not only to the guarantee of Britain and the United States from any self-seeking, aggressive power, but the protection of every force on the earth which places the right of an independent people before the offensive, tyrannical power of an unscrupulous foe, and such a force will be furnished by this league.

Mr. President, after reading many discussions on the proposed league of nations and making a close study of its provisions, I have reached the following conclusions:

1. That the formation of a league of nations is a problem that can not be evaded, and the experiment can never be tried under more favorable conditions than now.

2. That the present system for maintaining peace by international alliances has failed, and a strong league of nations is the only means for preserving the peace of the world.

3. The possession of a powerful international police force, as contemplated under the league, would serve as an effective preventive of war. The success of the Monroe doctrine for 93 years without the need of armed intervention in a single instance fully illustrates the effect of a threat of force upon the conduct of the world without the necessity of its exercise.

4. A league of nations would mean the end of secret diplomacy and secret alliances based upon dynastic ambitions, and it would tend to create a strong feeling of international comity and good will.

5. It would secure material limitation of armaments by guaranteeing the different nations against sudden aggressive warfare, thereby excluding the main motive for military preparedness.

6. It would bring to bear upon international disputes and difficulties the organized public opinion of the world—the strongest force on earth.

7. It would bring about a beneficial understanding and in many cases a common agreement as to tariffs, spheres of influence, shipping rates, insurance, harbor dues, loans, and so forth.

8. It would lessen international trade rivalries and tend to the removal of economic barriers.

9. It would insure equal transportation charges on international rivers, canals, straits, and railroads for citizens of every State in the league.

10. It would effectually stop the pernicious activities against peace of vested interests, such as Krupps, and so forth.

11. It presents the only solution of the Far Eastern question. Shall China be exploited by Japan or assisted in development by a league of friendly powers?

12. It would render secret armaments impossible by means of an international bureau of inspection.

13. It would put an end to the maelstrom of world-power politics and create a new structure of international confidence and fair dealing.

14. It would insure important changes in international law under which the rights of neutrals would be amplified and more carefully safeguarded.

15. It would guarantee to the Jews in certain countries, for example, Russia and Roumania, freedom from oppression.

16. It would place under international control all investments and concessions in backward countries.

17. A league of nations, in contradistinction to an alliance of great powers, would mean the prevention of a policy designed to enable the victors to profit from the impotence of the vanquished; it would prevent the United States from reverting to an isolation which under present circumstances would be dangerously profitable, and thereby obviate any danger of a spirit of Prussianism on this continent.

18. It would prevent the United States from adopting a purely selfish economic policy, which would redound to the exclusive benefit of American capitalistic enterprise and condemn Europe to an imperialistic policy guaranteed by a preponderance of power.

19. It would render inestimable service to civilization by substituting compulsory arbitration for war. And the impartiality shown by international arbitral boards in the past leads to the conviction that a permanent arbitral board, or court of justice, would be a safe and unbiased judge of future international disagreements.

20. It would stimulate democratic ideas and institutions now taking shape in Europe and the Old World.

21. It would create a spirit of brotherhood and kindly feeling among all nations as a result of the better understandings and more thorough knowledge which would necessarily follow the annual meetings of the assembly.

22. It would compel obedience to its decrees by means of an international boycott.

23. And while a league of nations may not entirely prevent an occasional war, there is not the slightest doubt that it will prevent most wars and have a vastly beneficial effect on the affairs of mankind.

Mr. President, the idea of a world league is not a novel one. For more than six centuries the great leaders of every civilized nation have preached the organization of an international union. It has been an ideal for years, and now the time is ripe to carry the beautiful theory into practice.

There have been many plans suggested for such a league. Notable among them is that of Pierre Dubois (1306 A. D.), a Frenchman living in Normandy. This plan was the first, and created a general council of princes and prelates, which would choose, in each case that might arise, a council of nine arbitrators to give judgment. Emeric Cruce, also a Frenchman, published a plan in Paris in 1623. His league of kings was to establish a permanent court of arbitration by keeping special representation at Venice for the purpose of settling differences. If any king were dissatisfied with the court's decree and refused to be bound by it, then "he would receive the disgrace of all other princes, who would find means to bring him to reason."

The plan of Hugo Grotius, the Dutch publicist and statesman, published in 1625, was a powerful contribution to the cause of peace. Grotius stressed the need of congresses of Christian powers before which the controversies which might arise among some of them would be decided by others who were not interested, and in which measures would be taken to compel the parties to accept peace on equitable terms. The great design of Sully (1638), minister of finance to Henry the Fourth of France, provided for a union of Christian princes, but was really aimed at the reduction of the influence of the house of Austria and contemplated the leadership by France of united Europe.

William Penn, founder of Pennsylvania, in 1693 published his essay toward the present and future peace of Europe, providing for a general European parliament wherein representation was to be based on wealth.

The idea of Abbe de St. Pierre was published anonymously at Cologne in 1712. It outlined a plan for a union of all Christian sovereigns, with a permanent congress composed of the personal representatives of all the sovereigns within the league. The congress was to consist of 24 deputies, before whom all disputes were to be laid. The controversy could receive a provisional settlement by a mere majority of votes, but a definitive adjustment required a three-fourths vote of the members.

The plan of the Englishman, Jeremy Bentham, was promulgated in 1839. All disputes arising between members should be referred to a general congress of the powers for settlement, and if necessary the decisions of this body were to be enforceable by arms. Bentham prognosticated, however, that the provision for enforcing the decrees of his "congress" by arms would be quite unnecessary, "for a free press could be counted upon to create an organized public opinion that would be amply sufficient as an instrument of coercion." Emphasis was laid on the need of limited armaments.

The German philosopher, Immanuel Kant, in 1795, published his plan, which was based on a voluntary union of free States, no State being compelled to remain within the confederation against its wishes. He was firmly convinced that the human mind would ultimately devise a scheme for perpetual peace "to take the place of those mere suspensions of hostility called treaties of peace."

Czar Alexander I of Russia proclaimed on September 26, 1815, what he considered the permanent basis of future European cooperation, showing the urgent necessity of a brotherhood of monarchs founded upon "the sublime truths of the religion of God, our Savior."

In connection with the present organization of the league, the plan of William Ladd, a New England farmer, published in 1846, will prove interesting. Under the title of "An Essay on a Congress of Nations," he advanced a scheme consisting of two parts: First, a congress of ambassadors from all those Christian and civilized nations who should choose to send them for the purpose, among others, of devising and promoting plans for the preservation of peace and ameliorating the condition of man, each nation to be limited to one vote, no matter how numerous were the ambassadors; and, second, for a court of nations, composed of the most able men in the world, to judge such cases as should be brought before it by the mutual consent of two or more contending nations. The former has many attributes quite similar to the assembly of the present covenant, and the court of nations is much like the council.

Unlike previous plans, which required merely a majority or three-fourths of the members of the congress, Ladd's plan provided that no law "should be established unless it had the unanimous consent of all the nations represented at the congress," to be subsequently ratified by the respective governments represented. His idea, however, lacked the power of compulsion, which the present league affords.

Mr. President, the peace treaty of which the league is a part represents the untiring effort of 32 nations, the largest number ever assembled at one council table. It is remarkable that after seven months the Senate should have submitted to it for ratification a treaty of such magnitude, and incorporated in it the provisions for which the lovers of world peace have so long yearned. With the vast territorial and racial problems to be settled, and troublesome questions out of all proportion to historical precedents to be adjusted, it is truly wonderful that President Wilson can bring back to the Senate such a treaty signed by nearly every acceptable major country of the world.

The league of nations is the product of the best minds of the world. Its authors labored persistently at their task of producing it for many months, aided and assisted by suggestions and criticisms from the publicists, thinkers, and statesmen of all great nations, with the exception of Germany. The United States was represented in this mighty conclave by President Wilson and four of our ablest men, assisted by several hundred experienced historians, students, and men of affairs, some of whom were thoroughly familiar with every subject presented for consideration. France, Great Britain, Italy, and Japan, who, together with the United States, constituted the big five at the council table, were headed by the best intellect of their countries, under the leadership of Clemenceau, Lloyd-George, Sonnino, and Saionji—statesmen who have been making world history for many years—and each of the other 27 nations who sat at the council was represented by its strongest men—conspicuous among whom was the Greek Venizelos—all of them actuated in creating the league by motives of patriotism and humanity. A better equipped body of men from 32 nations never assembled on earth, nor one more impressed with the magnitude of the task imposed upon them—to devise ways and means for effecting the peace of the world. The completed work is before us. It is not perfect, but as nearly so as anything human can be, considering the conflicting interests of the various parties to the covenant and the wide divergence of views natural to honest men from so many lands, and the necessity of compromise in order to arrive at a final decision.

I have studied the league closely, have given to its provisions the best thought of which I am capable, and my firm conviction is that it meets the end desired—universal peace—as closely as any human agency can. Of one thing I am certain. The old order has failed. The world has suffered from repeated warfare since the beginning to the present day. The people of the world are war sick.

The pride, jealousies, and selfishness of nations, together with their failure to submit to some arbitrable body with constituted authority to settle their aggravated disputes, have led to the mutual misunderstanding and distrust which eventuated in war. Confidence can no longer be placed in the old international order; there must be something new. Men demand an effective guaranty against the wholesale slaughter of their children and the ruthless destruction of their property. The war from which we have just emerged has left its eternal imprint upon the hearts of both actors and audience; the world has suffered too great a holocaust to ever become indifferent. It yearns for some practical instrumentality devised by the common concert of all nations and armed to enforce its decrees.

It is incomprehensible to me that after the suffering and sacrifice of this war we should not organize a world league. Europe has borne the brunt of the fighting; her young men were killed, her industry destroyed, her civic ability crippled, and it would be a catastrophe, indeed, for America to sign the peace treaty with Germany and leave our allies to their fate. We gave freedom, prosperity, and happiness to Cuba, and with our aid it rose from its ashes to become a thriving republic. We have ruled the Philippines with kindly wisdom most helpful to their people and have given them a large measure of self-government preparatory to full independence. Why not extend the same guiding hand and friendly assistance to the nations of Europe, which suffered so cruelly from the war? In the proeess of reconstruction among the new States that grow out of the old empires of Germany, Austria-Hungary, Turkey, and Russia there will be many discordant elements hard to fuse into the pure metal of real democracy. America must take her part in their upbuilding.

Everyone demands that something should be done in order to save mankind from the horrors of war. There is very general opinion that a league of some kind to enforce international peace must be adopted. The covenant before us presents a concrete, definite plan which, to the ordinary man, seems feasible and workable. It has been subjected to very harsh criticism on the floor of the Senate and elsewhere, but no one has suggested a satisfactory substitute. Its enemies submit all sorts of objections to this particular league, but propose nothing in its place. They are agitators of destruction, not statesmen of construction. Do we wish a repetition of war every few years with all its horrors and sufferings and loss of life and property; war which Gen. Sherman described as hell; war which is the worst enemy of the human race; war which forces our nearest and dearest, the strongest and best young men in the country to give their bodies as cannon fodder; to pour out their blood like cattle in the shambles; to die under burning suns with no water to moisten their parched lips, sobbing and moaning as life ebbs away; to die amid the snows of winter in the trenches waist deep in icy water, high in the air amidst the fierce aeroplane battles, from torpedoes and other terrors of the sea, from countless diseases brought on by exposure, far away from home, wife, and mother, in scenes too horrible to contemplate and impossible to describe? No pen can paint the horrors of war suffered by the soldiers nor attempt a description, for instance, of the agony endured by the civilian population of Armenia during the recent war, when millions were starved and tortured to death amidst inconceivable misery; of Russia, whose people were murdered like flies by the cruel Huns; of Belgium and northern France, where no mercy was shown to young or old, to little children, to spotless virgins, to ministers of God—words fail completely to paint such horrors. A vivid word picture which gives a faint idea of war's terrors is drawn in a letter by a wounded soldier printed in Why We Fought (p. 92), which I quote:

To the EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

To those who oppose the proposed league of nations, either because they are not in favor of the policies of our President (which would be very narrow minded of them), or because of some other reason, and who were unable to be in a battle, I address the following:

You who have never seen the horrors of war, who have never seen a man disappear, literally blown to atoms, on being struck by a shell, who have never heard the shrieks of wounded human beings, who have never heard the hysterical laughter of a man as he gazes at the stump where his hand was a moment ago, who have never heard the cries, the groans, the swearing, the praying of men with festering wounds, lying in a first-aid station, waiting too long and in vain for ambulances, who have never witnessed the terror of those men when the station is gassed and there are no gas masks, who have never seen convalescents totally blind and with both hands amputated above the wrists, can you say that we should stop at anything in order to prevent this frightfulness, this savagery, this horror from occurring again? Is there any other way than by a league of nations and combination of power? Will a simple treaty among the greater nations prevent a recurrence of such an attempt as Germany has made? Is not the league of nations, as proposed, elastic enough and broad enough, whatever its defects, to insure world peace? Is it not a step, and the only possible step, in the right direction? I firmly believe so. If there is another way, speak it out. If not, for God's sake stop opposing this one remedy.

WYMAN RICHARDSON.
(Wounded in action.)

BOSTON, March 18, 1919.

In this same very interesting little book, page 55, I find a bit of verse written by a "buck" private in a letter to his mother, depicting the awful situation, and pleading to make this war the last:

Why is this strife and turmoil
Loose in the world to-day?
Why are the armies gathered?
Why is this warlike display?
Each night the flare of the cannon
Paints the northern skies all red,
Each eve are hundreds of missing—
Missing, wounded, or dead.

Farmers are gone from the harvest,
Husbands are gone from their wives,
The earth is plunged in sorrow,
Mourning a million lives.
Children cry for their fathers,
And women grieve for their men,
Mothers, half doubting, are praying
Their sons shall return again.

Towns and cities are ruined,
Thousands of fields lie bare;
War holds earth in her clutches,
The sea and the land and the air.
What can the old war offer
As a recompense for this?
Can the things we shall gain ever banish
The forms and the faces we miss?
What of the wife now a widow,
And the mother whose sons are gone?
Will peace bring back our missing,
And happiness go on?

Cheer up, O grieving mothers,
And all of you who mourn;
Our dead are dead victorious,
For the larger world unborn.
To them fell the task of the ages
And, oh, how gloriously
Have they fought and died and suffered
To free humanity.

Free from the bands and the shackles
That bound us to the past;
Free from the strife and struggle,
And to make this war the last.
Free, and each man is kindred
To a hundred million others,
And earth again an Eden
Where men may dwell as brothers.

And yet, Mr. President, as terrible as this war was, if the league of nations be not adopted and no concert of powers be entered into to preserve peace, we have every reason to believe that within a few years—10 to 20 years at the most—another war far greater than this will take place. If no league be formed to insist upon disarmament, to reduce the size of armies, to prevent preparation for another war by limiting ammunition, ordnance, war material of every kind; if science be permitted to continue the production of destructive agencies, such as gases far worse than those now known, which can destroy a whole city, long-range guns, like Big Bertha, throwing sufficient deadly poisons and bombs to wipe out Paris in a few hours; devices to gather electricity from the air and hurl its bolts in such size and numbers as to destroy armies; submarines incomparably more effective than those which did such terrible work in this war; aeroplanes and dirigibles completely mastering the air and bringing opponents within a few hours of each other, though separated by thousands of miles—in fact, everything imaginable, and far more than I can dream of, to kill men, to destroy property, and reduce the world to sav-agery—then Heaven help us. Something must be done, and that quickly, to prevent the coming of such a day. This picture is not overdrawn. It does not paint half the truth.

Never was there such a war as the one just closed. Never were so many men engaged in battle; never were so many troops mobilized. Fully 60,000,000 were enlisted in the various nations. Upward of 7,500,000 were killed directly in the fighting or died from wounds in battle, while the deaths from disease among the soldiers and the civilian population directly due to the war was at least 10,000,000, or a total loss in human life from battle and disease of 17,500,000 human beings. The cost in money directly expended on the war was about $186,000,000,000, only $34,000,000,000 less than the total estimated wealth of the United States and all its possessions when the war broke out, and the indirect losses were $50,000,000,000 more, a total of $236,000,000,000.

These are big figures and hard to comprehend. We know things by comparison, however, and to give something like an idea of the loss in blood and treasure in this war I will compare it with the world wars from 1793 to 1914, a period of 121 years. During this period occurred the great Napoleonic wars, when all of Europe was fighting, with slight intermissions, for 22 years; the Crimean War, involving five of the greatest nations of Europe; the Civil War in our own country, which rent our Union asunder for 4 cruel years; the Franco-Prussian, the Russo-Turkish, the Russo-Japanese, the Balkan wars, and others—a total of 21 great wars. In these mighty conflicts, extending through a century and a quarter, the loss of life from battle and disease was only 5,098,097, and the armies in the field numbered only 16,822,200 men, while the total cost of all those wars was estimated at about twenty-four billions. (See Appendix D.) It thus appears that in the late World War 50 per cent more men—7,450,200—were actually killed and died from wounds than the total number of those who were killed and died from wounds and also from disease in the wars of the previous 121 years; and that the cost of this war—one hundred and eighty-six billions—was eight times as great as the total cost of all the wars of all the world for the previous 121 years.

These figures speak in thunder tones, and yet, in my honest opinion, the cost of this war in blood and treasure will be just as far below the cost of the next world war in money and human life as this war exceeds in these units the combined world wars of the past century and a quarter. Our only safe criterion for the future is the past, and just as the late war far exceeded all the great wars of the past, so will the future wars exceed it.

Mr. President, do we desire an increase of the already exorbitant war taxes which burden us to the limit of endurance and are to remain with us for a great many years? Yet our lot in this respect, though burdensome, is light in comparison with that of our allies—Belgium, France, Italy, and Great Britain. It therefore behooves everyone who wishes to get rid of this heavy load to favor the adoption of the league, thereby assuring peace, for another war will certainly double or treble the amount of our taxes.

Can anyone contemplate such a possibility as this and yet have patience with the men who oppose the league of nations? We must have a league of some kind or the world will relapse into savagery. Without a league, without an effective organization to prevent war and enforce peace, civilization will cease to exist. When one considers the mighty stake in this great race does it not seem the height of folly to quibble and complain about each and every detail of the covenant, about paragraph this and article that, about a possible construction which may be placed on article 10 or article 15? Does it not seem incredible that men should fuss so much about details, about whether this "i" should be dotted or that "t" should be crossed, when the fate of humanity hangs in the balance?

In this most trying hour the United States is the sole hope of mankind. If our mighty Republic fails to ratify the league the league will fail, and if the league fails the various nations of the world will continue the same mad effort for physical superiority, for commercial supremacy, for self-aggrandizement, which Germany pursued so intelligently and heartlessly for the last 40 years.

Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan, aye, and the United States, too, will not be caught napping again, as they were caught by Germany on August 1, 1914. If the dance of death, the war of hell, is to go on, then we must prepare, and the other nations of the world must prepare, and prepare they will to the utmost of their ability. The world will breathe spasmodically for a few brief years, and then the great nations will spring at each others' throats far more actively, with far more power, with far more destructiveness than they evinced in the last great struggle. At the close of the next general war darkness will settle upon the world; men will move back more than 20 centuries; there will be a long reign of absolute force; and Christian civilization, with all the good things it has done for humanity, will cease to exist.

One can not contemplate such an awful possibility in this year of our Lord 1919. Nearly 2,000 years since the Prince of Peace made his advent on earth, 2,000 years in which the world has gotten to be a much better place than it was when Christ was born. Then war was the principal business of mankind and all prisoners of war were enslaved. Athens, the center of ancient civilization, art, and science, had only 20,000 freemen and 400,000 slaves. At that time women possessed no rights that men were bound to respect, and divorce was almost universal. Hospitals and asylums for the relief of human suffering were unknown on earth. There were no homes for destitute babes and old people who had no one to care for them. It was a cold, sad world in which men were but little removed from savages, owing to the constant warfare in which they were engaged, when the Babe of Bethlehem took human form. For the past several centuries wars have been the exception instead of the rule. As I have shown above, during the last 121 years we have had only 21 wars, about one every five years. This compares very favorably with the record during the first 600 years of the Roman Republic, during which the Temple of Janus, open in time of war and closed in time of peace, was closed but for four brief periods. Slavery has been practically abolished. Women are entitled to most of the rights enjoyed by men, even the right to vote being granted them in many enlightened countries. The number of divorces has greatly decreased, though unhappily it still exists. Asylums, homes, hospitals flourish on every side and loving care is given to every human being from the helpless foundling to the unfortunate Magdalen, the aged destitute, and the prisoners in our jails and penitentiaries. Many men believe that they are their brothers' keepers and practice the beautiful philosophy of brotherly love. With such a state of affairs, with humanity so improved, so forward looking, so anxious to do the better things of life, how can we hold back from this magnificent league for peace, this movement inaugurated 2,000 years ago by the Saviour of mankind, at whose coming the angels sang peace on earth?

Mr. President, I ask permission to insert in the RECORD, as addenda to my remarks, without reading, some tables which explain a little more fully several matters to which I have referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GAY in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The tables referred to are as follows:

APPENDIX A.

THE WAR WITH GERMANY—A STATISTICAL SUMMARY.

[By Leonard P. Ayres, colonel, General Staff, Chief Statistics Branch.]

Battle deaths in armies engaged in present war, 1914–1918 (p. 119, Table 9).

APPENDIX C.

COST OF THE WAR.

[The Daily Telegraph, London, Feb. 4, 1919, p. 6, from a correspondent.]

The writer accepts the sum of $200,000,000,000 given by the Federal Reserve Board as correctly representing the direct cost of the war.

The subject of indirect cost is purely conjectural. What we do know, however, of the havoc wrought in France and Belgium warrants conjecture on the big scale. Other countries—Poland, Lithuania, eastern Prussia, the Bukovina, Galicia, Serbia, Roumania, Macedonia, the Trentino, and our own east coast—have also suffered severely. M. Augustin Hamon put this devastation down at $10,000,000,000, but that was before the last great drive of Marshal Foch, in the course of which the enemy burnt or blew up every town and village through which he retreated. Fifty per cent might perhaps be now added to M. Hamon's figure without exposing it to the charge of exaggeration. Then there is the incalculable loss caused by the removal of productive plant, the forced suspension of industry, the interference with the world's overseas commerce, the disorganization of the world's industry and finance, and the unproductiveness, for the time being, of the 50,000,000 men engaged in military and other duties connected with the war or held in readiness for warfare.

CLASSIFICATION OF COST.

Take the last of these items, and let it be supposed that only half the number were taken from industrial occupations. Let it be further supposed, in the interests of moderation, that their average productive power over and above the costs of material, labor, etc., was not more than $125 a year, also that their average period of purely military duties was limited to two years. This would give us a loss of $250 per man, or $6,250,000,000 in all. Then there is the capital value of the killed and permanently disabled. Without counting Belgium, Serbia, Japan, and Portugal, the losses in killed were over 5,500,000, and the number of wounded incapable of returning to any occupation from two to three million. Altogether it seems fair to reckon that not fewer than 9,000,000 men between the ages of 18 and 48 have been sacrificed. If we put their average earnings down at no more than $5 a week and their average probability of life at only 10 years, we get an economic loss of $23,400,000,000. This is to value each man, taking one with another, at $2,600, whereas some economists put it as high as $5,000. There is the further consideration that the great majority of these victims, if not all of them, were potential taxpayers and that their removal puts a heavier burden on those who are left. We may now sum up these classifications of cost. We have $200,000,000,000 for direct costs; $15,000,000,000 for material damage; $6,250,000,000 for loss of production; and $23,400,000,000 as the economic value of the lost and disabled lives, making $244,650,000,000—nearly $250,000,000,000. As a set-off against the possibility of some overlapping we may put the indirect costs of diminished trade and financial disturbance.

Edgar Crammond, an Englishman, in an address on "The economic outlook," delivered before the Institute of Bankers March 25, 1919, which was summarized in the Journal of Commerce April 10, 1919, pages 3 and 8, and in the Washington Post March 27, 1919, page 2, estimated the direct cost of the war to the Allies at $141,800,000,000, and to the Central Powers at $68,375,000,000. He estimates the total cost of the war, including indirect losses, at $260,000,000,000.

APPENDIX D.

[From Massachusetts Commission on the Cost of Living. H. R. No. 1750. Boston, May, 1910, pp. 201–207.]

The following figures, covering the period from 1793 to date, 117 years, incomplete as they are, make an impressive exhibit of the waste of life and treasure that militarism has brought to civilization:

Dates.	Countries engaged.	Cost.	Loss of life.	Armies in the field.
1793–1815.	England and France	$6,250,000,000	1,900,000	3,000,000
1812–1815.	France and Russia	450,625,000	.....	1,500,000
1828.....	Russia and Turkey	100,000,000	120,000	.....
1830–1840.	Spain and Portugal (civil war)	250,000,000	160,000	300,000
1830–1847.	France and Algeria	190,000,000	110,000	150,000
1848.....	Revolts in Europe	50,000,000	60,000	.....
1845.....	United States and Mexico	.....	10,000	90,100
1854–1856.	England	371,000,000	609,797	1,460,500
	France	332,000,000
	Sardinia and Turkey	128,000,000
	Austria	68,000,000
	Russia	800,000,000
1859.....	France	75,000,000	24,000	128,000
	Austria	127,000,000	.....	200,000
	Italy	51,000,000	.....	50,000
1861–1865.	The rebellion	5,000,000,000	294,400	2,041,600
			200,000	750,000
1864.....	Denmark, Prussia, and Austria	36,000,000	.....	.....
1866.....	Prussia and Austria	330,000,000	57,000	639,000
1864–1870.	Brazil, Argentine, and Paraguay	240,000,000	330,000	.....
1865–66...	France and Mexico	65,000,000	65,000	100,000
1870–71...	France	1,580,000,000	311,000	1,713,000
	Germany	954,400,006
1876–77...	Russia	803,547,489	180,000	1,500,000
	Turkey	403,273,745
1898.....	Spain and the United States	1,165,000,000	20,000	300,000
1900–1901.	Transvaal Republic and England	1,000,100,000	91,000	400,000
1904–5....	Russia and Japan	2,500,000,000	555,900	2,500,000

Expense of wars, 1793–1860	$9,243,225,000
Expense of wars, 1861–1910	$14,080,321,240
Total	$23,323,546,240
Loss of life, military service	5,098,097
Armies in the field	16,822,200

The figures are estimates, but estimates by trained scholars and statisticians, and they can, after all, represent only a small part of the loss of life and treasure.

The cost of the Napoleonic invasion of Russia in 1812 and the subsequent wars, which ended in the overthrow of the Emperor of the French, are from figures given by Jean S. Bloch, and cover only the actual loans, issues of paper "assignats" to meet military expenses, and the English subsidies paid to Russia. The destruction of Moscow and the enormous waste in other directions are not calculated.

The waste and the loss which the Napoleonic era, including the French revolutionary, directory, and consular wars, inflicted on Italy, The Netherlands, the German kingdoms and principalities, Spain, Portugal, and Egypt, have not been estimated; but, economically, financially, and humanly, they must have been enormous. Leroy Beaulieu states that the age of the revolution and the empire cost France $4,200,000,000, and up to the year 1799 her loss of men amounted to 1,500,000.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. OWEN obtained the floor.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FALL. I wish to give notice that to-morrow morning, immediately after the close of the routine morning business, I shall address the Senate on the league of nations.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the Senate of the United States is facing its greatest responsibility in the history of the Republic. We are face to face with the acceptance or the rejection of a treaty of peace with Germany, and the acceptance or rejection of a covenant establishing a league of nations and a new world order of liberty, justice, and humanity.

In a great enterprise of this character we must not permit ourselves to deal with the shadows; we should deal only with the substance.

The treaty with Germany establishes the disarmament of Germany as a great vital fact, absolutely breaks its military and naval power, its dynastic ambition and militarism, and compels reparation for the damage done by the German people. It compels the German and Austrian Governments to recognize the rights of subject peoples heretofore dominated by Germany and her allies. They are compelled to recognize the Poles, the Czecho-Slovaks, the Jugo-Slavs, and to recognize the new boundaries of these peoples and their right to self-government, their right of self-determination, and equitable treatment to their commerce and industry. The reduction of the military power of Germany is an event of the first magnitude. It is the reduction of the only great power which in modern times has entertained the ambition of world dominion; it is the reduction of the only great power deliberately building up a military force for aggrandizement, for annexation, for indemnity, and for profit. The reduction of German war power and lust for dominion by this war and by this treaty is one great fact that must color everything which follows. Above all, there is established by a world agreement the covenant of the league of nations with a force of sufficient financial, commercial, military, and naval power to command the peace of the world for all time.

I have studied the covenant of the league of nations with care. I have read many speeches hostile to this covenant, and have weighed the arguments against the covenant. I have found them very hypercritical, partisan, and without convincing force.

I am profoundly convinced that it is my duty as a Senator of the United States, representing the people of the United States, to give this covenant my support without amendment or reservation. I regard it as my duty to the world to support this covenant.

Mr. President, the peace of the world might have been secured by the conventions at The Hague in 1899 and 1907 if it had not been for the military autocracies governing Germany, Austria, Bulgaria, and Turkey, whose representatives refused to agree to arbitration or to disarmament and who, when ready, violated all The Hague conventions and their solemn treaties with other nations in their violent attempt in 1914 to establish world dominion.

The great obstacle to world peace of 1899 and 1907 is happily removed.

These autocratic military governments are now disarmed. They will be compelled to accept the principles of international morality, and it may well be believed that with the overthrow of the military autocracies which governed these peoples, which dominated and drove them into battle, the people themselves will soon realize their deliverance and will appreciate and support with heartfelt loyalty the new world order.

Mr. President, the great conflict between military autocracy and the growing democracies of the world was almost unavoidable. The Romanoffs, the Hohenzollerns, the Hapsburgs, and the Bourbons, by the Secret Treaty of Verona, had sworn, in 1822, to destroy the democracies of the world. That treaty, articles 1 and 2, provided:

ARTICLE 1. THE HIGH CONTRACTING POWERS BEING CONVINCED THAT THE SYSTEM OF REPRESENTATIVE GOVERNMENT IS EQUALLY AS INCOMPATIBLE WITH THE MONARCHIAL PRINCIPLES AS THE MAXIM OF THE SOVEREIGNTY OF THE PEOPLE WITH THE DIVINE RIGHT, ENGAGE MUTUALLY, IN THE MOST SOLEMN MANNER, TO USE ALL THEIR EFFORTS TO PUT AN END TO THE SYSTEM OF REPRESENTATIVE GOVERNMENTS IN WHATEVER COUNTRY IT MAY EXIST IN EUROPE AND TO PREVENT ITS BEING INTRODUCED IN THOSE COUNTRIES WHERE IT IS NOT YET KNOWN.

ART. 2. AS IT CAN NOT BE DOUBTED THAT THE LIBERTY OF THE PRESS IS THE MOST POWERFUL MEANS USED BY THE PRETENDED SUPPORTERS OF THE RIGHTS OF NATIONS TO THE DETRIMENT OF THOSE OF PRINCES, THE HIGH CONTRACTING PARTIES PROMISE RECIPROCALLY TO ADOPT ALL PROPER MEASURES TO SUPPRESS IT, NOT ONLY IN THEIR OWN STATES BUT ALSO IN THE REST OF EUROPE.

They immediately overthrew the limited monarchy in Spain and established an absolute monarchy under the same prince. They did the same thing in Italy with a view to establishing absolute monarchies throughout the world and keeping the people of the world as subjects, as political slaves, and as industrial slaves subject to the mastery of the ruling powers.

The Monroe doctrine was declared for the express purpose of checking this monarchical movement and preventing its extension to the Western Hemisphere. The Hohenzollerns were the leaders of this conspiracy from 1822 down to 1914, and down to the day when William II fled to Holland before the victorious powers of the democracies of the world.

This great war was fought by America on the principle that the peoples of the world had the right to govern themselves, and the allied Governments confirmed the American theory on November 5, 1918, as the basis of the armistice. The present dictated treaty of peace is the result and is before us.

This war was a war to establish right against might, justice and humanity against injustice and inhumanity; to establish the rule of conscience throughout the world against the rule of brute force, the right of men everywhere to govern themselves.

The principles of righteousness were successful, and in the final months of battle the great powers of the United States were marshaled and thrown upon the battle field, giving vitality to the flagging forces of Great Britain, of France, of Italy, and of Belgium, and brought an imperishable glory to the American Republic as the world apostle of liberty and righteousness.

LEAGUE OF VICTORIOUS NATIONS.

Mr. President, on the battle field a league of victorious nations was established, led by the United States, Great Britain, France, Italy, Belgium, and Japan, and including 20 others. It may be fairly said that the sympathy of all of the nations of the world, of all the people of the world was finally aroused against the wicked lust for dominion exhibited by the rulers of Germany, and that finally on the inside of Austria and on the inside of Germany disintegration commenced because of the discontent of the Austrian and German people with the false leadership they had been compelled to follow. It was a pathetic scene when we saw the Czecho-Slovaks, who had deserted Austria and fought for the Allies, having passed around the world, reached Washington and marched before the White House as a tribute to the United States and as an evidence of their own devotion to the cause of justice and righteousness.

Mr. President, the still small voice coming from the Divine Spirit moves the hearts of all men and ultimately makes truth triumphant and justice victorious.

We have now, Mr. President, a league of nations in actual operation—a league of victorious nations, with their representatives in Paris completing the task imposed upon the world by William II.

A league of victorious nations, through their representatives, has presented to us a treaty of peace with Germany, with a covenant of a world league of nations approved by the representatives of 32 nations: United States, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, the British Empire (including Canada, Australia, South Africa, New Zealand, and India), China, Cuba, Ecuador, France, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Hedjaz, Honduras, Italy, Japan, Liberia, Nicaragua, Panama, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Roumania, Serb-Croat-Slovene State, Siam, Czechoslovakia, and Uruguay.

Mr. President, 13 other great States—Argentina, Chile, Colombia, Denmark, Netherlands, Norway, Paraguay, Persia, Salvador, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Venezuela—in effect Republics more or less advanced, are ready and have been invited to join the covenant of the league of nations.

Mr. President, I can not but believe that within a short period of probation Germany, Austria, and Bulgaria will be admitted to the league of nations, and that Russia—a united Russia, a great Republic of Russia, or perhaps several republics composed of Russian people—will gladly join the league when they shall have established orderly, democratic government.

All of these nations stand for peace and justice and sympathetic cooperation, and the Hohenzollerns, the Hapsburgs—the governments based on militarism and lust for world dominion—are dead beyond the possibility of resurrection.

We are entering a new world order. The representatives of 32 nations have been conferring together since the 11th day of November, 1918, and have finally worked out with infinite pains a treaty of peace with Germany which is now before us (S. Doc. No. 49, 66th Cong., 1st sess.). It comprises 440 articles—a volume of 194 pages. It is the most important treaty the world has ever seen. It deals not only with Germany but in effect it deals with the new nations that are brought into life by this peace treaty.

I shall support the treaty of peace as the best settlement found possible by the representatives of the great nations fighting together for liberty and justice.

We have a league of nations now, born of necessity, created by war, by the exigencies of life and death, and they are transacting business without any other charter than the charter of necessity. This treaty has not been carelessly drawn. The United States alone had a large number of expert men engaged in an advisory capacity to gather together the information for our peace commissioners, and it is quite a wonderful tribute to the excellence of this treaty and to its thoroughness and to its accuracy that the opponents have found in 440 articles so few of which they can complain. I shall refer to some of these objections later.

But, Mr. President, what I now wish to emphasize is that we have a league of nations working without a charter, establishing by military force the peace of Europe, a peace which is essential and necessary to the peace of the American people; that the league of victorious nations in arms through its representatives has finally reached an agreement. Germany has ratified the terms; Great Britain has ratified it; France in a few days will have ratified it, and so will Japan. Are these great voices of no persuasive force? It is a dictated peace, as I had the honor to advise the honorable Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] it would be, when he denounced the armistice and President Wilson's question to the German people which preceded the armistice. It is as much a dictated peace as if the Allies had gone to Berlin after having devastated hundreds of cities and villages and marched over the bodies of hundreds of thousands of the slain.

Never was a greater assemblage of scholars, technical experts, historians, and trained statesmen assembled. Their work should command the respect of all thoughtful men who respect authority and are moved by competent argument.

Mr. President, the nations composing the league of victorious nations discovered that while they were bound together by the exigencies of war in framing the future relations of the nations of Europe with Germany and her allies, and compelling compliance to the decrees of the great Allies, it was essential to establish a league of nations that should embrace all the nations of the world, 32 of whom were already at the peace table joining in the making of peace with Germany, and it was well known that all the other nations in the world, except Germany and her allies and disordered Russia, were ready to adjust themselves to a world-wide league of nations for the preservation of the future peace of the world and for the very vital purpose of making effective the settlement with Germany and her allies, making a certainty that militarism should not again raise its martial head, and that Germany and Austria should respect the penalties imposed upon them and make reparations for the damage they had done.

Throughout the treaty of peace with Germany the proposed league of nations is charged with many responsibilities to see that this treaty is carried out; that the boundaries fixed shall be respected. This treaty establishes new relations between Germany and all other nations in the most important particulars—with the new States, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Austria, Hungary, Schleswig, with Russia and the Russian States, with the German colonies, with China, with Siam, Liberia, Morocco, with Egypt, Turkey, Bulgaria, and in respect to Shantung.

This treaty is of gigantic importance in disarming Germany, demobilizing her forces, limiting her army and navy, her armaments, her munitions, her materials of war, abolishing absolutely compulsory military service in Germany, preventing short enlistments in the army to train citizens as soldiers, limiting her fortifications, depriving her of the right to have military aeroplanes or submarines, authorizing interallied commissions of control, making sweeping provisions for reparation, and proposing proper penalties upon the criminal leaders who committed the hideous crime of the war of 1914.

This treaty of necessity deals with commercial relations, with property rights, contracts, judgments, ports, waterways, railways, navigation, and so forth.

Mr. President, the covenant of the league of nations substitutes law and order in place of anarchy between nations. We have had no such thing as international law. We have had merely international precedents, international ethics and agreements. No rule of human conduct not prescribed by competent authority and capable of enforcement deserves to be called a law.

The covenant of the league of nations is the beginning of international order and international law to govern relations of the citizens of one nation with the citizens of another nation. The covenant is drawn up with avowed purpose—to promote international cooperation and to achieve international peace and security.

The most intense partisan bigotry will not challenge the nobility of this purpose. The means by which this noble end shall be accomplished is specifically laid down—

First. By the acceptance of obligations not to resort to war.

Second. By the prescription of open, just, and honorable relations between nations.

Third. By the firm establishment of the understandings of international law as the actual rule of conduct among governments.

Fourth. By the maintenance of justice and a scrupulous respect for all treaty obligations in the dealings of organized peoples with one another.

These four proposals are the proposals of the first paragraph of the covenant of the league of nations, and whatever follows must be interpreted in the light of the purpose and the plan proposed to carry out the purpose of achieving international peace and security.

The 26 articles then lay out a plan for achieving international peace and security.

First it pledges every member (art. 10) not to invade the territorial integrity or existing political independence of any other member nation, and not only to respect this principle but to preserve against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league. Abundant means for safeguarding the future peace of the world is provided as follows:

a. By recognizing the importance of reducing armaments to the lowest point consistent with national safety and international obligations;

b. By limiting the private manufacture of munitions and implements of war and providing a means for abating this menace to peace;

c. By giving full information with regard to the manufacture of armaments and military, naval, and air programs;

d. By establishing a commission to deal with the question of military and naval programs;

e. By providing for an immediate call of the council in case of war or a threat of war (art. 10);

f. By providing that members of the league shall submit disputes to arbitration or to inquiry by the council, and that they will not resort to war until at least three months after the award by the arbitrators or the report of the council (art. 12);

g. By recognizing as suitable for arbitration—

First. All disputes relating to the interpretation of treaties.

Second. Any question of international law.

Third. The existence of any fact which if established would constitute a breach of any international obligation.

Fourth. Or as to the extent and nature of the reparation to be made for any such breach.

h. Provision is made that the members of the league will carry out in good faith any award that may be rendered, and that they will not resort to war against a member which complies with the award (art. 13).

i. A permanent court of international justice is contemplated to be submitted to the members of the league for consideration (art. 14).

k. A further provision is made to settle disputes by providing that questions not submitted to arbitration shall be submitted to the council for full investigation and consideration.

l. Provision is made for an appeal to be made from the council to the assembly (art. 15).

m. If any member resorts to war in disregard of its covenants to arbitrate or adjust its differences with other nations under articles 12, 13, or 15, it shall, ipso facto, be deemed to have committed an act of war against all other members of the league, which undertake immediately to subject the offending nation—

First, to the severance of all trade or financial relations.

Second, the prohibition of all intercourse between other nationals and the nationals of the offending State.

Third, the prevention of all financial, commercial, or personal intercourse between the nationals of the covenant-breaking State and the nationals of any other State, whether a member of the league or not.

These penalties are sufficient to deter any nation on earth from attacking another nation in violation of the covenanted agreements (art. 16).

n. Moreover, it is provided that it shall be the duty of the council in the case of an outlaw nation to recommend to the several Governments concerned what effective military, naval, or air forces the members of the league shall severally contribute to the armed forces to be used to protect the covenants of the league (art. 16).

This provision is similar to the provision in article 10 that where any nation is exposed to an exterior aggression of its territorial integrity or existing political independence by another nation, the council shall advise as to the means by which the obligation to preserve the territorial integrity and existing political independence of nations shall be fulfilled.

o. Article 16 makes further provision that in the case of an outlaw nation the members of the league shall cooperate in financial and economic ways to minimize the harm done by a blockade and boycott of the offending nation.

p. Article 17 provides for the settlement of disputes between nations not members of the league, and provides for the coercion of any nonmember which assails a member nation contrary to the principles of the league.

q. Publicity of treaties is provided for as a safeguard against secret treaties (art. 18).

r. The assembly is authorized to advise the reconsideration of existing treaties that may involve or endanger the peace of the world (art. 19).

s. The members of the league are to cancel and set aside obligations or understandings among themselves which are inconsistent with the principles of the proposed league, and they agree not to hereafter enter into engagements inconsistent with the principles of the league (art. 20).

t. The league is intrusted with the general supervision of the trade in arms and ammunition with the countries in which the control of this traffic is necessary in the common interest (art. 23).

u. The very great and important principle is laid down in the proposed covenant that the people in German colonies and territories where the people are not yet able to stand by themselves shall have their right of development placed under the authority of the league of nations as a sacred trust of civilization, and that mandatories shall be established comprising nations trained in the art of government which shall exercise the responsibility, under a charter issued by the council in behalf of the league, determining the degree of authority, control, or administration to be exercised by the mandatory, and providing for annual reports, and recognizing the principles of justice and the right of the people who are governed to primary consideration.

v. Some very important principles are laid down in section 23, pledging the member nations—

(a) To endeavor to secure and maintain fair and humane conditions of labor for men, women, and children both in their own countries and in all countries to which their commercial and industrial relations extend, and for that purpose to establish and maintain the necessary international organizations—

(b) Pledging the members to undertake to secure just treatment of the native inhabitants of territories under their control.

(c) That they will intrust the league with the general supervision over the execution of agreements with regard to the traffic in women and children, and the traffic in opium and other dangerous drugs.

(e) That they will make provision to secure and maintain freedom of communications and of transit and equitable treatment for the commerce of all members of the league.

(f) That they will endeavor to take steps in matters of international concern for the prevention and control of disease.

That they will encourage and promote voluntary Red Cross organizations (art. 25).

Mr. President, this covenant provides for the settlement of every international dispute that can honestly arise. It provides for the disarmament of nations to the limit of safety. It provides a gigantic penalty of international boycott and blockade of any nation which, contrary to the principles of the league, invades the territorial integrity or political independence of another nation. It lays down the principles of justice and humanity. It pledges the nations of the world to the great principles of peace and international justice and international understanding. And above all the old enemies of peace and justice are powerless and made incapable of future mischief.

Those who have been opposing the league have not been able to point out in a single instance where they could improve upon the precautions taken by this great covenant to prevent war in future.

We are face to face with either accepting the covenant or rejecting it. If I should take part in rejecting it, Mr. President, my conscience would never cease to distress me as having failed in a great crisis of the world's history to do what I could to establish peace on earth, good will toward men.

Mr. President, the covenant of the league of nations is the consummation of a century of the aspirations of the good men of the world. It is the work of many hands. The doctrine of disarmament and of arbitration would have been adopted at The Hague in 1907 except for Germany and her allies.

It is absolutely inconceivable that any existing democracy on earth would disregard the principles laid down in this league. They would have no motive, in the first place. They would not dare, in the second place.

PRESIDENT WILSON.

The political enemies of President Wilson should not throw themselves in blind fury against the covenant of the league of nations on the theory that it is his child, conceived by him and brought forth by him, and therefore deserving a merited slaughter. The principles of the league are those of The Hague conventions brought down to date. It represents the best opinions of the whole civilized world. As far as the covenant of the league of nations is concerned it is full of wisdom and virtue. It is a child conceived by all the lovers of men.

I was one of those, and I assume the responsibility, who urged President Wilson to go to Paris and to use his prestige as President of the United States to bring about this covenant. I think he is entitled to very great credit for having succeeded in bringing back a covenant fundamentally sound, which will accomplish the purpose of world peace, world order, and world prosperity. History will give him a credit which his political opponents would now deny.

OPPOSITION TO THE COVENANT.

Mr. President, one of the first principles which I learned as a Member of the Senate, in its capacity to pass upon foreign treaties, was this—

That in the Senate of the United States party lines should cease at tidewater.

I have been profoundly disappointed to find the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, the present chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations [Mr. LODGE], ignoring this sound principle with his round robin, marshaling all the Republican Senators whom he could influence to protest against the covenant establishing the league of nations, making hostile speeches against it, and leading other Senators to do the same thing.

The opponents of the league have proven too much.

The distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] undertook to demonstrate that the league would be controlled by the Catholic Church by controlling a majority of the votes of the assembly and that the Catholic Church would thus rule the world.

Another Senator undertook to prove in the same way that the colored races would control the league of nations, and therefore control the world.

Other Senators to their own satisfaction have shown that Great Britain would in like manner control the league and therefore control the world.

These Senators might do well to reconcile their own differences before they ask the people of the United States to follow a leadership that leads in all directions at once.

But, Mr. President, they are completely put to confusion by a fair interpretation of the covenant itself. The action of the league (art. 2) must be effected through the instrumentality of an assembly and of a council. It is expressly provided in article 5 that—

Except where otherwise expressly provided in this covenant or by the terms of the present treaty, decisions at any meeting of the assembly or of the council shall require the agreement of all the members of the league represented at the meeting.

In other words no decision except by unanimous vote.

The only exceptions provided for by the covenant are in respect to matters of procedure, the appointment of committees (these arrangements may be decided by a majority) (art. 5), and in the case of an appeal to the assembly of a pending dispute it is provided that a decision may be arrived at if concurred in—by the representatives of those members of the league represented on the council and of a majority of the other members of the league, exclusive in each case of the representatives of the parties to the dispute.

In other words, the decisions of the assembly or of the council in relation to international affairs must be unanimous. Where is the possibility of the dominance of any nation over other nations represented on the council or in the assembly? Where is the danger of dominance by England, the Catholic Church, or the colored races when no action can be taken except by unanimous consent?

Great stress has been laid upon the number of votes given to Great Britain, as in the cases of Australia, South Africa, New Zealand, Canada, and India, while only one is given to the United States.

The answer to this is that since a unanimous decision is required it is not of the slightest importance; and, second, that in so far as mere votes are concerned, the United States has a number of small nations whose support could be relied upon, as Cuba, Haiti, San Salvador, Panama, Liberia, Nicaragua, Honduras, and Guatemala, whose population is negligible but whose dependence upon the United States is of such a character that their cooperation with the United States can be as much relied upon as the cooperation of Canada with Great Britain.

But there is nothing in the argument one way or the other. The argument is specious, it is fallacious, it is misleading, and unworthy of being presented to the American Senate. A few votes are of no importance where all must agree.

ENTANGLING ALLIANCES.

The opponents of the covenant establishing the league declare with suspicious zeal that we are violating the advice of our revered Washington and ignoring his warning against entangling alliances.

The entangling alliances to which Washington referred were agreements, common in his day, making offensive and defensive alliances between one autocracy and another, between rival groups of monarchies. He was very wise to advise the United States to keep out of such difficulties where nations were controlled by military and dynastic ambitions and selfish intrigue.

Our revered Washington had not the faintest conception of the present covenant establishing a world order by the democracies of the world as a result of the complete overthrow of the Hohenzollerns, the Hapsburgs, and the Romanoffs. So far is membership in the league of nations under the present covenant from being an entangling alliance, it is an association which will make impossible any entangling alliances such as those contemplated by Washington.

The present covenant precludes the possibility of military dynastic alliances. The present covenant establishes peace on earth, establishes a just and fair relationship between all nations, with all the nations of the earth pledged to maintain the political integrity and the existing political independence of every single member nation. I agree with Senator LODGE'S speech of June 9, 1915, at Union College, that "there is no escape from the proposition that nations must unite to prevent war," and disagree with his present attitude. Is it not strange he has made no constructive proposals?

MONROE DOCTRINE.

Without a gleam of humor there are opponents of the league who have the hardihood to confront the intelligence of mankind with the astonishing proposal that the present covenant would abolish the Monroe doctrine. These unhappy statesmen think the Monroe doctrine is a charter establishing suzerainty over the Central and South American Republics and that it is a species of overlordship by which the United States has a right to manage and control the policies of the other Republics on the Western Hemisphere. This un-American conception has been highly mischievous just to the extent that it has had the temerity by mysterious innuendoes to formulate itself. It has caused the Republics of South America and of Central America to look upon the United States as the Colossus of the North, ready to invade their territory and their existing political independence whenever a pretext arises for the purposes of profit—commercial, financial, or political.

This is the doctrine which the Germans have used in the Argentine, and Chile, and Brazil, and Colombia, and throughout the South American Republics and the Central American Republics, for the purpose of discrediting the United States and breaking down our just influence with these neighboring Republics whose faithful friend we always have been and whose faithful friend we always shall remain.

The Monroe doctrine is this: That the United States will regard it as an unfriendly act for any foreign nation to attempt to establish on the Western Hemisphere its system of government or to interfere with the political independence or policies of the Republics on the Western Hemisphere.

This doctrine has been somewhat expanded to mean that the United States would not be indifferent to an attempt on the part of a foreign Government to acquire additional lands on the Western Hemisphere.

The Monroe doctrine does not give the United States any rights of suzerainty. The rights of the United States have been somewhat expanded by the necessities of the case, as in Haiti, under the same principle which is recognized in article 22 of the pending covenant, establishing mandatories over communities showing themselves incapable of orderly self-government. But this is an entirely different principle from the Monroe doctrine, and the Monroe doctrine may fairly be construed to preclude a foreign nation from exercising the rights of a mandatory on the Western Hemisphere.

Article 10 pledges all the members of the league to respect and preserve the territorial integrity and existing political independence of the member nations, and this is a powerful confirmation of the underlying principle of the Monroe doctrine, forbidding foreign nations and all other nations to invade the territorial integrity or to interfere with the political independence of the Republics of the Western Hemisphere.

But the covenant goes further. It actually recognizes, in terms, the Monroe doctrine (art. 21), which is all any reasonable man ought to desire; and this great covenant of the league of nations, instead of weakening the Monroe doctrine, would strengthen it, confirm it, and cause it to be acknowledged by all the world.

THE LEAGUE HAS NOT STOPPED WAR.

The opponents of the proposed covenant say that it has not stopped war; that there are a dozen wars pending now.

Nearly all of the so-called wars pending are civil wars, and not really international wars. A few are over disputed boundaries or disputed authority.

The league of nations has not yet been established. The United States has not yet approved the covenant. But the league of victorious nations, which is giving birth to the league of all nations, has stopped the greatest war in history, the war in Belgium, in France, in Italy, in Greece, in Serbia, and in Germany, in Austria, Bulgaria, and Turkey, and demobilized their armed forces.

The gigantic armies of the Teutonic allies are demobilized. The great warring armies are rapidly returning to civilized pursuits, and the smaller civil disputes which remain will rapidly adjust themselves when the great nations of the world act.

RESERVATIONS.

The opponents of the league having observed that article 1 provides that the members of the league are those who shall accede without reservation to the covenant now insist upon reservations which would exclude, by the conditions of article 1, the United States from membership in the league of nations.

Reservations are not necessary to the covenant as drawn and are objectionable because by the terms of the covenant itself any reservation to article 1 would exclude the United States from membership in the league of nations and possibly defeat the covenant itself by leading to other reservations and withdrawals.

Instead of making reservations which would temporarily exclude the United States from membership in the league it would be much better to ratify the treaty of peace with Germany and let Senators who have doubts remaining pass resolutions at the same time stating what the interpretation of the Senate or of Senators may be. This would be ratification with an explanatory interpretation of the meaning coincident to it by those who think this necessary. But no reservations should be attached to the ratification of the treaty itself, for the reason that it would exclude the United States from membership in the league if this were done, or bring the covenant into great confusion by inviting 50 nations to make reservations and amendments, to be in turn submitted to other nations and invite new amendments or reservations.

Mr. President, I think it should be remembered by the Senate that the sovereignty of the United States is vested in the people of the United States; that the Senate and House of Representatives merely occupy a position of temporary authority. No Congress can bind a succeeding Congress. Any Congress can, by act of Congress, repeal any treaty which is made. That is the law of the United States, as repeatedly construed by the United States Supreme Court. The effect of a treaty in the way of a promise to another nation only carries with it as valid and binding a moral obligation. A moral obligation, of course, is sufficient to bind the representatives of the people of the United States, but if, when they ratify this treaty with Germany, they should on the same day and in a separate instrument pass a resolution stating what, in the opinion of the Senate, is the limitation upon the power of the Senate, what is the interpretation of the Senate in agreeing to the covenant, it would completely meet every possible objection at any future time that the United States was not living up to its moral obligation, if any nation in the future should put upon the covenant a meaning which the Senate of the United States now believes they would have no right to put upon that covenant. In other words, we can meet the moral aspect by an independent resolution passed on the same day, without interfering with the ratification of this agreement, free from amendment or reservation.

I am in favor of ratifying it without amendment and without reservation, and I do not think it is even necessary to have a resolution such as I have described, although for those who are timid and fearful of a moral responsibility to nations in the future they can reconcile themselves to themselves and to the world by taking that course.

The league of nations—

First. Will prevent future war.

Second. Will establish world peace.

Third. Will promote international law and international understanding and international morality.

Fourth. Will promote international industry, commerce, and finance.

Fifth. Will promote higher conceptions of liberty and justice and humanity.

Sixth. Will save the enormous expenditures and waste in life and property of preparation for war and of war.

Seventh. The economic penalties of the present covenant are sufficient to prevent war without the use of international police; the international police being in existence does not imply and probably would not require its employment, except on very rare occasions.

Eighth. It will promote democracy throughout the world, the rule of the people, and make the Government responsible to the need, the welfare, the health, the happiness, the prosperity of the people.

Ninth. It will make international agreements relative to finance, commerce, and industry easier of accomplishment.

Tenth. It will give a new dignity to human life and exalt it above the conception of mere property, so that property would be considered as secondary to human life.

Eleventh. It will mean the freedom of the seas and freedom of international waterways, and a new birth of freedom throughout the whole world.

Twelfth. It will promote genuine democracy and end Bolshevism.

Thirteenth. It will stop civil wars that are now raging in certain demoralized portions of the world.

Fourteenth. It will promote the better interests of those who labor throughout the world, of those who create values, and give them a larger part of the values which they create.

Fifteenth. It will put an end to dynastic ambition and to military atrocity forever.

Sixteenth. It will end the rule of the few over the many and establish the rule of the majority for the happiness of the majority and of the minority as well.

Seventeenth. It will not impair the internal sovereignty of any nation.

Eighteenth. It will abate racial and class prejudices.

The future success of the league is forecast by the success of the British Empire, by the success of the Government of the United States with its 48 sovereignties, living in peace and in the most abounding prosperity the world has ever known, for the very reason that they have complete cooperation instead of selfish conflict one with another.

The rules of international law are simple and few and impersonal, and can be adopted by unanimous agreement of the representatives of the nations.

SHANTUNG.

A tremendous outcry has been made over Shantung by the opponents of the treaty of peace with Germany.

The treaty, in articles 156 to 158, turns over to Japan the rights which Germany had under the treaty of March 6, 1898.

By this treaty with Germany China retained sovereignty over the Shantung Peninsula, giving Germany, however, certain railroad and mining rights therein, and leased for 99 years to Germany a special tract which only involved 208 square miles of land and 200 square miles of water at Kiaochow, the total being less than 1 per cent of the Shantung Peninsula, which has 55,984 square miles. The population of the leased area where Germany was permitted to exercise sovereignty involved about 200,000 people.

When the war of 1914 arose, Germany, with the port facilities on the Chinese coast, was in a position to destroy the transports bringing troops from New Zealand and Australia.

Japan, on the invitation of the Allies, having entered the war in 1914, took the German concession by military force, broke up the port which the German ships had, and cleared the Pacific Ocean of German ships, giving a free right of way to the British transports.

On May 25, 1915, at Peking, Japan made a treaty with China by which the Chinese Government agreed to recognize any adjustment made between the Japanese Government and the German Government as to Kiaochow, but with the understanding, reduced to writing, at the same time and place, to wit:

PEKING, May 25, 1915.

That the land and concessions and rights of sovereignty leased or ceded to Germany should be returned by Japan to China upon the conclusion of the present war upon the condition of opening the Kiaochow as a commercial port, permitting a Japanese settlement there and an international settlement, and that suitable arrangements should be made for the disposal of the German public establishments and properties.

This was excellently well set forth by Senator ROBINSON in July 24, 1919, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 3086. Various Japanese authorities have recently referred to this obligation of Japan, which will undoubtedly be carried out in perfectly good faith.

Viscount Uchidi, minister of foreign affairs of Japan, in his address of January 21, 1919, confirmed this understanding, as did Baron Goto, former minister of foreign affairs of Japan, in a statement made in New York on May 6, 1919. The Associated Press report from Paris of April 30, 1919, is of like effect. Baron Makino confirmed this pledge on April 30, 1919.

Japan is a wonderful nation. It is a great nation, and is entitled to the respect of all the world, especially of the great Allies with whom Japan joined forces for the defense of civilization and righteousness.

It has not been possible for Japan to carry out the arrangement with China up to this date for the obvious reason that the treaty concluding the war between Germany and Japan has not yet been presented to Japan.

It is to be profoundly regretted that Senators occupying such high responsibility on such an occasion, where the welfare of the whole world is in the balance, should speak words reflecting upon a great and friendly nation, whose fidelity has been so serviceable and whose right to our confidence and trust has been abundantly established in the history of recent years.

I have every respect and confidence in Japan and have not the slightest doubt that Japan will carry out in good faith her agreement with China, and it is the orderly way to settle the Shantung matter by providing that Germany shall make a formal relinquishment to Japan, which conquered it, in order that Japan may herself, having cleared the title of German claims, transfer these lands and sovereignty back to China, as Japan agreed to do.

INVADING OUR SOVEREIGNTY.

Some of the hostile critics of the covenant insist that our sovereignty would be invaded by the provisions of the covenant; that the assembly or the council would pass laws authorizing the Japanese or Chinese to immigrate into the United States. This whimsical conceit has nothing to justify it. The league of nations does not contemplate dealing with anything except international questions, and does not contemplate dealing with intranational questions. None of the member nations contemplate giving up their sovereignty. None of them had such a conception. The only way a decision could be arrived at under the covenant, even on such questions, is by unanimous vote (art. 5). It is grossly unreasonable to argue that 45 nations would unanimously vote a precedent to invade their own sovereignty, and no reasonable man believes it or can believe it if he is capable of logical, consecutive thought.

Moreover, Mr. President, the sovereignty of the people of the United States as vested in the people of the United States, is inalienable, indestructible, and incapable of invasion. The Congress of the United States can not invade the sovereignty of the people of the United States. It might commit political suicide and be kicked out of office. But one Congress can not bind a succeeding Congress, for the very reason that the sovereignty is vested in the people, and they change their servants at will, and they can, by an act of Congress, repeal any treaty the Senate can pass if the Senate should pass a treaty that was unacceptable to the American people.

I shall not criticize the rhetoric or the verbiage of the covenant. This covenant is wise. It is thoughtfully drawn. In its substance it is splendid. In its purpose it is glorious.

A perfect contract between scoundrels is worthless. An imperfect contract between trustworthy friends, who have fought and bled together in a common love of justice and liberty, is of very great value.

Are we justified in trusting the British people to faithfully and justly interpret this covenant? Did not that first wonderfully heroic army of British die almost to the last man in Flanders defending liberty and justice against the armed Hun? Did not the British sailors and men of war and destroyers ride through the misty darkness of the North Sea for five years, day and night, in storming seas defending the world against Teutonic aggression? Have they not shown themselves for a century our faithful friends?

It was Canning, the prime minister of England, in 1822, who served notice on the Holy Alliance that the British Government would not stand for the invasion of the liberties of the struggling Republics on the Western Hemisphere. It was through Canning and the influence of the British Government that Monroe was informed and encouraged to send his great message to Congress establishing the Monroe doctrine.

Shall we be afraid of France and refuse to trust France? Did they not, when this Republic was struggling for its liberties in the beginning, come with all the force they had and all that we required to establish our liberties upon this continent? Did they not cede to us a mighty continent in the Louisiana Purchase? And have they not been faithful to the uttermost in defending civilization against the Teutonic allies?

Shall we doubt Italy? The Italian people have shown themselves to be glorious in war and magnificent in peace. When Paris was about to be struck down by the advancing field-gray troops of Germany, coming like swarms of locusts down upon the Marne, it was Italy that told the French statesman, "You need not guard the borders between France and Italy. Italy will not stand by Germany in a war of aggression." Italy made a treaty with Germany and Austria, a defensive alliance, against aggression on Germany and Austria, but not by Germany and Austria on undefended borders of others or any unprovoked assault upon their neighbors. Shall we question Italy when the Italians by tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands died for a common cause with us?

An agreement between scoundrels is worthless, no matter how well drawn. An agreement between these great nations who have common ideals and common purposes is worth while. It is a great step forward, no matter how awkwardly, how immaturely, how poorly drawn. The language and the rhetoric might be finer, perhaps, but the purpose is there, the substance is there, and the covenant deserves the support of the American people.

Some of the critics of the league of nations complain it is not strong enough. I deny it. It is as strong as need be.

THE LEAGUE PROVIDES ABUNDANT FORCE.

The league provides a world-wide boycott, a world-wide blockade—commercial and financial—by land and by sea, and cuts off the citizens of any outlaw nation from communication with any other part of the world. This is the most gigantic penalty ever proposed in history.

The effect of the war with Germany was to destroy the value of the bonds issued by her and her allies, and reduce such bonds to the level of waste paper. This will serve to be a sound warning to the citizens of any future proposed aggressor nation that they can not afford to finance a war against the world with an overwhelming prospect of complete loss of every dollar invested in such a nefarious enterprise.

While it is impossible to think of a force much greater than a world-wide blockade and boycott against an outlaw nation, still the league goes further and provides that armed forces of all the nations of the world can be summoned, in addition to world-wide blockade and boycott, to reduce the outlaw nation to subjugation, to peace, and to recognition of international duties and international justice.

Moreover, it is to be assumed that since democracy had its modern birth with the printing press and the French Revolution, and has grown like the green bay tree in the last 100 years until it has assumed to establish this covenant of a world-wide league for the purpose of protecting itself, there is no possibility of any nation in the world having the temerity to assail a democratic world and to put itself in the attitude of an outlaw nation.

There is not the slightest danger of Japan doing so, and if she did the powers visible at her very doors could be used to restrain Japan from any unlawful aggression against the peace of the world or of any of the other nations of the league.

The force is sufficient to safeguard the peace of the world, and farseeing men will realize the gigantic character of the force which can be summoned through this league for the protection of mankind.

The league will safeguard the peace of the world as well as our own. It will end war. It will not interfere with our sovereignty. It is the blessing of God descended on earth.

Mr. President, we are entering upon a thousand years of peace; into an era of great world prosperity; into an era where the productive capacity of man is being multiplied in a very wonderful way, so that within the generation the time will come when every man, every industrious man, will be able to supply himself and his family with shelter, with clothing, with abundant good food, and be afforded an opportunity for education and for leisure to enjoy the providence of nature. Let us be devoutly thankful for the opportunity to bind the world together in bonds of amity and peace.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I have noted to-day for the first time a statement in the New York Times of Wednesday, July 30, to the following effect:

Among the reservations to the Versailles treaty to be offered on the floor of the Senate, it has developed, will be one by Senator SHEPPARD, of Texas, author of the constitutional prohibition amendment, expressing the sense of the Senate in favor of international prohibition.

Mr. President, this is an error. I have never at any time had any intention of offering any amendment to the covenant of the league of nations. I regard it as the sublimest document in history since the Declaration of Independence and the American Constitution, and I regard the opposition to it as one of the most unfortunate and depressing episodes in American or world annals. I am for the covenant without amendment or reservation.

REPORT ON PACKING INDUSTRY.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the order of business requires the continuation of the reading of the report submitted by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON].

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). The pending order of business is the continuation of the reading of the document referred to by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. I will reserve my motion until the conclusion of the reading of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will resume the reading of the report.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the report and was interrupted by

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I think the Senators present are not paying much attention to the reading of the report. A good deal of it has been read. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading be dispensed with from this point on, and that the document be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the report be dispensed with, and that it be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The report entire is as follows:

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION LETTER TO UNITED STATES SENATE, JULY 31, 1919, IN RESPONSE TO SENATE RESOLUTION 114.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
OFFICE OF THE CHAIRMAN,
Washington, July 31, 1919.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith reply of the Federal Trade Commission in response to Senate resolution 114 [Mr. SHERMAN].

Respectfully,
VICTOR MURDOCK,
Acting Chairman.

To the honorable the PRESIDENT OF THE
UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
OFFICE OF THE CHAIRMAN,
Washington, July 31, 1919.

To the Senate of the United States:

In response to Senate resolution 114, requiring certain information from the Federal Trade Commission and its members, officers, agents, or employees, and by direction of the commission, I have caused diligent search of the files and correspondence, public and private, belonging to the commission or any of its members, officers, agents, or employees to be made. The members of the commission have been asked to give an spondence, public and private, belonging to the commission or their part or actions relating to export trade, especially with the ministry of reconstruction of Great Britain, or the members thereof, and especially with the Hon. Charles A. McCurdy, M. P., of the ministry of foods of Great Britain, or any other matters touching upon the Senate inquiry.

The originals of all letters and communications are included herein in full, but with respect to "copies of all documents, correspondence, or other papers in its possession relating to its efforts or action in promotion or concerning the export trade in meats" (except to correspondence), it was found that the files of the commission contain such a volume of "documents" and "other papers," the inclusion of which herein would involve the copying of a very great many printed documents and intricate tabulations of figures, as well as voluminous papers, that the secretary of the commission was directed to communicate with the Secretary of the Senate for advice as to a procedure which would make it possible to answer fully the Senate's inquiry but with greater expedition.

This inquiry was made on July 19, and the secretary of the commission is advised by the Secretary of the Senate on July 21 that he is directed to say that the Senate will desire the filing of original documents in every case; that such documents as the Senate wishes to retain in its files will be copied by the Senate and that all original correspondence, documents, and other papers will be returned to the files of the commission.

This report, then, will include the originals of all correspondence, the reports as to individual conduct of members, officers, agents, and employees of the commission, and a schedule generally indicating the character of other material identified as exhibits and from which a selection may be made for the purpose of copying.

PERSONAL REPORTS OF MEMBERS OF THE COMMISSION.

Speaking for myself, I have had no communication within the scope of the inquiry. This is to the best of my knowledge.

Following are the reports made by each of the other members of the Federal Trade Commission:

SPRING LAKE, N. J., July 19, 1919.

Commissioner MURDOCK,
Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MURDOCK: I have your letter inclosing copy of the Sherman resolution, copy of the Report of the Export Division of the Federal Trade Commission, for my amendment or approval, and your request that I make individual reply to the matters covered by the Senate resolution.

In the allotment among the commissioners of the work in the commission, the export division, prior to my illness in April, 1919, was directly under my supervision, and the report of Dr. Notz for the division seems to be a complete summary of its activities in relation to export trade in packing-house products.

I have had no correspondence with any British official on the subject of import or export trade or on the meat business of American packers.

I have had no communication even remotely connected with that.

The only incident that I recall having to do with the American packers' export trade was at the time that the Federal Trade Commission called for a report as to the operations of the foreign business of the packers. At this time Mr. Levy Mayer, representing Armour & Co., said to me that the real reason that the returns should not be made was that it might involve very heavy additional payment of income tax to the United States Government on the part of his client, and likewise might lead to taxation in Argentina and other foreign countries.

Mr. Mayer exhibited a list of a number of companies doing business in Argentina. As you remember, I was very much outraged at the suggestion that I could or would be party to the defrauding of this Government, or, being a Government official, would be party to a deception on a friendly foreign Government. As you remember, I reported the circumstances immediately to my colleagues, and further discussion of the matter of the returns of the foreign branches of the packing companies was terminated, and I am informed the desired information was demanded and secured without any further delay.

This I think, covers all my recollections of anything touching on foreign trade of the packers, or the other things covered by Senator SHERMAN'S resolution.

With best regards to you and your brethren, I am,

Very truly, yours,
JOHN FRANKLIN FORT,
Chairman.

WASHINGTON, July, 1919.

Commissioner MURDOCK,
Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MURDOCK: Herewith is individual reply in compliance with S. Res. 114:

Since becoming a member of the Federal Trade Commission I have had no communication of any sort with any officer of the British Government. I have never had any communication with any officer of the British Government on the subjects covered by the resolution in question.

In Gov. Fort's absence I have taken direct charge of the Export Division of the Federal Trade Commission. I have read the report of that division and that report covers my work in relation to export trade.

Very truly, yours,
HUSTON THOMPSON.

WASHINGTON, July 28, 1919.

MY DEAR MR. MURDOCK: Herewith my statement re Senate resolution 114:

I did not travel at public expense abroad.

I did not make speeches, violent or otherwise, in England.

I did not give out interviews in London.

I did not inspire nor have anything to do with newspaper articles in London.

I did not see British Government officials when I was in London.

I have not carried on any correspondence with anybody, even remotely, of the sort defined in the resolution.

The Librarian of Congress says there never was a copy of the London Star of April 14, 1919, in the Library of Congress. However, I have just secured from Swift & Co. a purported photostat of page 4 of that issue. It contains no interview nor anything that purports to be an interview with me. I had no talk in London with anybody which would furnish material for this article. The photostat of the supposed page of the London Star is handed you herewith.

During my term as chairman, by direction of the commission I signed one letter addressed to the Secretary of State asking him to transmit a cable message to the ministry of food of Great Britain. The originals have been furnished you for inclusion in your report. They are as follows:

The letter:

"11 SEPTEMBER, 1918.

"The SECRETARY OF STATE,
"Washington.

"SIR: The Federal Trade Commission is in urgent need of certain official information as to Government meat control in Great Britain.

"The commission would appreciate your courtesy in transmitting the inclosed cable to the British ministry of food, forwarding the bill for same to this commission, as has been done by the State Department on former occasions.

"I have the honor to be,
"Yours, very truly,
CHAIRMAN."

"Incl.

The cable message:

"MINISTRY OF FOOD,
"Palace Chambers, Bridge Street, S. W. 1, London, England.

"Federal Trade Commission desires following official information by return mail direct to commission:

"Make-up and disbursements of live-stock fund to date, organization of costings branch, and combined income and expenditure account of finance division.

"Constitution and rules of London and Liverpool Meat Supply Associations, London Meat Importers' Association, Smithfield Control Board, and agreements with meat traders, including branches of foreign packers.

"Agreements with Argentine, Australian, and American packers on meat prices.

"Agreements and rules governing operation of Government and private cold-storage plants, refrigerated steamers, insulated cars, and slaughterhousees.

"Regulations and instructions for live-stock commissioners, valuers, and auctioneers.

"Constitution, rules, balance, and profit and loss statement of Model National Kitchen and of National Meat Products Co.

"Model rules of local food committees and advisory committees."

Further correspondence with reference to these two documents have been furnished in original to you for inclusion in your report, and are as follows:

Reply to letter:

"DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
"Washington, October 29, 1918.

"In reply please refer to Di 103.92/23.

"The Secretary of State presents his compliments to the honorable the Secretary of the Treasury, and has the honor to inclose, for the information of the Federal Trade Commission, a copy of a dispatch from the American Embassy at London, in which it reports that the British ministry of food appears to be loth to furnish the greater part of the information, which is held to be of a national confidential nature concerning the British food situation, as sought in the questionnaire of the Federal Trade Commission, forwarded to the Department of State by that commission's letter of September 11, 1918."

"1 inclosure: From Great Britain, No. 10004, October 4, 1918. Di."

Inclosed telegram:

"LONDON, October 4, 1918.

"Triplicate. No. 10004.

"The honorable the SECRETARY OF STATE,
"Washington.

"SIR: Referring to your telegram, No. 1764, of October 3, 1918, I have the honor to inform you that upon receipt of your telegraphic instruction No. 1344, of September 13, application was at once made both by this embassy, to the foreign office, and by Mr. Hoover's representative in London, to the ministry of food for answers to the questionnaire of the Federal Trade Commission. A follow-up request is being made to-day, but the impression is conveyed by the British ministry of food that they are loth to supply the majority of the information in question, which they consider of a national confidential nature.

"I have the honor to be, sir,
"Your obedient servant,

"F. M. GUNTHER.
"(For the chargé d'affaires.)

"Subject: Food situation in England—Questionnaire of Federal Trade Commission.

"FMG/MIJ 102.92.1 and 4."

The file indicates that on October 25, 1918, another letter was addressed to the Secretary of State asking for reply to the letter of September 11. We find no copy of the letter of October 25, 1918, but it can be found in the State Department under the filing direction "Di–103.92/24," which communication may have been signed by me, but more likely was signed by the Secretary.

The reply to the letter of October 25, 1918, the original of which has been furnished you for inclusion in your report is as follows:

"In reply please refer to Di–103.92/24.

"DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
"Washington, November 1, 1918.

"The FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
"Washington, D. C.

"GENTLEMEN: The department has received your letter of October 25, 1918, in further relation to your desire to obtain from the British ministry of food certain documents bearing on Government control over distribution of meat in Great Britain.

"In reply I beg to say that, under date of October 29, 1918, this department forwarded to the Secretary of the Treasury, for transmission to you, a copy of a dispatch from the American Embassy in London reporting that that ministry appears to be loth to furnish the greater part of this information, which is held to be of a national and confidential nature.

"I am, gentlemen, your obedient servant,
"FRANK L. POLK, Counselor.
"(For the Secretary of State.)

"Di."

Meantime or about this time copies of certain of the documents mentioned in the cable message had been secured from other sources. The originals are included in Dr. Ohsol's report to you. So far as I can find these are my only official communications.

From time to time messengers from the British Embassy in Washington have called at my office either to ask for copies of public documents relating to the meat business, or in some instances to inquire when further publications might be expected.

Aside from these I have had no communications, official or otherwise, with any officer of the British or other foreign Governments concerning the exports from the United States, nor with the ministry of reconstruction or any member thereof appointed in 1918 except the Hon. Charles A. McCurdy. The facts surrounding communication of Mr. McCurdy are as follows:

When I went abroad Commissioner Huston Thompson, of the Federal Trade Commission, asked me to obtain any documents or information bearing upon the proposal to create in Great Britain a government body similar to the Federal Trade Commission of the United States.

I reached London on or about April 8, 1919, and left on the evening of April 12, 1919.

I called upon the United States ambassador, Mr. Davis, and among other things asked him for advice in securing the material which Commissioner Thompson desired; similarly, when I called to pay my respects upon Consul General Robert P. Skinner at the American consulate in London, I asked if he could help me obtain these documents. From one or the other of these gentlemen I got the name of the Hon. Charles A. McCurdy, M. P., as being the best man to approach for this material.

I had not followed the legislation and knew relatively nothing about the subject.

The day before I left London I called Mr. McCurdy's office on the telephone. A woman's voice informed me that Mr. McCurdy was not in his office. I then gave my name, identified myself, and asked if anything in the nature of the desired documents could be sent me at the Savoy Hotel before I left the next night. I was told that my request would be brought to Mr. McCurdy's attention.

As I a remember, it was the next morning that Mr. McCurdy called me at the Savoy Hotel on the telephone, and said that he would be glad to meet me. I explained that I was leaving that evening and had practically no spare time. It was finally agreed that he would call at the Savoy Hotel at 4.30 p. m. At about 4.30 Mr. McCurdy's office called me and said that he was in attendance either upon the House of Parliament or a committee meeting, and would be unable to keep his engagement. I expressed my regret.

Shortly after that, on or about April 20, I wrote to Mr. McCurdy from Paris a note expressing my regret at not having had the pleasure of seeing him and renewed my request that any documents which he might have relating to the proposed creation of a body similar to the Federal Trade Commission be sent me at Paris, to the office of Mr. Ed. L. Keen, formerly of Washington, and for many years a personal friend of mine. This note was written long hand. I kept no copy. I have stated its substance.

Mr. McCurdy acknowledged this note in the following letter, the original of which has been furnished you:

"MINISTRY OF FOOD,
"PALACE CHAMBERS, BRIDGE STREET,
"London, S. W. 1, 28th April, 1919.

"To WM. B. COLVER, Esq.,
"Care of ED. L. KEEN, The United Press, Paris.

"DEAR MR. COLVER: It certainly was most unfortunate that we could not have a chat before your journey to Paris. I overlooked an earlier engagement, which kept me longer than I anticipated, and prevented me from getting to the Savoy in time.

"A committee, of which I was chairman, was appointed by the minister of reconstruction in February, 1918, the terms of reference being: "'In view of the probable extension of trade organizations and combinations, to consider and report what action, if any, may be necessary to safeguard the public interest.'

"The committee has not completed its report, and I will have a copy sent to you as soon as I can arrange it. In the meantime, I think the following summary of the committee's conclusions and recommendations, which I send you in confidence, may be of interest to you:

"Conclusions: Machinery should be established in the United Kingdom for the investigation of the operations of monopolies, trusts, and combinations, similar to the commissions and other tribunals created for that purpose in the United States of America and certain British colonies.

"Recommendations: The Government department which exercises surveillance over trade and commerce shall be charged with the duty of collecting all information as to the nature, extent, and development of trusts, etc., and of presenting an annual report to Parliament.

"The department shall also investigate complaints against the existence or activities of such organizations and make recommendations as to State action for the remedying of any grievances which may be established.

"In the event of the department coming to the conclusion that there is prima facie evidence that the public interest is adversely affected by the operations of a particular organization, they may refer the case for thorough investigation and report to the tribunal, which shall have all powers necessary to elicit the facts.

"If acts injurious to the public are proved to have been committed, the tribunal shall immediately publish the facts relevant to the particular offense.

"King [kind] regards,
"Yours, very truly,

(Signed) CHARLES A. MCCURDY."

I acknowledged this in a brief longhand note and said that if I returned via London I would call on him. I kept no copy of this note, but have stated its substance. Later, after my return to the United States, he addressed a second letter to me at Paris, which was forwarded to Washington. The original has been furnished you. It is as follows:

[SEAL.] "PALACE CHAMBERS, Westminster, S. W. 1.

"To WM. B. COLVER, Esq.,
"Care of Ed. L. Keen, the United Press, Paris.

"DEAR MR. COLVER: With reference to my letter of the 28th April, I am glad to be able to inclose herewith a copy of the report of the committee appointed by the British ministry of reconstruction to consider the question of trusts, etc., which has now been published.

"If you are passing through this country on your return to the States I should very much like to have an opportunity of a chat with you, particularly on the subject of the machinery which has been established by the United States Government for dealing with trusts.

"Kind regards.

"Yours, very truly,

"(Signed) CHARLES A. MCCURDY."

Inclosed with this letter was a document entitled "Ministry of reconstruction—Report of committee on trusts." This document has been supplied you attached to the original of the above letter. I was surprised to find that I had not acknowledged this courtesy, and that fact was discovered when my files were searched pursuant to your request. I have replied as follows:

"19 JULY, 1919.

"Hon. CHARLES A. MCCURDY,
"Palace Chambers, Westminster, London, S. W. 1.

"MY DEAR MR. MCCURDY: Thank you for your letter of April 28, which after some delay in Paris was forwarded to me here in Washington. Thank you also for the document inclosed, being the report of committee on trusts.

"I am sorry that I did not return via London, and so have not been able to see you. Better luck next time.

"With personal regards,

"Yours, very truly, ——— ———."

I was interested in this document, and especially in the statement on page 28, which is as follows:

"Imports controlled by combinations abroad: In the case of many commodities which are wholly or mainly imported into this country from abroad the price and supply is controlled by combinations in the country of origin. Imported meat is an outstanding example. In the year before the war nearly 60 per cent of the imported beef supply of the United Kingdom was controlled at its places of origin by the American Meat Trust, which further had a considerable hold on the meat-distributing trade in this country, having 144 wholesale branches in 64 towns and about 1,000 retail shops. True, the beef controlled by this foreign combination was not more than one-fifth of the total amount marketed in this country, and the competition of home-produced beef and of beef imported from sources not controlled by the American group was an effective safeguard in normal times against gross manipulations of the general level of prices, but the intervention of a group so powerful between the British consumer and the foreign producer of meat made it unlikely that the British consumer would get the benefit of cheap meat production abroad. The American trust, having acquired a virtual monopoly in the Argentine, was in a position to underpay the Argentine farmer, overcharge the British consumer, and pocket the difference, and the experiences of the war period have shown how far that power can be exercised in a time of scarcity. No legislative measures taken here can curb the power of combinations operating in this way in foreign countries. Import duties might serve to relieve the combination of some of its gains, but discriminatory import duties are difficult to work and precarious in effect. Diplomatic representations can be made, but the method not likely in normal times to be either desirable or efficacious. The question of the control of international trade by private interests is eminently one for international action."

In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD dated June 27, 1919, at page 1872, the following statement is made:

"Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Ohio a question. Does he know who the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission is now?

"Mr. POMERENE. I think Mr. Colver is the chairman now.

"Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator know where he is at this time?

"Mr. POMERENE. I do not; I am not my brother's keeper in that respect.

"Mr. SHERMAN. I am not his keeper, either; but I believe I have some accurate information about where he is. Unless he has returned recently, he is in England. When the Senator speaks of the fostering care of the Federal Trade Commission on our export trade, I will say that I believe I will have adequate proof to present here that, instead of promoting our export trade, he is destroying it in England by unfriendly comments, by violent speeches reported in English newspapers denouncing certain of our export lines. I think he is paying his traveling expenses across the ocean out of such appropriations as this."

And in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 15, 1919, at page 2578, occurs the following:

"Mr. KENYON. What, then, was the Senator reading?

"Mr. SHERMAN. I am reading, so far, the heading of the interview, and then follows what purports to be this interview.

"Mr. KENYON. From what paper is it?

"Mr. SHERMAN. It is from the London Star of April 14, 1919. It is not, I will say, a quotation-mark interview. It states that the reporter of the London Star had an interview with W. B. Colver, and then follow a number of statements about how the firm of Sulzberger & Sons disappeared from the packing business.

"I wish to say that, taking the whole of it, this statement is grossly vicious, unfair, and some of it is false.

"Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator know that it is an authentic interview with Mr. Colver?

"Mr. SHERMAN. I have clipped it from the London Star.

"Mr. KENYON. Where does the Senator get the paper?

"Mr. SHERMAN. You can get it in the Congressional Library. You will find the original on file there."

On the same page Senator SHERMAN is quoted as follows:

"I believe that Mr. Colver, if not others of the Federal Trade Commission, have communicated very unfriendly information to the British authorities, those who are capable of injuring our export trade."

On the same page Senator SHERMAN is further quoted as saying:

"So far as I said he had used violent speeches I am not correct; that is an inaccuracy, and I am ready now to make, so far as my present information goes, the correction."

I sought to secure a copy of the London Star at the Congressional Library and was told that the London Star was not usually received there, that no copy for the month of April, 1919, had been received there, and that there never had been a copy of the London Star of April 14, 1919, in the Congressional Library. Efforts were made to secure copies elsewhere but without success until as a result of correspondence with Mr. O. C. E. Matthies, of Swift & Co., I obtained from Swift & Co. what purports to be a photostat copy of page 4 of the London Star of April 14, 1919, with the article in the second column marked.

This is not an interview with me. It does not even purport to be an interview. The matters in it were not the subject of any discussion between myself and the reporter or anybody else in London.

A young man came to my room in London, represented himself to be from a London newspaper—I have no doubt from the Star—and asked a number of questions. He explained that his editor, whose name I have forgotten, was much interested in the Federal Trade Commission's report on the packers, referring to the "Summary" and "Part 2," and inquired whether or not any other reports had been published. I replied in the negative. He asked when further reports would be published. I said I did not know. He asked if his editor could have copies. I told him he could by addressing the Secretary of the Federal Trade Commission and that doubtless his name would be put on the mailing list for these documents.

He asked what, if any, legislation had been enacted by Congress.

I said none.

He asked if any legislation had been proposed. I recalled that a number of bills had been introduced, considerable hearings had been had, both the Senate and House committees, but none of the bills had come to vote when the Sixty-fifth Congress expired on the 4th day of March, 1919.

He asked me whether I thought legislation would be enacted, and I said I did not know. He asked me if the Federal Trade Commission would make further investigation, and I replied that it had finished its investigation, that it would lay its report before Congress, and that its part of the work was finished, the matter was now in the hands of Congress.

There was some general discussion about parliamentary procedure as compared with congressional procedure, and the visit came to an end.

I never knew whether the young man wrote anything or not.

The greater part of the 15 or 20 minutes during which we were together was devoted to the recitation on his part of a trust investigation which was going on and which I then heard about for the first time to the best of my knowledge. I took occasion to ask him if he knew anything about the legislation for a body similar to the Federal Trade Commission, and he said that he did not and I said that I proposed to ask Mr. McCurdy for any information he might have on that subject.

To the best of my memory nothing was said about the Sulzbergers or Wilson & Co. by either of us.

One of my traveling companions, Mr. R. W. Howard, was called upon at our hotel by the American editor of the Daily Mail. I was introduced to him. We talked generally. I spoke of my quest for Mr. Thompson's document and said I had been referred to Mr. McCurdy. We talked about the trust investigation, about which the other newspaper man told me, and it was the subject of some discussion. It is my best opinion that this man wrote nothing. These are the only instances of talking to London newspaper men which might even remotely be contemplated by the Senate resolution.

I saw no newspaper reference to myself nor any quotation attributed to me in any paper. There may have been things printed, but I never saw them.

I attended no public meeting and no social gathering, and neither heard nor made any speeches, violent or otherwise, and I had no communication with any British authority other than my telephone conversation with Mr. McCurdy and my necessary passport visits to the police authorities.

No part of my expense was paid out of public funds.

Except as set forth above, I have not communicated any information of any sort to any British official or authority.

On July 16 a long prepared statement was given out by Edward Morris, president of Morris & Co., charging that United States authorities have been engaged in sub rosa activities, saying, "This committee (the English committee on trusts) had been in correspondence for months with Chairman Colver, of the Federal Trade Commission * * *." This is an unqualified statement and is unqualifiedly false.

In the matter of the reports of the five large packing concerns in Chicago with respect to their foreign business, I remember that very great opposition was made to making those returns. Officers, attorneys, and agents of these companies visited the commission and visited various commissioners. I think Mr. Henry Veeder addressed the commission on the subject, but I was not present at the time. I was present on one occasion when Mr. Levi Mayer discussed the matter in Gov. Fort's office, and it is my recollection that Col. George A. Sanderson, who then represented one of the packing firms here in Washington, discussed this matter with me.

Respectfully,

WILLIAM B. COLVER.

Hon. VICTOR MURDOCK,
Federal Trade Commission.

As to the London Star, the following correspondence passed between me and the Librarian of Congress:

JULY 17, 1919.

LIBRARIAN OF CONGRESS,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Will you be so good as to inform the Federal Trade Commission if the London Star is among the publications regularly received by the Library of Congress, and if the London Star of the issue of April 14, 1919, was received by the Library of Congress and is available for reference by us.

May I ask that your reply be made at your earliest convenience, as the matter is somewhat pressing?

Respectfully,

(Signed) VICTOR MURDOCK,
Acting Chairman.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS,
OFFICE OF THE LIBRARIAN,
Washington, July 18, 1919.

Hon. VICTOR MURDOCK,
Acting Chairman Federal Trade Commission,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: In reply to your inquiry of July 17 to the Librarian, according to a report from Mr. Slade, the chief of our Periodical Division, the Library of Congress does not receive the London Star. We are therefore unable, to our regret, to be of service in this instance.

Very respectfully,

J. L. FARNUM, Secretary.

The purported photostat copy of the London Star subsequently secured from Mr. Matthies, of Swift & Co., and the correspondence related thereto are attached as Exhibit 25.

I also addressed the following to the Secretary of State requesting his assistance in the search for communications covered by the resolution of the Senate:

JULY 19, 1919.

To the honorable the SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Will you be so good as to transmit the inclosed message through the proper channels to your representative at London?

I request that you indicate to your representative the extreme urgency of this matter, which is in response to Senate resolution 114, which directs the Federal Trade Commission "to furnish to the Senate, at the earliest possible moment, copies of all documents, correspondence, or other papers in its possession relating to its efforts or action in promotion or concerning the export trade in meats from the United States to the Kingdom of Great Britain or any of its colonial dependencies and other countries, and especially any communications by the Federal Trade Commission, or any of its members, officers, agents, or employees with the officers or agents of any foreign government, and more especially all communications had with the ministry of reconstruction of Great Britain, or the members thereof appointed in 1918, and to include all correspondence with the Hon. Charles A. McCurdy, member of Parliament, of the ministry of foods, and recently chairman of the committee on trusts, also such correspondence with any other member of the ministry of reconstruction in relation to the meat industries of the United States."

Respectfully,

(Signed) VICTOR MURDOCK,
Acting Chairman.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
July 19, 1919.

Federal Trade Commission is required to furnish the Senate at the earliest possible moment copies of correspondence by Federal Trade Commission or its members, officers, agents, or employees with officers or agents of the ministry of reconstruction of Great Britain, or members thereof, appointed in 1918, including all correspondence with Hon. Charles A. McCurdy, ministry of foods. Please inquire what, if any, correspondence of this nature is in the possession of any of the above. Secure copies and cable them at once. Matter extremely urgent.

To this the following response has been received to-day:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 29, 1919.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: With further reference to your letter of July 19, 1919, regarding certain correspondence required of your commission by the Senate, you are informed that the Department of State has received a telegram dated July 26, 1919, from the American ambassador at London reporting that neither Mr. McCurdy nor the ministry of reconstruction is able to trace this correspondence. The ambassador therefore requests further information concerning the probable dates and the subject matter of the letters in question, and the department will be glad to communicate to him any further information you may furnish along the lines mentioned. I am, gentlemen,

Your obedient servant,
For the Secretary of State:

WILLIAM PHILLIPS,
Assistant Secretary.

COMMUNICATIONS BY OFFICERS, AGENTS, AND EMPLOYEES OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

The secretary of the commission reports as follows:

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
Washington, 21 July, 1919.

To the CHAIRMAN:

Pursuant to your direction careful inquiry has been made of the officers, agents, and employees of the commission. This inquiry followed the lines indicated by my letter of July 16 to the personnel, as follows:

"JULY 16, 1919.

"OFFICERS, AGENTS, AND EMPLOYEES OF THE COMMISSION CONDUCTING CORRESPONDENCE.

"DEAR SIR: You are instructed to make immediate response to the secretary of the commission as to whether or not you have had any communications with officers or agents of any foreign Government regarding the export trade in meats from the United States or regarding the meat industries of the United States, and especially any communications had on these subjects with the ministry of reconstruction of Great Britain or the members thereof appointed in 1918, or any correspondence with Hon. Charles A. McCurdy, M. P., of the ministry of foods and recently chairman of the committee on trusts; also any correspondence with any other member of the ministry of reconstruction.

"If so, you are instructed to furnish the secretary copies of such communications at once.

"By direction of the commission:

"J. P. YODER, Secretary."

The replies from the officers, agents, and employees of the commission were negative in every case except Dr. J. G. Ohsol, who had been assigned to the duty of collecting information with respect to food and fuel regulations in belligerent countries, and Mr. Stuart Chase.

Dr. Ohsol's statement is as follows:

"FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
"Washington.

"Mr. J. P. YODER, Secretary.

"DEAR SIR: In response to your request of July 16, 1919 (Form 1429), I report as follows:

"Pursuant to instructions from Mr. W. Y. Durand and Dr. G. A. Stephens, of the commission's staff, I spent several weeks during July and August of 1918 in the Library of Congress and in the reference library of the United States Food Administration gathering material on methods of food control abroad, paying especial attention to the Smithfield meat market of London.

"Failing to obtain satisfactory data on the Smithfield wholesale meat market organization from the files of the National Food Journal, published by the British Ministry of Food, and from the London Times, I requested information on the above subject from Maj. Phipps, of the Allied Provisions Export Commission, at the Food Administration's offices in Washington. This was done at the suggestion of the librarian of the Food Administration.

"Maj. Phipps had no definite information at hand on the subject and referred me to Messrs. Charles Pearson and Cunliffe, of the Allied Provisions Export Commission, stationed at Chicago and New York.

"I reported my interview in due course to Dr. G. A. Stephens.

"I also mentioned the matter in a personal letter, of which I have no copy, to Mr. Stuart Chase, an examiner of the Federal Trade Commission, at that time in Chicago, suggesting to him to see Mr. Pearson or Mr. Cunliffe, provided they should happen to be in Chicago, and ask them for particulars about the new Smithfield Market organization.

"Mr. Chase did see Mr. Cunliffe, who promised him to write to London for the desired particulars.

"When I arrived at Chicago last fall, Mr. Chase handed me on November 1, 1918, three documents which he had just received from Mr. Cunliffe.

"These documents have been handed to Commissioner Murdock for inclusion in his report in response to Senate resolution 114, being marked 'Exhibit 18, Ohsol's file.'

"The exhibits referred to consist of:

"(1) Memorandum and articles of association of the London and Counties Wholesale Meat Supply Association (Ltd.) (a corporation organized under the auspices of the ministry of food in connection with the distribution of food in the Smithfield Market and other territory included in 'the London and counties area').

"(2) Proof sheet of a form of agreement between the food controller and the tenants of the Smithfield Market.

"(3) Typewritten memorandum entitled 'Distribution of supplies of dead meat through the Smithfield Control Board (Smithfield Market) to retail butchers in the London metropolitan police area,' signed by A. P. Twigg, and dated September 6, 1918.

"Apart from the above-related circumstances I have had no communication of any kind with the British Ministries of Food and of Reconstruction or any of their members nor with the officers or agents of any foreign Government respecting the subjects covered by the resolution.

"Respectfully submitted.

"JOHANN G. OHSOL,
"Special Expert.

"JULY 21, 1919."

Dr. Ohsol's report seems to indicate that Examiner Stuart Chase had some communication with Agent Cunliffe, of the British ministry of food, at Chicago, in connection with obtaining the documents desired by Dr. Ohsol, and Mr. Chase being absent on leave, I have communicated with him as follows:

[Telegram.]

"FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
"Washington, July 21, 1919.

"STUART CHASE,
"108 Cherry Street, West Newton, Mass.:

"Senate resolution asks full disclosure on part any member personnel Federal Trade Commission of any communication with officers, agents, foreign governments, especially British ministry of foods, and more especially Charles A. McCurdy, member of Parliament. Apparently you had some contact with one Cunliffe at Chicago. Wire circumstances fully, send any original documents special delivery, or indicate where same can be found. Similarly advise fully if you have had communication with any other foreign officer. Answer quick. "YODER."

"WASHINGTON, D. C., July 21, 1919.

"YODER,
"Federal Trade Commission:

"Your telegram dated July 21 to Stuart Chase, 108 Cherry Street, West Newton, Mass., has been forwarded, Government paid, to Center Harbor, N. H. If you desire to communicate with this office by telephone in regard to the above message, call Franklin 7100 and ask for extension No. 66. Changes in the address must be paid for at the usual rates.

"W. R. WILLIAMS."

The following reply has been received to this telegram:

"MEREDITH, N. H., July 22, 1919.

"YODER,
"Secretary Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D. C.:

"Saw considerable of Cunliffe and Pearson, British ministry food, in Chicago while working for food administration, same office. Civilities only; no official business on my part; discussed meat prices on several occasions. Remember no correspondence. Ask Ohsol about Food Administration correspondence he saved; something there, perhaps.

"STUART CHASE."

The export division, through Dr. Notz, made a report, approved by Chairman Fort, as follows:

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
Washington, July 19, 1919.

Mr. J. P. YODER,
Secretary Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: With reference to Senate resolution 114, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session, the undersigned, in charge of the Export Trade Division of the Federal Trade Commission, begs to advise you as follows:

Upon investigation of the files and records of this division, I find that they contain no documents, correspondence, or communications with any officers or agents of any foreign Government or with the ministry of reconstruction of Great Britain, or the members thereof appointed in 1918, or with the Hon. Charles A. McCurdy, of the ministry of foods, or with any other member of the ministry of reconstruction in relation to the meat industries of the United States. No communications have taken place between this division and officers and agents of any foreign Government, to the best of my knowledge.

Under section 5 of the export trade act (Webb-Pomerene law) "associations" organized for and engaged in export trade are directed to file certain verified statements (articles of incorporation, by-laws, and agreement) with this commission. Up to the present time two "associations," purporting to be organized for the export of packing-house products and meats, have filed papers with the commission, viz, the American Provisions Export Co., 316–319 Royal Insurance Building, Chicago, Ill., and the United States Provision Export Corporation, 175 West Jackson Boulevard, Chicago, Ill. The originals are being submitted with the report of the commission.

The sworn statements filed by these two associations with the commission, giving the names of their officers, directors, stockholders, or members, and other data, do not contain any of the following names, viz: Swift & Co., Armour & Co., Morris & Co., Wilson & Co. (Inc.), Cudahy Packing Co.

Respectfully submitted.

WILLIAM NOTZ,
Export Trade Division.

Approved:
JOHN FRANKLIN FORT.

The former secretary of the commission, Mr. L. L. Bracken, and the chief economist of the commission have signed certain letters in their official capacities. The correspondence signed by them in their official capacities is included in the files transmitted in the succeeding section of this report, devoted to official correspondence.

The negative responses from officers, employees, and agents of the commission are handed you herewith, inclosed in an envelope and marked "Exhibit 23."

As for myself, I have had no communication whatsoever with any British official or any official of any foreign Government with respect to the matters inquired of by the Senate resolution.

Respectfully,

J. P. YODER, Secretary.

OFFICIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE COMMISSION WITH OFFICERS OR AGENTS OF FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS.

The original correspondence files furnished herewith are arranged to show—

First, any correspondence with the British ministers of food and of reconstruction, including correspondence with the committee on trusts and the Hon. Charles A. McCurdy, with respect to which the resolution inquires especially; and Second, any correspondence with other officers or agents of foreign governments, including the distribution of the Federal Trade Commission's reports, with or without correspondence, to such officers or agents. The files are arranged chronologically by subjects.

(a) Correspondence of the Federal Trade Commission with the British ministries of food and reconstruction, the committee on trusts, and the Hon. Charles A. McCurdy.

Letter of October 18, 1918, to national kitchens division of the ministry of food, London, signed by Francis Walker, Chief Economist of the Federal Trade Commission. (Original of this letter is in general file, sup. 5, en. 7, and is attached as Exhibit 1.)

Letter of April 28, 1919, from Charles A. McCurdy of the ministry of food, London, to William B. Colver, care of Ed. L. Keen, the United Press, Paris.

Letter of May 24, 1919, from Charles A. McCurdy, ministry of food, London, to William B. Colver, care of Ed. L. Keen, the United Press, Paris.

Document inclosed in above letter of May 24, being report of committee on trusts of the British ministry of reconstruction, dated London, 1919.

Letter of July 19, 1919, from William B. Colver to Hon. Charles A. McCurdy, ministry of food, London.

(These three letters and the inclosed report of the committee on trusts are in Colver's file attached as Exhibit 2.)

(b) Correspondence of the Federal Trade Commission with other officers or agents of foreign governments (including distribution of the Federal Trade Commission's reports, with or without correspondence to such officers or agents).

The letters which are listed below and the originals of which are attached to this report as indicated, constitute the only correspondence with officers or agents of foreign governments on the subject of the export trade in meat or of the meat industries of the United States which has been found in the files of the commission.

Letter of February 1, 1915, from Joseph E. Davies, Commissioner of Corporations, to Right Hon. Sir R. C. Munroe-Ferguson, governor general, Melbourne, Australia.

Letter of March 13, 1915, from Geo. Steward, official secretary, Commonwealth of Australia, governor general's office, to the Commissioner of Corporations, Department of Commerce, Washington.

Letter of March 24, 1915, from George Steward, official secretary of the Governor General of Australia, to the Commissioner of Corporations, Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C.

Letter of May 12, 1915, from Joseph E. Davies, chairman of Federal Trade Commission, to official secretary of the Governor General, Melbourne, Australia.

(The four above letters concern a request by the Commissioner of Corporations, subsequently the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, for a copy of the report of an investigation of the beef industry by Commonwealth royal commission on the meat-export trade of Australia and the supplying of this document. They are in files 2267–1–1 of the Bureau of Corporations, and 8029–1–1 of the Federal Trade Commission, and are attached as part of Exhibit 3.)

Letter of November 8, 1915, from the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission to Mr. Cherry, veterinary inspector for the Commonwealth in England, care of comptroller-general of customs, London.

Letter of November 8, 1915, from the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission to comptroller-general of customs, London.

Letter of November 20, 1915, from J. P. Byrne, customhouse, London, to the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission.

(These letters have to do with the request from the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission for a copy of the report by the veterinary inspector for the Commonwealth to the comptroller-general of customs on the Beef Trust. They are in file 8029–3–1, attached as a part of Exhibit 3.)

Letter of July 13, 1917, from the secretary of the Federal Trade Commission to the department of commercial intelligence, London.

Letter of July 16, 1917, from the secretary of the Federal Trade Commission to the department of commercial intelligence, London.

Letter of September 5, 1917, from the board of trade, commercial department, London, to the secretary of the Federal Trade Commission.

Letter of September 22, 1917, from the secretary of the Federal Trade Commission to the assistant secretary, board of trade, London.

(These four letters concern an arrangement for exchange of published reports. Though general in scope, not relating particularly to meat, they are nevertheless here included. They are in file 8029–3–1 and are attached as part of Exhibit 3.)

Following is correspondence from the files of the Federal Trade Commission's Division of Publications concerning the distribution of the reports of the commission relating to the meat industries of the United States.

(The duplicate franks above listed were not accompanied by correspondence, being records in general of reports sent out to persons on the regular mailing list or in response to requests telephoned or conveyed through individual messengers. These duplicate franks are attached as part of Exhibit 4.)

In addition to the distribution of commission's report under frank, the following distribution was made directly in response to request by representatives of the foreign embassies and legations indicated:

December 30, 1918. British ambassador, 6 copies of part 2 of the report on the meat-packing industry; Norwegian minister, 3 copies of part 2; Switzerland Legation, 1 copy of part 2; Italian Embassy, 1 copy of part 2.

July 15, 1919: Argentine Embassy, 2 copies of summary of part 2, meat-packing report.

At various times the British Embassy has sent its messenger to obtain copies of the summary and part 2 of the meat-packing report. It is estimated that in all, through this medium, it has obtained 50 copies of each.

DOCUMENTS AND OTHER PAPERS RELATING TO THE COMMISSION'S EFFORTS OR ACTION IN PROMOTION OR CONCERNING EXPORT TRADE IN MEATS.

In this section of the report are furnished all documents and other papers relating to the Federal Trade Commission's efforts or action in promotion or concerning export trade in meats from the United States to the Kingdom of Great Britain or any of its colonial dependencies or other countries. These include documents and papers, whether in connection with the commission's investigation of foreign trade and its duties under the Webb-Pomerene Act, permitting combinations in American export trade, or in connection with the food investigation directed by the President in his letter of February 7, 1917, or in connection with the ordinary course of the commission's work.

In the course of the commission's foreign-trade investigation, which resulted in its report on cooperation in American export trade, correspondence was had with the representatives of American meat concerns, schedules were received from them, and testimony received in hearings in an effort to secure information as to the problems, difficulties, and suggestions of the meat industry on export trade.

These documents are furnished, as well as documents in other connections which bear on the export trade activities of the larger packers, individually or jointly, and also of the small packers, individually or jointly.

Published documents of this Government, which include data on the export trade in meat, are not furnished, as being readily available to the Senate; but certain statistics of the world trade in meats, published by W. Weddell & Co. (Ltd.), an English firm, are furnished. Documents concerning war regulation of the distribution of food, particularly meat, by foreign governments, are included, as no doubt affecting our exports.

Incorporation of three confidential State Department reports is with consent of that department. (My letter and the consenting reply is in Exhibit 24.)

(a) Swift & Co.:

1. Letter, November 4, 1915, from chairman Federal Trade Commission to persons who attended the foreign trade hearings, and inclosing schedule of questions.

2. Letter, November 24, 1915, from Louis F. Swift to chairman Federal Trade Commission.

3. Letter, December 2, 1915, from chairman Federal Trade Commission to Louis F. Swift.

(These three letters are a form request for opinion as to the desirability of cooperation for export trade, the reply thereto, and acknowledgment of reply. They are in Files 8411–1 and 8404–861, and are attached as part of Exhibit 5, which is marked "Swift & Co., Opinion on Cooperation in Export Trade.")

NOTE.—The schedule of questions inclosed in the letter of November 4, 1915, was not returned by Swift & Co., but the form was the same as that returned by the G. H. Hammond Co., one of Swift & Co.'s subsidiaries, and which is furnished below.

4. Letters, statements, and other papers, being correspondence between Henry Veeder, chief counsel of Swift & Co., and the Federal Trade Commission regarding oleomargarine exports to the West Indies. (These papers constitute the entire file 8404–30, which is attached as part of Exhibit 5 and marked "Swift & Co. (Veeder), Oleomargarine Exports to West Indies.")

5. Letter, from packer files, dated January 19, 1917, from Jas. P. Moon, of Swift & Co., to Louis F. Swift. (This concerns Cunard Line supply business. It is from File Pac 7 F 7 and is attached as part of Exhibit 5, marked "Swift & Co., Cunard.")

6. Reports of interviews of various persons and firms by agents of the Federal Trade Commission concerning alleged practices of Swift & Co. in export trade. (These reports comprise Marcum No. 15, McIsaacs No. 23, Barrett No. 1, Barrett No. 2, and are attached as part of Exhibit 5 and marked "Swift & Co., Alleged Practices in Export Trade, Agents' Reports.")

7. Swift & Co.'s statistics of sales, total and foreign, 1908–1916, as furnished to the commission's examiner, Dr. A. S. Kravitz.

8. List of Swift & Co.'s foreign representatives.

(The two above items are comprised in Files Big 7 S 5 S 4 and Big 7 S 5 F 5, and are attached as part of Exhibit 5, marked "Swift & Co., Foreign Sales and Representatives.")

9. Schedule No. 21293 on foreign trade conditions from the G. H. Hammond Co., a subsidiary of Swift & Co. (This schedule, sent in reply to a form letter to this company, dated November 4, 1915, is attached as part of Exhibit 5, and marked "Swift & Co. (the G. H. Hammond Co.) Schedule, Foreign trade.")

10. Letters between the Federal Trade Commission and Swift & Co. concerning the profit and loss of Swift & Co. from its foreign subsidiaries and concerning the furnishing of the financial statements of such subsidiaries.

NOTE.—Swift & Co., having furnished its profit and loss from foreign subsidiaries (1912–1917) as a single figure for all these subsidiaries combined, correspondence followed seeking more detail, and particularly the extent to which profits and losses of the foreign companies had been taken up on the books of Swift & Co. Thereupon the financial statements of the foreign companies were required from Swift & Co.

(These letters are in file Sch 5, O 5, Swift & Co., pt. 2, and are attached as part of Exhibit 5, marked "Swift & Co., profit and loss foreign companies, correspondence.")

11. Financial statements concerning profit and loss of foreign companies, furnished by Swift & Co. pursuant to foregoing correspondence. (These statements are in file Sch 5, O 5, Swift & Co., pt. 1–1, and entire file Sch 5, O 5, Swift & Co., pt. 1–2, and are attached as part of Exhibit 5, marked "Swift & Co., financial statements, foreign companies.")

12. Letters between the Federal Trade Commission and Swift & Co. concerning the organization of Swift & Co.'s foreign subsidiaries. (These letters are in file Sch 5, O 5, Swift & Co., pt. 2, and are attached as part of Exhibit 5, and marked "Swift & Co., organization of foreign subsidiaries, correspondence.")

13. Schedules of Swift & Co.'s foreign subsidiaries, showing their organization, etc. (These schedules, each comprising a separate file, are attached as part of Exhibit 5, and marked "Swift & Co., foreign subsidiaries, organization schedules." The individual file numbers are listed in the exhibit.)

14. Reference is made to the State Department file listed below under (K) 4 for a consular report concerning the Swift Beef Co. of London, its organization, articles of incorporation, and charter powers, and data appearing in the prize proceedings with reference to meat cargoes.

(B) Armour & Co.:

1. Statement of J. Ogden Armour in hearings of the Federal Trade Commission on foreign trade conditions, July 27, 1915, pages 85–92. Certain lists of Swift & Co. of letters, and letter of July 23, 1915, from vice chairman Federal Trade Commission, to Louis F. Swift. (This statement is in file 8519–1–7–2 and is attached as a part of Exhibit 6 marked "Armour & Co., statement in foreign trade hearings 1915." With this is attached the original statement submitted by Mr. Armour and read by him at the hearing, this original being from file 8520–3.)

2. Report of interview of retired commission broker by an agent of the Federal Trade Commission concerning alleged practices of Armour & Co. in the export trade. (This report is Long No. 24, and is attached as part of Exhibit 6 and marked "Armour & Co., alleged practices of export trade, agents' report.")

3. Armour & Co.'s statistics of its export trade from 1898 to 1916 as furnished, in great detail, to the commission's examiner, Dr. A. S. Kravitz, together with a statement by H. M. Frey as to Armour & Co.'s foreign branch houses. (These papers are in file Big 7, A 5, F 7, and file Big 7, A 5, B 7, and are attached as part of Exhibit 6, being marked "Armour & Co., foreign sales and foreign branch houses.")

4. Letters between the Federal Trade Commission and Armour & Co. concerning the furnishing of profit and loss statements of its foreign subsidiaries. (These letters are in file Sch 5, O 5, Armour & Co., pt. 2, and are attached as part of Exhibit 6, marked "Armour & Co., profit and loss of foreign subsidiaries, correspondence.")

5. Financial statements of Armour & Co.'s foreign subsidiaries furnished pursuant to the foregoing correspondence. (These statements comprise the entire file Sch 5, O 5, Armour & Co., pts. 1–2, and are attached as part of Exhibit 6, marked "Armour & Co., foreign companies, financial statements.")

6. Letters between the Federal Trade Commission and Armour & Co. regarding the furnishing of organization schedules for its foreign subsidiaries. (These letters are in file Sch 5, O 5, Armour & Co., pt. 2, and file Sch 5, O 5, Armour & Co., foreign companies, and are attached as part of Exhibit 6, marked "Armour & Co., foreign companies, organization, correspondence.")

7. Armour & Co.'s foreign companies' organization schedules furnished pursuant to the foregoing correspondence. (The organization schedules are in file Sch 5, O 5, Armour & Co., foreign companies, and are attached as part of Exhibit 6 and marked "Armour & Co., foreign companies' organization schedules.")

8. Reference is made to the State Department file listed below under (K) 4 for a consular report concerning Armour & Co. (Ltd.), of London, its organization, articles of incorporation and charter powers, and data appearing in the prize proceedings with reference to meat cargoes.

9. Report of the commission's special expert, J. G. Ohsol, on operation of export beef department of Armour & Co., with papers and telegrams from Armour file exhibiting office methods of handling shipments, etc. (These papers are with file 9078–2–Hog 5, pt. 2, and are attached as part of Exhibit 6 and marked "Armour & Co., export beef department, Ohsol's report.")

(C) Morris & Co.:

1. Statistics of foreign sales, 1909–1916.

2. Annual sales, 1910–1916, including foreign business.

(These statistics were furnished to the commission's examiner, Dr. A. S. Kravitz. They comprise file Big 7, M 5, A 5, and are attached as part of Exhibit 7 and marked "Morris & Co., foreign sales.")

3. Letters between Federal Trade Commission and Morris & Co. concerning profit and loss and organization of the foreign subsidiaries of Morris & Co. and statements furnished pursuant thereto. (These papers are in file Sch 5, O 5, Morris & Co., and are attached as part of Exhibit 7, being marked "Morris & Co., foreign subsidiaries organization and profit and loss.")

4. Reference is made to the State Department file listed below under (K) 4 for a consular report concerning Morris Beef Co. (Ltd.), of London, and the Dausk Fedt Import Kompagni, and their organization, articles of incorporation and charter powers, and data appearing in the prize proceedings with reference to meat cargoes.

(D) Wilson & Co. (Inc.):

1. Schedule of T. M. Sinclair & Co. (Ltd.), a subsidiary of Wilson & Co. (Inc.), on foreign trade conditions. (This schedule is No. 28306 and is attached as part of Exhibit 8 and marked "Wilson & Co. (Inc.) (T. M. Sinclair & Co. (Ltd.), foreign-trade schedule.")

2. Letters between Federal Trade Commission and T. M. Sinclair & Co. (Ltd.), a subsidiary of Wilson & Co. (Inc.). (These three letters concern a request by the commission for further information supplementing its schedule on foreign-trade conditions, the companies' reply thereto, and acknowledgment by the commission. They are in file 8404–1547 and are attached as part of Exhibit 8 and marked "Wilson & Co. (Inc.) (T. M. Sinclair & Co. (Ltd.)), foreign-trade letters.")

3. Letter from packer files, dated January 4, 1917, from P. A. S. Franklin, of International Mercantile Marine Co., to Harry Bronner, director of Wilson & Co. (Inc.), concerning contract for steamers for beef shipments. (This is from file Pac 7, F 7, and is attached as part of Exhibit 8, and marked "Wilson & Co. (Inc.) (Bronner), International Mercantile Marine Co.")

4. Extract from report of interview of Chicago agent of T. M. Sinclair & Co. (Ltd.) by examiner of commission. (This concerns the company's method of cutting pork for the export trade and volume of pork tenderloins, as compared with Armour and Swift. It is on pp. 4–5 of Long No. 19, file Age 5, Lo 5, pts. 1–2, and is attached as part of Exhibit 8, being marked "Wilson & Co. (Inc.) (T. M. Sinclair & Co. (Ltd.), cutting pork for export.")

5. Statistics for foreign sales, 1914–1917.

6. Lists of foreign representatives.

(These statistics of sales and lists of foreign representatives furnished to the commission's examiner, Dr. A. S. Kravitz, comprise files Big 7–W–5–F 7 and Big 7–W 5–F 5, and are attached as part of Exhibit 8, and marked "Wilson & Co. (Inc.), foreign sales and representatives.")

7. Letters between Federal Trade Commission and Wilson & Co. (Inc.) regarding the profit and loss and organization of foreign subsidiaries of Wilson & Co. (Inc.) (These are in file Sch 5, O 5, Wilson & Co. (Inc.), pt. 2, and are attached as part of Exhibit 8, marked "Wilson & Co. (Inc.), foreign subsidiaries, profit and loss, and organization.")

(E) The Cudahy Packing Co.:

1. Letter of July 19, 1915, from vice chairman of Federal Trade Commission to Thomas Creigh, general counsel Cudahy Packing Co., chairman special committee on Federal Trade Commission, Chicago Association of Commerce. (Letter No. 1 is an invitation to attend the foreign-trade hearings at Chicago and present views on the export trade. It is in file 8046–1–3 and is attached as part of Exhibit 9 and marked "Cudahy Packing Co. (Creigh), invitation to foreign-trade hearings.")

2. Statement of Thomas Creigh at foreign-trade hearings of Federal Trade Commission at Chicago, July 27, 1915. (This is in file 8519–1–7–2, covering pp. 64–73 of the record, and is attached as part of Exhibit 9, marked "Cudahy Packing Co. (Creigh), statement at foreign-trade hearings.")

3. Letter of February 16, 1916, from Thomas Creigh to Federal Trade Commission acknowledging receipt of a circular letter of January 24, 1916, on foreign trade. (In file 8404–1553, attached as part of Exhibit 9 and marked "Cudahy Packing Co. (Creigh), acknowledgment of circular.")

4. Explanatory and statistical statement entitled "The Cudahy Packing Co. export department," furnished to the commission's examiner, Dr. A. S. Kravitz. (This statement includes a list of foreign representatives and value of export shipments of the company, 1910–1916. It comprises file Big 7, C 5, F 5, and is attached as part of Exhibit 9, marked "Cudahy Packing Co., foreign representatives and sales.")

5. Letters between Federal Trade Commission and Cudahy Packing Co., concerning profit and loss and organization of Cudahy Packing Co.'s foreign subsidiaries, and statements supplied pursuant thereto. (These papers are in file Sch 5, O 5, Cudahy Packing Co., pt. 2, Sch 5, O 5, Cudahy & Co. (Ltd.), and Sch 5, O 5, Cudahy Packing Co. (Ltd.), and are attached as part of Exhibit 9, being marked "Cudahy Packing Co., foreign subsidiaries, profit and loss, and organization.")

6. Reference is made to the State Department file listed below under (K 4) for a consular report concerning Cudahy Packing Co. (Ltd.), of London, its organization, articles of incorporation, and charter powers.

(F) Large packers, joint.—Letters and documents relating to joint activities of large packers in export trade:

1. Letter and telegram from the packers' files relating to the seizure by the British Government of cargoes of meat exported to neutral countries and to joint expenditures by Armour & Co., Swift & Co., and Morris & Co. for legal services in connection therewith. (These are in File Pac 7, F 7, attached as part of Exhibit 10, and marked "Large packers, joint, British seizures, packer files.")

2. Items concerning expenditures for legal services in connection with British seizures, from answers of large packers to question 15 of the Federal Trade Commission's schedule A, Slaughtering and meat packing, and correspondence regarding same. (These items appear, with others, in answer to question 15, which required disclosure of fees or other payments in excess of $5,000 for services rendered. The original replies are attached and the items believed to relate to the British seizures have been indicated by the commission for the purpose of this report by check marks. It does not appear in the case of Wilson & Co. (Inc.) and Cudahy Packing Co. whether or not these are joint payments, and they may be presumed to be individual. Correspondence as to payments of Wilson & Co. (Inc.) is attached. These papers form part of Exhibit 10, marked "Large packers, joint and individual, British seizures.")

3. Letters from files of Swift & Co. concerning kidney knobs. (These are in File Pac 7, F 7, and are attached as part of Exhibit 10, marked "Large packers, joint, kidney knobs.")

4. Reference is here made to extract from Marcum, report No. 15, last paragraph, which reports alleged joint export activities of Armour & Co. and Swift & Co. (This document has already been furnished. See above, A: Swift & Co., item 6.)

(G) Large packers, grouped.—Documents referring to the alleged export activities of large packers as a group, or in general, or with reference to two or more of them:

1. Reports of interviews of various firms and persons by agents of the Federal Trade Commission, especially as to alleged practices of large packers in acquiring export trade. (These are in files 9076–14–1–1 (For 5 G 5) and 9076–14–3–1 (For 5 U 5). They are reports of extracts from reports, Barrett, 16 and 17; Long, 22, 25, and 26; Reeves, 1; Reed, 67 and 68. There is also furnished, at pages 5, 6, and 7 of Cowie No. 20, File Age 5, Co 7, pt. 2, on which pages are marked passages bearing on this subject. Those papers are furnished as Exhibit 11 and marked "Large packers, grouped, alleged export practices, agents' reports.")

(H) Small packers:

1. There are furnished letters and statements concerning the interest of the small packers in connection with the Federal Trade Commission's foreign-trade investigation. These papers comprise a statement of Charles E. Herrick, secretary of the Brennan Packing Co., Chicago, in the foreign-trade hearings at Chicago, July 28, 1915, as appearing in the record of hearings, together with his manuscript statement submitted at the hearing and supplemental correspondence regarding statements in the hearing. Also the statement of C. H. Frye, president of Frye & Co., meat packers, Seattle, Wash., at the Seattle foreign-trade hearing, August, 1915. Schedules of foreign trade conditions from the Wilson Provision Co., Peoria, Ill. (not a subsidiary of Wilson & Co. (Inc.)); Nuckolls Packing Co., Pueblo, Colo.; Hammond, Standish & Co., Detroit, Mich.; Brennan Packing Co., Chicago; and John Morrell & Co., Ottumwa, Iowa. (The Morrell schedule, No. 24826, was received by the Federal Trade Commission in confidence and bears notation "Please treat these answers confidentially." The commission calls this to the attention of the Senate in connection with publication of this report.)

(These papers are in files, as indicated in the attached Exhibit 12, and marked, "Small packers' foreign trade investigation.")

2. Reports of interviews with various small packers and other firms concerning their handling of export trade in meats by agents of the commission. (These reports are in files 9076–14–1 (For 5 G 5), file Age 5 Lo 5, pts. 1, 2, and 3, and the Age 5 Co 7, pt. 2. They consist of agents' reports: Haines, No. 1; Twombly, Nos. 2, 19, 37, 53, and 69; Barrett, Nos. 13 and 19; Long, Nos. 5, 7, 14, 15, 26, 85; Bays, No. 38; Cowie, No. 21. In the case of reports Long 7, 15, and 26, and Cowie 21, the matter furnished is in the form of pages from these reports, the portion of each page that refers to export trade being marked by the commission for the purpose of submission to the Senate.)

(The above papers are attached as part of Exhibit 12 and marked "Small packers' methods of handling export trade, agents' report.")

(I) Small packers, association, under Webb-Pomerene Act for export trade:

1. Papers filed by the American Provisions Export Co., Chicago, Ill. (These papers are in File Association 20, and are attached as Exhibit 13 and are marked, "Small packers, association, American Provisions Export Co., application under Webb-Pomerene Act.")

2. United States Provision Export Corporation, Chicago, Ill. (These papers are in File Association 26, and are attached as Exhibit 14 and are marked, "Small packers, association, United States Provision Export Corporation, application under Webb-Pomerene Act.")

NOTE.—According to opinion previously rendered by counsel of the export trade division, part of the data in these papers is confidential. These papers are originals submitted in compliance with section 5 of the Webb-Pomerene Act.

It has been the practice of the commission not to permit these papers to leave the files for any purpose whatever, the commissioners and members of the export trade division using only certified copies of the same.

It is respectfully urged that these original documents be immediately returned to the commission by the Senate and that the commission be permitted to substitute certified copies of the same.

(J) State Department, cable to British ministry of food:

1. Letter September 11, 1918, from Federal Trade Commission to Secretary of State requesting transmission of inclosed cable to British ministry of food, seeking information on British governmental control of the meat business; reply of Department of State, October 29, 1918, through Secretary of Treasury, inclosing report of Chargé d'Affaires F. M. Gunther, London, advising that British ministry of food was loath to supply the majority of the information; letter of November 1, 1918, from Department of State referring further to matter.

The above papers are those referred to and quoted by Commissioner Colver in his personal statement. Reference is made to Dr. J. G. Ohsol's personal statement (p. 33) regarding the securing of part of the information requested in the cable, viz, that regarding the regulation of the Smithfield Market.

(These papers are in File P F—Cor 5 St 3, and are attached as part of Exhibit 15, marked, "State Department, cable to British ministry of food.")

NOTE.—The last page of this file consists of office memos explaining failure to acknowledge State Department letter of November 1, 1918, and the report forwarded through the Treasury, due to absence of Dr. Ohsol, who had had charge of the inquiry into foreign governmental regulations, and final filing of the material unacknowledged January 28, 1919.

(K) State Department, correspondence and reports:

1. Letter from Department of State to Federal Trade Commission, April 12, 1915, requesting publicity as to certain shipping difficulties in export trade with the Netherlands, referred to in an inclosed letter from American Chamber of Commerce in the Netherlands, and reply of Federal Trade Commission to Department of State, April 17, 1915.

(These letters and the inclosure, including the list of five pages of goods for shipment among which were certain items of meat, lard, etc., are in file 9731–3, and are attached as part of Exhibit 15 and marked "State Department, Shipping Difficulties, Export Trade.")

2. Letters from Department of State, March 16, 1917, and March 19, 1917, transmitting to Federal Trade Commission for examination numerous communications advocating embargo on exportation of foodstuffs from the United States; letter from Federal Trade Commission to Department of State, March 27, 1917, returning these communications; and memorandum of Francis Walker, chief economist of the commission, reporting on the examination of these communications.

3. Letter from Department of State to Federal Trade Commission, April 2, 1917, transmitting report of Consul General R. P. Skinner, of London, on subject of British meat supplies, and letter of Federal Trade Commission, April 5, 1917, acknowledging receipt.

(These letters and the consul general's report are in file 8827 and are attached as part of Exhibit 15, marked "State Department, British Meat Supplies, Skinner's Report.")

4. Letter from Federal Trade Commission to State Department, September 10, 1917, requesting it to secure from the British Government data for use of the commission in its investigation of the meat industry, acknowledgment by Department of State, and transmittal by it (letter of January 8, 1918) of report of Consul General Robert P. Skinner, of London, furnishing the available information, with correspondence referring thereto.

(These papers are in file 8827. The consul general's report covers the organization of the principal British companies of a number of American packers, and data as to their representatives from the prize proceedings with respect to meat cargoes seized by the British Government; also data regarding the governmental regulation of food under the defense of the realm act; also gives agencies or representatives of smaller American packers in the United Kingdom. These papers are attached as part of Exhibit 15 and marked "State Department, Organization of British Companies of American Packers and British Government Regulation of Food, Skinner's Report.")

5. Letters from Department of State, January 15, 1918, and May 6, 1918, transmitting reports by Consul General Winslow, of Auckland, and Consul General Skinner, of London, on American meat corporations in New Zealand, with commission's acknowledgment of same. (These papers are in file 8827, and are attached as part of Exhibit 15, being marked "State Department, American Meat Corporations in New Zealand, Skinner Reports.")

6. Letter of State Department, May 31, 1918, to Federal Trade Commission, inclosing copy of dispatch from American Consul General Winslow, at Auckland, New Zealand, requesting, on behalf of Hon. W. D. S. Macdonald, minister of agriculture, industries, and commerce from New Zealand, copies of available information relative to investigation by the Federal Trade Commission of the American Meat Trust, with correspondence relating thereto. (These papers are in file 8827, attached as part of Exhibit 15, being marked "State Department, New Zealand, Request for Information on American Meat Trust.")

NOTE.—Reference is made to further correspondence through the State Department with the American consul general relative to this matter described on page 46 above, and attached in the first part of Exhibit 4.

(L) Digest of Library Research on Foreign Companies of Large Packers:

This is an office report on "Slaughtering and Packing Business of the Big Five in Foreign Countries. Library Research at Chicago, by L. T. Cowie (examiner, Federal Trade Commission), 1917." The bulk of this document does not concern export trade in meat from the United States, but rather exports from foreign countries wherever the large American packers have slaughtering plants. Thus it covers South American and Central American countries, including any Paraguay data on the American International Corporation, and also Australia and New Zealand and Canada. The data, however, on Great Britain (being pages 16–19) bears on export trade from the United States.

(This is File For 5, S 5, and is attached as Exhibit 16, marked "Cowie Library Research on the Big Five in Foreign Countries.")

(M) Documents Secured by Commission from W. Weddell & Co., Ltd.:

These documents bear on the import trade of Great Britain and world trade in meats, etc. This company's trade publications on world statistics of the meat industry have a recognized standing, and include data on exports of meats from the United States.

(These documents, with correspondence regarding their transmission, are in File Sou 7 and File 8012–216, and are attached as Exhibit 17 marked "World Meat Statistics, W. Weddell & Co., Ltd.")

NOTE.—There are references in the letters from W. Weddell & Co., Ltd., to the commission's letters of October 15, 1917, and November 8, 1917. Carbons of these two letters are not now found in the files of the commission. The chief of files advises that this was probably correspondence carried on by the former librarian of the commission to secure documents and that copies of such correspondence probably never reached the files.

(N) Papers and Documents Concerning Regulation of Food and Meat Industries by Foreign Governments:

These papers and documents, so far as they relate to governmental regulation of foods or meats in countries to which the United States exports meats, are furnished because such regulation of distribution by the foreign governments affects the export trade of American companies in these products.

Reference is made to certain documents and typed copies of items in London papers concerning such regulations in Consul General Skinner's report already referred to, and which have been furnished above under (K) 4, being the fifth section of Exhibit 15.

1. Documents from British Ministry of Food regarding governmental regulation, particularly of the Smithfield Market. These documents are as follows:

(a) Memorandum and articles of association of the London and Counties Wholesale Meat Supply Association, Ltd.

(b) Proof sheet of a form of agreement between the food controller and the tenants of the Smithfield Market.

(c) Typewritten memorandum entitled "Distribution of Supplies of Dead Meat Through the Smithfield Control Board (Smithfield Market) to Retail Butchers in the London Metropoltan Police Area," signed by A. P. Twigg and dated September 6, 1918.

(These three documents are attached as Exhibit 18 and are marked "Ohsol's File, Smithfield Market Regulations.")

2. Office compilations and digests of regulations of the Governments of France and Great Britain of the food business including meat. (These office digests, which were prepared by the commission's special expert Dr. J. G. Ohsol, are in files Gov. 5 Fr. 5–G 5; and Gov. 5 Gr. 5–G 5; E 5, F 5, C 5, and are attached as Exhibit 19, being marked "Regulations by Foreign Governments, Office Digests and Compilations.")

(O) Published Report of Federal Trade Commission:

Reference is made to the following published reports of the Federal Trade Commission, which contain passages referring to the export trade in meats:

1. Summary of report of Federal Trade Commission on meat-packing industry, July 3, 1918.

Pages 5 and 6 of the letter of submittal of this report contain a paragraph concerning the international activities of large American meat packers in its bearing on the regard in which the American people is held in international comity.

Other references are pages 12–13, foreign interests, and 33–35, the international meat pool (see below).

(This report is attached as Exhibit 20, passages referred to being marked.)

2. Report of Federal Trade Commission on meat-packing industry, part 2, 1918.

In this are found references to the British seizures and conditions affecting the export trade of Sulzberger & Sons Co. (pp. 176–177, 181, 190–191, 193).

In this volume also is a discussion of the international meat pool, which presumably has at least an indirect bearing on the exports of meats from this country (pp. 99–107). The basis of this discussion is principally found in the so-called "Black book" of Germon Sulzberger, which is printed as Exhibit I (A) and (B) (pp. 213–247). In addition to passages in this exhibit concerning the international meat pool, the following pages have reference, apparently, directly to export trade from the United States: Pages 216, 221, 222, and 227.

(This volume is attached as Exhibit 21, passages referred to being marked.)

3. Report of the Federal Trade Commission on cooperation in American export trade, part 1, summary and report, and part 2, exhibits.

The report, in addition to its general features, contains the following matter with specific reference to the meat industry:

(a) Part 2, pages 92–94, notes from Commercial Attaché A. H. Baldwin on "Informal Combination in South American Meat Trade."

(b) Part 2, pages 178–179, special report of Vice Consul in Charge John S. Calvert, Buenos Aires, Agentina, December 8, 1915, on the "Meat Industry."

(c) Part 2, page 419, regarding combination of foreign buyers of meat products.

(The two volumes of this report are marked "Exhibit 22.")

I may add that in addition to the foregoing data the commission has voluminous letters, documents, and papers on the foreign slaughtering companies of American packers in South America, Australia, and Canada, which export from the countries of their location to other countries, but which are not directly connected with the export trade from the United States. As this subject is only indirectly connected with the export trade from the United States, these documents have not been furnished.

However, the essential substance of material on this subject is digested in chapter 4 of part 1 of the commission's report on the meat-packing industry, which was released on July 11 and is now being printed and bound at the Government Printing Office and will be available within a few days.

The foregoing correspondence and the documents annexed hereto, under schedule, are the result of a thorough draft upon the records of the commission, and are sent in volume to meet the sweeping specifications of the Senate's inquiry. They do not reveal the derelictions on the part of the commission or the commissioners which might be implied in a reading of the resolution or taken as indicated in the debate at the time of its adoption. The largest meat packers have not availed themselves of the law permitting combination for exportation. Whether they suffered from their neglect to avail themselves of the legal right of concerted action in export or whether their degree of domestic accord made such neglect appear desirable to them, it is assumed that the inquiry of the Senate does not call for an expression from the commission on that point.

Respectfully submitted.

VICTOR MURDOCK,
Acting Chairman.

To the SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, a motion was made by the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] to have the report referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I think that should be taken up at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood that it was simply a request of the Senator from Iowa; that it will not take a motion, but the report will simply be referred to that committee without objection.

Mr. POMERENE. I thought it was in the form of a motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the report and documents accompanying it will be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

FOREIGN FINANCE CORPORATION.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, under the rule I desire to make a motion to take from the calendar for consideration the bill (S. 2472) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act.

I will preface my remarks by stating that I have no intention of pressing the bill at this time. I should like, however, to have it made the unfinished business, because it is of great importance. The bill, as Senators generally recognize, is a bill termed the export financing bill, prepared by the Federal Reserve Board and, of course, with their entire approval and with the approval of the chairman of the War Finance Corporation. In my judgment it will help solve one of the really big problems that this Congress has been convened to solve.

I ask permission to read extracts from a letter received only this morning. Hundreds of letters come to me, because I introduced the bill, I suppose, from manufacturers and producers all over the country, urging action. This morning I received a letter from the president of the American Manufacturers' Export Association, representing over 1,000 of the average-sized manufacturing industries of the country, not the large trusts, so called, but the smaller manufacturing industries, in which he says:

> I feel constrained to write you regarding your bill, now in the Senate, to provide for a foreign finance corporation as a means of organizing under Government supervision the credit resources of this country, so urgent for the financing of European industries.
>
> The question is not whether this country should help to finance the industries of Europe; that is self-evident. The only thing to be decided is the wisest and sanest method by which this can be accomplished.
>
> If Europe's industries languish for lack of financing, we shall as a Nation lose our best customer, and, what is worse, we shall witness a period of unrest and disorder more serious than the world has ever known.
>
> To finance Europe now is to take out insurance for our own prosperity and tranquillity.
>
> It is, therefore, with great satisfaction that manufacturers of the country, and particularly the exporting manufacturers who are brought into constant contact with the European situation, have watched the progress of the plans put forward by bankers and legislators to meet this problem.
>
> The bill introduced by you in the Senate providing for a foreign finance corporation offers the necessary Government supervision for the organization of our national credit resources. It is evident that the bankers of this country realize their responsibility.
>
> The manufacturer is not in a position to pass upon details, but only on the necessity. His word to bankers and legislators alike is "hurry."
>
> Manufacturers exporting to Europe are discovering that there are immediate needs which they are supplying to those who now have funds and are able to find others who can buy from them at a profit. The manufacturer realizes, however, that the cream is being rapidly skimmed and that behind the present flood of orders there is no substantial ability to keep buying.
> The critical period is at hand when the artificial post-war stimulus will cease and Europe will stop buying even necessities.
> The need, therefore, is urgent for immediate action by Congress and by bankers to tide over this critical period until Europe can get going once more.

This bill, as I hope Senators understand, does not in any way provide for Government underwriting or Government guaranties of any kind. It provides simply that the Federal Reserve Board shall supervise the operations of corporations incorporated under it.

I do not know what we are going to do with the merchant marine of which we are all so proud. A few days ago I read in the newspapers that we are going to build two 50,000-ton ships. We are delighted and proud to see the merchant marine being developed, but it would be of very little use to America if the exporters and manufacturers can not be paid for goods for which they now have orders to export in the merchant marine. It is absolutely essential for us to first solve the financial question before we talk and think about additional tonnage. We have to loan abroad, as we know perfectly well. We have already loaned $9,000,000,000 abroad. We have raised that through some form of taxation. It is generally recognized that we must loan perhaps two billion or three billion dollars more, both from the humanitarian standpoint and from the standpoint of stabilizing the business of the world. Is it better to loan that from this country by the same method of taxation of some kind, or is it better to try to stabilize business so that our manufacturers and producers can make a profit while they are sending goods abroad, and thus greatly equalize the financial condition between the two countries? In other words, it is very much better for us to furnish goods than to furnish cash. When we furnish goods we make a profit. When we furnish cash we charge our citizens, of course, in one form or another in order to raise it.

The present rate of exchange is practically prohibitive. The orders that are being received by our exporters are very large right now, but are simply the necessary orders for food and raw material which must be sent over there, but it is soon going to sag, because the Frenchman is not going to pay $1.40 for a dollar's worth of American goods; neither is the Englishman going to pay $4.29 or $4.30, on the basis of the last quotation of exchange which I noticed, for a pound sterling. It is a simple business proposition.

I know there may be some difference of opinion as to the method to pursue. I think we all admit that the problem is here, and the problem must be solved.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. EDGE. I simply want to get the bill before the Senate so we can have an interchange of views and endeavor to pass something to meet this situation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. EDGE. Certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator from New Jersey if he considers this a banking bill or a bill which deals not only with securities but with trade in general?

Mr. EDGE. It is a bill which deals with both. It is a bill that I perhaps can illustrate better by pointing to our own banking institutions from the domestic standpoint. If we do a domestic business, and wish to get a loan, of course we go to our bank, putting up some satisfactory security. We find the same situation, only on a very much larger scope, necessarily facing our producers and manufacturers in their business abroad. They can get security but they can not get cash. This bill provides for incorporation under the supervision of the Government. At the present time there is no such supervision. At the present time investment brokers can loan money abroad and do anything they want without any supervision.

Mr. GRONNA. Is it not the idea that under the provisions of this bill, if it is not amended, it would give power and authority to this commercial organization—I call it a commercial organization because it is not a banking organization; it is in no sense a banking bill—to issue debentures, to issue bonds, based upon securities of foreign Governments or upon the securities of people of our own country, and practically transact business the same as the Government of the United States is now transacting?

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, the bill provides that the ordinary banking facilities are permitted to such a corporation. I assume that the only way we can balance the tremendous credit balance now in our favor, and which is working against us naturally from a commercial standpoint, is to get securities from abroad covering what we sell, be they Government securities or be they mortgages on plants or whatever they may be. We get them in exchange for goods. The corporation naturally issue debentures or bonds on such foreign credits and sell them to the American public. That is the way they realize the cash. That is an ordinary banking corporation.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, if I do not disturb the Senator, will he point out anywhere in the bill the provision where it will be possible to regulate foreign exchange?

Mr. EDGE. There is no way to regulate foreign exchange that I know of. I do not claim to be a financial student, except in a moderate way. There is only one way to do that, and that is through supply and demand, the equalization of debits and credits between the nations.

Mr. GRONNA. Is it not true that the regulation of foreign exchange is simply incidental, and that that is not really the purpose of the bill?

Mr. EDGE. That is true; but the fact exists, because of the prohibitive foreign exchange, that an American dollar is worth just what I quoted a few moments ago, making it very expensive for the foreign buyer to buy American goods, because it costs him so much to pay for them. It is a perfectly clear proposition.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. EDGE. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. This morning I gave notice that at the conclusion of the address of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] I would move to take up what is known as the bill for the repeal of the daylight-saving law. I discovered afterwards that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] had arranged to speak upon the subject of the league of nations, and that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] expected to follow him. I did not want to interfere with those addresses, but I had hoped to call that bill to the attention of the Senate and have it taken up for consideration and thus become the unfinished business, not expecting to ask for a vote upon it this afternoon, but hoping that I would be able to secure a vote some time to-morrow or the next day.

I recognize the overpowering importance of the league of nations, and I do not want to interfere with those who are prepared to make speeches upon that subject; but I do not want any other business to come in ahead of this very important measure.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. EDGE. I should like first to make a brief statement.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not opposing the measure of the Senator from New Jersey, for I have not studied it at all; I do not know what it is; but I thought it was only fair to suggest to him, before he had finished what he had to say upon the subject, that I intend at the first moment I can get the attention of the Chair in my own right to move to take up for consideration the bill to repeal the daylight-saving law.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, perhaps I can make a suggestion that will meet the view of the Senator from Iowa, and still permit the bill to which I have referred to become the unfinished business, if I understand the rules correctly.

The Senator from Iowa, I think, understands my position, for I have already taken the matter up verbally with him, saying that I would wait until he moved consideration of the daylight-saving bill in order not to interfere with him, so that I am in entire accord with him, but it just happens that it is necessary for me to leave the Capital to-night to be gone for several days, and I felt this bill was of extreme importance. I do not want to take advantage of anyone, but I desire the bill to become the unfinished business so that all those Senators who wish to consider it may realize that it is in that position. They would naturally consider it in the interim, and be prepared to offer amendments, and to discuss it so that we might have a full interchange of views.

We have the problem with us, and we must solve it. Perhaps this is not the best method to solve it, but it is certainly a step in the direction that will help solve it. I desire to read just one paragraph from the letter of Gov. Harding, of the Federal Reserve Board, to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency:

> With these slight changes the Federal Reserve Board earnestly indorses the proposed bill and suggests that its enactment is even more essential at this time than when its adoption was first recommended by the board. The board knows no one way in which the present European credit situation may be more effectively dealt with than by the incorporation of institutions of the kinds provided for in this bill, and anything that betters that situation assists not merely in the gigantic task of reconstruction in Europe, but also in providing a market for our own exports and in developing our foreign commerce in a most effective and satisfactory way.
> Very truly, yours,
>
> W. P. H. HARDING, Governor.

Is it not possible under the rules, if this bill could be made the unfinished business, that, on motion of the Senator from Utah—I intended to leave it in his hands while compelled to be away—it might to-morrow be laid aside, and the daylight-saving repeal bill be considered?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, there are several Senators who desire to vote upon the daylight-saving bill who are compelled to leave the city to-morrow or very soon thereafter, and I shall feel constrained to ask the Senate to-morrow to consider that bill, so I do not want any measure to precede it in being made the unfinished business. Just the moment it is disposed of the Senator from New Jersey will have an opportunity to move the consideration of his bill, and if the Senate sees fit to agree, it may be made the unfinished business; but I think that I have fairly established a clear priority in so far as notice of my intention can establish precedence.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. EDGE. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire simply to suggest to the Senator from New Jersey that, this being a Senate bill and the House of Representatives adjourning day after to-morrow, it would not delay the passage of the bill by allowing it to go over until the Senator returns.

Mr. EDGE. I appreciate that; but if we conducted all our business on the assumption that we were not going to do anything until the other House resumed its sessions we should simply congest our own calendar of bills and waste valuable time.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that there is no disposition of which I know on the part of any Senator in the Chamber to keep the bill from being considered, and I shall be very glad to assist the Senator in any way I can to make it the unfinished business.

Mr. EDGE. I ask if the suggestion I have made is not, under the rules, the usual thing to do?

Mr. SMOOT. Under the rules, if made the unfinished business, it would require unanimous consent to lay the bill aside, and if one Senator objected the only thing that could be done would be to proceed with the consideration of the bill or else for a Senator to make a motion to take up another bill, which would displace it as the unfinished business.

Mr. EDGE. The Senator from New Jersey introducing the bill being absent from the Chamber, I can not imagine that the bill would be taken up.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator asked me a question, and I have stated to him what the rule provides, namely, that if the bill is the unfinished business at 2 o'clock to-morrow it is automatically placed before the Senate at that time. Then, if any Senator asks that it be temporarily laid aside, it can only be done by unanimous consent. There may be some Senator who would object to its being laid aside; then the Senate would have to proceed with the consideration of the bill or else some Senator would have to move to take up another bill, which would displace the Senator's bill as the unfinished business.

Mr. EDGE. I have no desire to be anything but courteous to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], as I demonstrated in discussing this matter with him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. EDGE. Just a moment. I desire to finish the observation I was making, and then I will yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey declines to yield at present.

Mr. EDGE. I desire to finish the remark I was making, and then I will yield. I wish the Senator from Iowa thoroughly to understand that I have no disposition in the action I have sought to take in any way to precede the daylight-saving repeal bill, and if he feels, under the explanation of the Senator from Utah, in view of my absence and the fact that unanimous consent is required, as I understand, under the rules, that there is a possibility that some one would object, the introducer of the bill being out of the Chamber—which I can not for one moment imagine—I shall not press the motion; but I have at least, I hope, accomplished the main object, and that is to draw the attention of the Senate to the extreme importance of action on a measure designed to accomplish what this measure is designed to accomplish. I will now give notice that on my return I shall again renew the motion to make the bill the unfinished business, so that it may be considered by the Senate at the earliest possible moment. We must do something to solve this question; we must do something to help our own business men.

If I may take a moment longer, this is not a bill designed to help the large business organizations of this country, because they do not need help. That is obvious. The big concerns, like the International Harvester Co., the United States Steel Corporation, and the Standard Oil Co., have had their export departments for years; they have had their sales organizations covering probably every country in the world where they can do a profitable business. The bill is designed to aid the small manufacturer whom Congress tried to help a year or two ago when it enacted the Webb Act, which permitted them to combine in order to enter the foreign field. Congress then certainly indorsed the policy of trying to help American business men in their export business. Now comes along the proposal to have American banks help finance their business which they can not finance unless they have some combination of capital of this character. If there is a better way that can be devised, let us have it, but let us face this question, for it is a very important one, and try to bring about a solution of the problem.

To demonstrate the feeling among small manufacturers throughout the country as to the necessity of the proposed legislation to which I have referred, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD extracts from a few letters that I will send to the desk. I will read just one paragraph from the letter of a small manufacturer of agricultural machinery employing 200 hands—hardly in the class of a trust. Speaking of the bill, he writes as follows:

This is particularly interesting and pertinent to us at this time, as the writer has been laboring with a proposition made us through the Roumanian Government to furnish them agricultural machinery, for which they would give us in exchange their three-year bonds. After considerable effort to handle these bonds through our bankers or to get any indorsement of them by the Government, we have been obliged to decline the business.

That is simply an example of what our business men are encountering.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from New Jersey will be complied with. The Chair hears no objection.

The letters referred to are as follows:

GRENLOCH, N. J., June 24, 1919.

Senator WALTER E. EDGE,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: We note with very much interest announcement in this morning's Philadelphia Public Ledger in regard to the bill which you propose to introduce in the Senate respecting the financing of foreign countries in making purchases in the United States.

This is particularly interesting and pertinent to us at this time, as the writer has been laboring with a proposition made us through the Roumanian Government to furnish them agricultural machinery, for which they would give us in exchange their three-year bonds. After considerable effort to handle these bonds through our bankers or to get any indorsement of them by the Government, we have been obliged to decline the business.

From the report of the representative of the Roumanian Government the fact that we have been unable to finance them is very sad, indeed, as the people in that country are undoubtedly very much in need of machinery with which to produce crops for their own sustenance. The need is so great because it is impractical to do the plowing and cultivating with a "crooked stick."

We have also had some Russian business offered us which undoubtedly we will lose because of their inability to finance it by paying us cash, which is the only basis on which we feel we are safe in accepting the business at this time.

We sincerely trust that something real and tangible will grow out of your efforts to develop a bill which would finance especially those countries which are so much in need of help. We feel there is nothing so important at the present hour to the commercial interests of this country and the financial interest of the war-davastated countries as this very effort which you are making, inasmuch as it is most fundamental in that we are helping them to help themselves.

All praise to you and best wishes for successful culmination of your efforts.

Very truly, yours,

BATEMAN MANUFACTURING CO.,
FRED H. BATEMAN,
Vice President and General Manager.

THE GASTINE CO.,
Bridgeton, N. J., June 26, 1919.

Hon. Senator EDGE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We note in the New York Commercial of the bill you have introduced in the Senate for the protection of American exporters, by not helping financially any nation who have placed embargoes on American importers.

We wish to cite an instance of a distributer of ours in Rome, Italy, who, before the war, ordered Gastine quite regularly, and for the past six months he has tried and tried repeatedly to obtain an import permit from the authorities, and they have refused him in every instance, even notwithstanding the fact that our product will help rejuvenate low grades of gasoline, and which they can use economically.

The same thing applies to a distributer in France, in the city of Paris. He has been trying time and time again to import Gastine. We even understand that he has some orders that he would like to fill. They will not allow him to send any money nor will they give him an import permit. We do certainly thank you, and assure you that your efforts are appreciated.

The writer feels that he almost knows you, inasmuch as he used to see you every day last summer, from June 20 to June 29, as he was at Sea Girt, N. J., and is a member of Company D, First Battalion, New Jersey State Militia.

Yours, very truly,

THE GASTINE CO.,
I. W. GOLDBERG,
General Manager.

MOORESTOWN, N. J., July 25, 1919.

Hon. WALTER E. EDGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Permit me to thank you for your very prompt and courteous letter of July 22.

I also take this occasion to commend the bill which you lately introduced and wish it success. It would be a great help in developing American export business.

Again thanking you, I am
Very truly, yours,

J. S. STOKES.

AMERICAN FOREIGN BANKING CORPORATION,
New York, July 21, 1919.

Hon. WALTER E. EDGE,
United States Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR EDGE: We have procured a copy of Senate bill 2472, introduced by you on the 15th instant, which is of considerable interest to us. The American Foreign Banking Corporation is now incorporated under the laws of the State of New York, and most of its stock is owned by national banks located in the principal cities of the United States. We would probably wish to incorporate under the provisions of the proposed bill should it pass, as, other things being equal, it would seem preferable to have a Federal charter rather than a State charter. In view of the above, we would be pleased to have you inform us from time to time as to the status of this proposed legislation.

We remain, with sentiments of esteem,
Yours, very truly,

HAYDEN B. HARRIS,
Vice President.

LONDON, July 18, 1919.

Senator EDGE,
Senate Chamber, Washington.

London Daily Mail refers to bill you have introduced. It is imperative legislation be enacted promptly and American banks and industries support same, as each day's delay is working injury which will take months to right. Unless prompt action is taken without doubt foreign governments will be obliged to embargo against everything except vital amount foodstuffs and essential raw materials. Such injury to American trade will be difficult of remedy.

GEORGE GASTON.

NEW YORK, July 26, 1919.

Senator WALTER E. EDGE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR EDGE: We are very much interested in the foreign bank bill which you are putting through, and feel that some such plan will be of necessity and great assistance to firms in the United States desiring to do foreign business.

Could we ask you to kindly send us a copy of the bill either in its proposed form or in the form in which it finally passes?

With best wishes for the success of the bill and with our thanks for a copy,

We remain, very truly, yours,

KESTER BROS.,
R. L. KESTER, Jr.,
General Manager.

NEW YORK, July 30, 1919.

Senator EDGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We have recently noticed a measure introduced by you providing for the formation of a large company to provide capital to finance American exporters, and that the plan calls for backing by private capital.

Will you kindly favor us with a copy of the bill which you introduced, as we are very strongly interested in this movement, and as soon as we are more thoroughly familiar with it we shall be very glad to give you every possible support in the premises?

Respectfully, yours,

ASSOCIATED DRESS INDUSTRIES OF AMERICA,
DAVID N. MOSESSOHN, Executive Director.

[From letter of George McFadden, 121 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, to Senator EDGE.]

I quote you text of two cables received by us to-day from my partner, Mr. Thompson, who is visiting continental Europe, which cables set out the economic and financial situation at the present time in Czechoslovakia:

First. "It is simply wasting time trying to get these people in Czechoslovakia, Austria, Poland, furnish dollar credits, because they simply can not do it.

"The bordering neutrals can not do so either for reason already cabled you, and wired Breton same to Paris from Italy.

"They all must have raw materials to get started, and if they don't get them soon there will be trouble.

"You can not expect them to furnish dollar credits except by export, and they can not export unless they get raw materials.

"To pay for same at the present depreciated exchange would be ruinous.

"These liberated countries were most optimistic at first, as they counted on American financial assistance, but through our lack appreciation of conditions this optimism giving way to pessimism."

Second. "Czech spinners will need credit for about two years before their exports will be big enough for them to pay off dollar credit for cotton needed, though possibly certain percentage monthly commencing seventh month. Spinners meeting decided not to buy more than 20 per cent prewar consumption, amounting to about 120,000 bales."

Permit me again to express my thanks for your letter, and I remain,

Very respectfully, yours,

GEO. MCFADDEN.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I ask permission to insert in the RECORD, without reading, the statement which I made before the committee in connection with the bill offered by the Senator from New Jersey. I do not want to take any time in connection with it now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission will be granted. The Chair hears no objection.

The statement referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR ROBERT L. OWEN, OF OKLAHOMA.

Senator OWEN. Mr. Chairman and Senators, I regard the bill introduced by Senator EDGE (S. 2472), providing for an amendment of the Federal reserve act, as a proposed new section, section 25a, as a bill of primary, urgent, immediate importance, as I shall presently explain.

The bill authorizes corporations to be organized and managed, under the supervision of the Federal Reserve Board, to deal in international banking, with special powers. It will be of great service to our foreign commerce, will afford an important medium of placing European credits with the American investing public, and stabilizing foreign exchange, to the great benefit of American commerce.

Everyone who is at all familiar with international commerce and international exchange must have observed the steady going down of foreign exchanges with those countries who have been lately the great belligerents, such as Great Britain, France, Belgium, and Italy. The value of the pound sterling has fallen below $4.30 from $4.86, and yet I take it that no man in his sober senses has the slightest doubt about the solvency of the British Empire, or the ability of the British people to meet their obligations in due time under reasonable conditions.

The French exchange has gone from its normal of 5.18 down approximately to 7 francs for a dollar, instead of 5.18 francs for a dollar.

The Italian exchange has gone down still more, to a point where the lire, which is normally worth 5.18 lire to the dollar, is now down nearly to 9 lire to the dollar. The consequence is that any Italian merchant who attempts to buy dollars from the United States for the purpose of paying for cotton or steel or copper or any other of the raw materials required for the Italian markets, is compelled to pay nearly two dollars for one on top of the very high prices which have ensued in our country and in their own country by virtue of the expansion of the currency of the United States, and other conditions which have raised the prices in the United States.

It is therefore almost impossible and certainly very improvident for the Italian people to meet such a cost. It is impossible for the French and British to do so without a serious permanent loss. Therefore the authorities of Italy and France and Great Britain have interposed, quietly and unostentatiously, but as firmly as they could, obstacles to the purchase of American goods by Italian, French, and British importers under these conditions, hoping that the time would come when these exchanges might be adjusted so that these supplies from America coming from our surplus could be obtaained on a decent and fair basis.

This has not been accomplished. The mechanism is not provided. We have no adequate way in which to meet it. The banks are not able to do this, and they must not be requested or expected to do more than they can wisely do with the resources at their command. The New York banks now—for instance, the National City or the Guaranty Trust or the Irving National—are carrying as large an amount of these foreign bills as they can afford to carry, and unless there is a mechanism provided by which these foreign credits shall be sold to the American investing public there is no way available, on the scale required to rehabilitate Europe—and I estimate that scale at from four to seven billion dollars—to restore to Europe the raw materials, the machinery, the things which are required to put Europe again on the highly productive basis it occupied before the Great War.

Our banks are doing the best they can with it, as far as the purchase of these bills is concerned. Incidentally, of course, they are buying these bills at a rate which ultimately will or should net them a high profit, because the banks are merchants in credits. They buy and they sell credits. And it is not to be attributed to them as a reproach because they buy Italian lire at 9 for a dollar, or whatever price the market may fix, due to supply and demand.

But it is not the function of our great banking institutions to put the American dollar at par, or to keep it at par. That is not their business. Their business is to buy and sell bills. Their business is to get deposits. Their business is to lend money and to make money by the lending of money, and by the commissions which they earn from rendering service to commerce.

I have insisted before this committee and I have insisted before the Federal Reserve Board and before the President of the United States that a mechanism should be provided by which the American dollar could be put to par and kept at par, neither above par nor below par. During the war the American dollar, the gold dollar, in New York went to a discount of 60 per cent in Spain, and you could buy gold American dollars, payable in New York, subject, of course, to the temporary embargo, for 66 cents apiece in Spain. Does any man in his sound senses believe that the American dollar in New York, measured in gold, and subject to a temporary embargo, was worth only 66 cents? We know better.
